UMass defeats Rutgers twice over road trip

By Jackie Leroux
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team is all smiles after last weekend, when it extended its winning streak to five games with a doubleheader beating of Rutgers University. The Minutewomen traveled to Piscataway, N.J. to take on the Lady Knights, and put in two praiseworthy performances that had the whole team and their coach grinning from ear to ear.

UMass won the first game 5–3. After Rutgers scored with two unearned runs in the second, UMass tied the game with RBI singles from Tracy Osier and senior Stephanie Mareina in the top of the third. Osier put in a bases loaded two–RBI single in the fourth, along with an RBI single from sophomore Becky George to put UMass up 5–2. The Lady Knights would manage to score only once more in the game, with a run in the fifth inning.

Junior pitcher Liz Wagner held her own on the mound for UMass, allowing six hits and three runs, one earned.

The play of the Minutewomen has been on the rise in the past week, and it was capped off Saturday with a pair of grand slams from juniors Kelly Buckley and Kim Gutridge. Head Coach Elaine Sortino is more than pleased with her team's performance.

"Things are really starting to pick up, we're getting a lot better. The kids are showing a lot of teeth, they're smiling a lot," she said.

Gutridge's big hit came in the top of the third. With the bases loaded and UMass up by one, Gutridge sent the ball flying over right field, and upped the score to 5-0. Buckley cleared the bases in the sixth inning, with her first home run of the year, sending the score to 10–1, and ending the game for the Lady Knights.

This is only the eighth time in UMass history that the Minutewomen have hit two homers in one game. The last time it happened was March 31, 1996, when Amy Powell hit two against Long Island University.

Sophomore Danielle Henderson took over the pitching in the second game. The A–10 Pitcher of the Week struck out seven players, gave up only one run on one walk, and seven hits. This is the second week in a row Henderson has been named Pitcher of the Week, as she has gone the distance in her last 11 starts.

The Minutewomen now stand at 12–15, and seem to be well out of the slump they were in earlier this season.

"Their hitting is better, but we still need to work on defense. Our defense needs to get tighter and tighter," coach Sortino said.

Softball team turns it around

It's finally starting to feel like spring for the Massachusetts softball team. After a cold, unfriendly start to their season left them reeling with a 7–15 mark, head coach Elaine Sortino and the Minutewomen are beginning to smell the roses and are coming together of late, posting five straight wins over the past week.

Today at 3 p.m. at Totman Field, UMass (12–15) will look to extend this

Minutemen lose 2nd straight; fall to Dayton

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

In the second game of Sunday's doubleheader against Dayton, the Massachusetts baseball team only let up five hits, but couldn't get the bats hot, and lost 4–0.

Yesterday afternoon, UMass resurrected themselves at the plate, banging out 12 runs on 11 hits, including five home runs.

But this time, it was the pitching that couldn't get hot.

In the rubber match of a three game series with the Flyers, Dayton ripped into UMass pitching all day, and beat the Minutemen 19–12 at Earl E. Lorden Field.

Dayton shortstop Brian Schwade went 4–for–6 with five RBIs, including a three–run triple in the fifth to lead the Flyers. Mike Boub pitched seven innings of relief to pick up the win for Dayton, who improve to 9–18, and 4–2 in the A– 10. UMass has now lost two straight, and fall to 3–5 in Atlantic–10 play.

"We just weren't sharp [today]," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We didn't make good pitches when we had to, we didn't make the plays we had to make. [But] it's not the end of the world... We just have to bounce back."

Dayton put the game out of reach with a six run seventh inning, breaking open a 10–10 ballgame. The Flyers put runners on first and second thanks to two UMass errors, and Schwade dropped an infield single between UMass third baseman Adam Correa and pitcher Travis Veracka, loading the bases. After inducing an infield fly from Dayton clean– up hitter Collin Abels, Veracka then surrendered a two run single to make it 12–10 Flyers. Dayton put another run on the board with a single, and third baseman Dave Greewe cleared the bases with a towering three run shot that gave the Flyers a six run cushion.

Veracka (1–1) took the loss for the Minutemen, his first of the year, after letting up five runs in 1 2/3 innings. Junior right hander Scott Barnsby started the game, and settled down after letting up four runs in the first inning. But Barnsby let up four more runs in the fifth, and left for the left–handed Veracka with the bases loaded and two outs.

"We scored 12 runs, and usually that's enough to win," UMass second baseman Muchie Dagliere said. "[But] their bats were hot today."

The Minutemen jumped on Dayton starter John Bishop for eight runs in two–plus innings of work, and led 8–4 after three. They touched up Boub for four runs and six hits in seven innings, but could only manage two runs from the seventh on. Dayton scored nine runs in the final three innings.

Massachusetts continued a season–long torrid pace at the plate yesterday. Right fielder Pete Gautreau hit two home runs, and three run homers from senior first baseman David Giglio and Brian Samela gave UMass the early lead. Giglio's homer, his first of the year, was a 435–foot blast over the center field bleachers, and Dagliere hit one almost as far later in the inning, dropping one on the hill right below the Mullins Center practice rink.

The Minutemen have two more games at home this week. Tomorrow, they face Providence, and Central Connecticut visits on Wednesday. Both games are 3:00 p.m. starts.

Muchie Dagliere went 2–for–4 with a home run and two RBIs, but it wasn't enough for UMass, who ended up losing to Dayton 19–12.

Men's track crushes Boston College

By Matthew Perrault
Collegian Staff

Spring fever is capturing all of us, including the Massachusetts men's track and field team.

The Minutemen went into Saturday's meet with Boston College at Llewelyn Derby Track with high hopes and came out smelling like a rose, with a 103–48 victory.

BC came out like a shot, winning the first four events. The Eagles were looking to ride their All–American twin brothers to victory. The McGeherty brothers, Mark and Sean, finished first and second in the NCAA hammer throw in 1996 and were supposed to do damage to the UMass throwers.

Freshmen Victor Morency, realizing that he needed to have a big day, came up huge for the Minutemen, winning the Javelin (57.92) and the discus (46.9m).

"To have a freshmen step up and show his mettle like that was extraordinary. Our throwers really got us going after a slow start and were the cornerstone of the meet," UMass Coach Ken O'Brien said.

The Minutemen then got into a grove in the running events. Sophomore Tom Toye became the other star of the meet, taking first place in the 100 (11.0) and 200 (21.8) meter dashes and ran the opening leg of winning 4x100 relay with a time of 41.9.

Other members of the winning 4x100 were Senior Co– Captain Christian Abbott, Sophmore Neil Conception, and Sophmore Eugene LaFlamme.

The four combined to run a time that tied a 15–year–old mark for the third–fastest in school history.

Sophmore Albie Vasquez won the pole vault with a height of 4.05 meters.

"We thought B.C. was good but we did better. Winning by 50 points was unexpected" Vasquez said.

Men's Lax to face UNH; Final game vs. Wildcats

By Jeremy R. Adams
Collegian Staff

Today is the first day of the rest of the season.

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, at 4–3 and ranked No. 12 in the nation, entertains New Hampshire today at Richard F. Garber Field. The Minutemen will embark on the last six games of their regular season with the necessary ferocious attitude of a team scorned.

"I think we have the mentality, I think we're going to be ready to play, but we've got to go out on the field and prove it," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

The Minutemen are coming off an 8–7, double overtime loss to the No. 3 Duke Blue Devils in Durham, N.C. The focus now shifts to a different team from a different Durham, the Wildcats, whose program is in its last year of existence, and who are battling to avoid heading in the opposite direction of the Blue Devils.

"They're going to come out hard against us," Cannella said. "It's a long lasting New England rivalry and we hate to see it end."

The Massachusetts–New Hampshire rivalry is one of the oldest in New England, dating back to the last game of the second year of UMass lacrosse. The Wildcats defeated the Minutemen 11–1 in 1955, and won the annual meeting every year until Massachusetts finally beat UNH in 1963, just 6–5.

The all–time series now stands at 29–12 in UMass' favor, including a stretch from 1966–1982 when the Minutemen were undefeated against the Wildcats. The demise of the program will be only a minor distraction for the Minutemen, who realize the importance of winning the 30th game of the series, not for all–times sake, but for the survival of their NCAA tournament hopes.

"Every game is big, our guys have got to realize that," Cannella said. "We're one of the biggest games on their schedule and they're going to be ready for us."

Because of their inability to recruit top caliber players, the make–up of the Wildcats is heavily laden with experience.

"They have a lot of experience, a lot of guys on the team are seniors," Cannella said.

Senior Dave Hanchett has racked up 122 career points, 74 goals and 48 assists, and has picked up seven goals and six assists in his six starts this season for the 1–5 Wildcats. Chris Bromby, also a senior, is leading the team this season with 13 goals and eight assists. Mike Szweda is the top scoring underclassman, with his nine goals and three assists, while starting just two games.

UMASS v. UNH

The struggling Wildcats have lost two games to opponents that they have in common with the Minutemen, 9–7 to Hartford and 10–3 to Hofstra. Massachusetts lost to Hofstra during spring break in double overtime, and beat Hartford 7– 4 in the second game of the season.

Both Massachusetts and Harrford (with whom Cannella says the Wildcats matched up well) play slower, defensive styles than Hofstra. The UMass coach does not anticipate too many changes to his team's style of play any time soon.

"I think we are a team that has to stay within the game plan that we have chosen for each particular game," Cannella said. "On the whole that's the way we play, we play very conservatively on offense and on defense. We're not going to change that too much no matter who we play."

UMass finishes up year; One of best seasons ever

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's gymnastics team had an incredible season. In fact, you could say it was their best season yet. For the first time ever, they had a meet in the Mullins Center, a great sign that the program is getting stronger and gaining national recognition. They had a superb home stretch, where they won every meet in front of cheering fans. Their overall record was impressive as well, 14-4.

WOMEN'S GYM
SEASON IN REVIEW

For their second consecutive year, the Minutewomen walked away as Atlantic 10 Champions, winning four out of five events. The UMass gymnasts proved to everyone this year that they are a great team, and only getting better.

Last Saturday was the end of this remarkable season, when they took fourth place at the NCAA Northeast Regionals. Their competitive season came to a close in the parking lot of a 7-11, with coach Dave Kuzara buying them all (and even myself) Slurpees, all the while telling his team how proud he was of them.

The Minutewomen certainly do have many reasons to be proud of this meet.

"We hit 23 out of 24 routines two years in a row now, we haven't counted a fall," Kuzara said. "We have work to do, obviously, to get better, to get more difficulty, but I can't ask more... I can't say enough about my athletes."

To begin the meet, the Minutewomen were missing two athletes who consistently did bars routines. They needed to fill the gap that was left, and they did so with little problem. Sara Kelly was the first woman to compete for UMass, and she did so with flair, giving her team a 9.0 to start the evening off right.

"I thought if we could get a 9.0 out of the first two routines, I would be thrilled out of my mind. And when Sara came up with a 9.0, I was set," Kuzara said. "I thought Lianne [Laing] did a great routine that should have been scored two-tenths higher, but what happens is, the first three routines are at a little bit lower level, and it costs the last three routines."

And that it did. Tara Swartz, who is the Atlantic 10 bars champion, received at least a 9.90 throughout most of the season, often tying her own school record of 9.950. But her performance at regionals, which was as strong as it has been all season, only received a 9.75. She finished 12th overall in the all–around with a 38.125 and 14th on the uneven bars.

Kuzara said that he felt there was a definite judging error on bars.

"I thought we were about a point

Women's track grabs 2nd at UConn

By Greg Thurell
Collegian Corespondent

The Massachusetts women's track and field team placed second behind Connecticut in a six–team field on Saturday at the University of Connecticut sports complex.

Connecticut led the way with 180 points, with the Minutewomen following with 128 and Rhode Island close behind at 123. SUNY Albany, Providence College and Central Connecticut rounded out the field.

The strong showing was all the more impressive considering the fact that key contributors were on the shelf for this meet, including juniors Rebecca Donaghue (heel) and Silifa Kenku (hamstring) and senior tri–captain Molly Dunlap (Achilles tendon). These are the latest in a long list of injuries that have haunted the Minutewomen from the beginning of the indoor season.

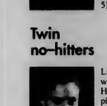
"Overall, the kids did really well," Coach Julie LaFreniere said.

The Minutewomen took first in three events on the day. Sophomore Melanie Bell won the long jump with a jump of 17'10.25". Then, in the 400 meters, the Minutewomen got a 1–2–3 sweep, with sophomore Michelle Cooper taking first at 59.75 seconds closely followed by freshmen teammates Mary Eaton and Yves Amazan. In one of the most impressive performances of the day, the 4x100 meter relay team, featuring junior Emma Gardner, and sophomores Melanie Bell, Raquell Shelton and Shelanda Irish won with a blazing time of 47.23 seconds, second fastest in UMass history.

"They were fantastic," LaFreniere said. "They still can clean it up a little and most likely will break 47 seconds this year, barring injury".

This team cut about 1.5 seconds off its time from last week in Raleigh, N.C. at the Raleigh Relays.

The throw events featured some solid performances against an extremely strong field. Senior Stephanie Townson took fourth in the shot put and discus, and sixth in the hammer throw. Junior Shana Mitchell took fourth in the hammer and sixth in the discus. Both throwers were close to personal bests, with Townson setting one in the discus at 129' 5".



Two runners also qualified for the New England Championships during this meet. Junior Christy Martin ran a 4:46.22 in the 1500 meters and

Israel's ongoing battle over residency rights

JERUSALEM (AP) — Away from the bulldozers and stone-throwing, another battle for Jerusalem is under way.

Palestinians and Israeli human rights groups charge that Israel is quietly and deliberately revoking residency rights of Palestinians who live in Jerusalem in order to strengthen its grip on the disputed city.

The policy is not new. Palestinians who don't become Israeli citizens and who move ouside the city — even to the West Bank — can lose their residency permits, which means they cannot legally return to live in Jerusalem.

Only now, the groups say, the Israeli government is enforcing the policy with new vigor. Palestinians returning after living elsewhere have been notified that their permits have expired and they have 15 days to get out.

"The idea is simple," Yuval Ginbar of the Israeli group Betselem said Monday. "Israel will do anything to make Palestinians leave Jerusalem."

Betselem and Hamoked, another Israeli human rights group, issued a report Monday accusing Israel of revoking the rights of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of Palestinians to live in Jerusalem during the past 18 months. Betselem's Yael Stein said the policy was part of the government's goal to "decrease the number of Palestinians and increase the number of Jews living in the city."

Illinois courthouse attacked by bomber

URBANA, Ill. (AP) — With little security to stop him, a hooded man walked into court yesterday and hurled a firebomb that bounced off a judge's head and ignited a blaze that gutted the room but caused no serious injuries.

The man fled after the attack, which came during testimony in a medical malpractice case.

Three people were slightly hurt as jurors and others in the courtroom rushed toward the only exit, and Circuit Judge George Miller suffered a cut on the scalp when he was hit by the flaming, fuel-filled bottle.

"It was obvious that he was pretty much aiming it at the judge and trying to hurt the judge," said juror Abra Borrelli.

"He didn't say a word," said another juror, David Chambers. "He came in, looked around, grabbed the bottle out, lit it and then threw it. I looked back, and the judge's bench was on fire, and it went up the back wall of the courtroom."

Workers at the Champaign County Courthouse detained a man in a black, hooded sweatshirt shortly after the firebombing in the third-floor courtroom. But after he was shown to witnesses, investigators decided he was not the man who lit the rag-filled bottle containing an amber liquid.

Rosenberg son speaks at UM; recounts effects of childhood

Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

The youngest son of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg spoke yesterday in the Campus Center about growing up in the wake of his parents' execution and how those crucial events contributed to the development of his current charitable efforts.

Robert Meeropol, whose parents were executed for conspiracy to commit espionage in 1953, spoke willingly about memories of his childhood, his charitable foundation and what he sees as the innocence of his parents — a belief he has held throughout his life and which was substantiated by an ex–KGB agent last month. Meeropol did not comment specifically on the man's statements.

"When I was three years old, my parents were arrested and charged with being master spies for the Soviet Union, more specifically, for stealing the secret of the atomic bomb," Meeropol began. "When I was six, they were executed."

Meeropol is inspired by his parents' resistance to give in to the government despite constant threats to lock away their two sons.

"From the moment of their arrest they were given a choice: they were told to cooperate, name names, say what we want you to say, and if you do that your lives will be spared -- and that they were killed," Meeropol said. "From the very beginning, my brother and I were used as tools to extort cooperation from my parents."

Because of the Red Scare of the 1950s, his relatives were hesitant to take the children into their homes, and as a result the boys were shuffled around New York and New Jersey until they were adopted by Abel Meeropol, a Hollywood musician blacklisted because he was communist, and his wife Ann.

The Meeropols were not wealthy, but through the generosity of others, Meeropol and his brother were able to live a relatively normal life.

"There were so many people who went out of their way when I was a child to help me out," Meeropol said. "One of the things that my parents' attorney did... he traveled around the country and raised a trust fund on our behalf."

As a result, the brothers were able to attend a number of special camps and schools where they were supported and not singled out because of what happened to his parents.

Meeropol explained that in the 1970s, through the Freedom of Information Act, he and his brother were involved in a number of lawsuits, and expected to receive a number of settlements. The Rosenberg Fund for Children was how they planned on spending that money.

"We didn't win all that money, but the idea of paying

Provost candidate visits UM; Winer speaks with students, issues of access discussed

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

Provost Candidate Jane Winer assured students at a meeting last night that if appointed, she would address issues of access to the University of Massachusetts for disabled students.

"I do not think there would be any choice," Winer said. "It is against the law."

Winer met with a handful of students for 45 minutes last night at Memorial Hall, speaking briefly about her experiences as Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at Texas Tech University before answering the students' questions.

Winer is the third candidate for the provost position to interview at UMass. The provost position is generally considered the second most important administrative role on campus, overseeing all academic departments and budgets.

The meeting began with an introduction by Ashavan Doyan, a junior Soviet and East European Studies major and one of two undergraduate student members of the Provost Search Committee.

Winer quickly proceeded to discuss her priorities as a dean at Texas Tech.

"I have been Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the largest college at Texas Tech, for almost six years," Winer said. "In terms of being a dean, it has been important to improve the quality and the quantity of advising for undergraduate students in my college."

Junior microbiology major Nancy Verma questioned Winer on how she would allocate funds if she were to become provost at UMass.

"I think it is important to consult the experts," Winer said. "The faculty, students and staff are the experts. They know how the money should be spent."

When Verma asked for elaboration, Winer replied, "This University has the same general missions as my University: teaching, research and service."

Winer said that anything that does not fall into one of those categories "need not" be included in the University budget.

Continuing Education student Jennifer Restle stated that she felt there were many violations of disabled students' rights occurring at UMass, and asked Winer what she would do about those issues if she were provost.

"There is a need for an educational program to bring those errant faculty into a better sense of reality," Winer said.

Winer stated that at Texas Tech, faculty members are required to distribute a statement of disabled students' rights on the first day of class each semester.

"There is a clear and repeated message every year," Winer said. "It is a very clear and simple standard."

Winer also spoke about the importance of integrating research into undergraduate education.

"We need to make research important to undergraduates by involving them in some way, shape or form," Winer said.

"I think that the University can focus more on teaching while continuing research. I think it can be done."

The next candidate scheduled for interview, Kenneth Smith, will meet with students at 6 p.m. Friday in Memorial Hall.

SGA explains Title VII and how it affects UMass

By Julie Siegal
Collegian Correspondent

In a special presentation last night, the Student Government Association Title VII Select Committee and Task Force attempted to provide a basic understanding of what Title VII is, along with the process that will be used to obtain the final document.

Title VII was initiated as an effort to organize the structure of the many organizations that exist on campus.

There are currently two types of organizations on campus: Agencies, which consist of SGA Agencies and Campus Activities Office (CAO) agencies, and Registered Student Organizations (RSOs), of which there are over 200.

"There is a lot of confusion about this because there is no real definition of the word agency," Tom Sadlowski, co– chairperson of the Title VII Select Committee said.

There are many discrepancies between the SGA and CAO and what each defines as an agency. The SGA lists such groups like WMUA and University Productions and Concerts as agencies, while CAO has groups like the Student Union Art Gallery and Student Legal Services Office on their list of agencies.

"Agencies have evolved over time with no real forethought or definition," said Tom Coish, staff attorney for Student Union Services. "One of our goals is to clarify things here," he said.

"In actuality, there are many organizational categories," Sadlowski said. "When Title VII was started, it intended to solve four problems: definition of an agency, rights and responsibilities, registration and suspension procedures and discrepancies between various offices," Sadlowski said.

The SGA has added 10 other problems which need to be solved, some of which include use of funds, line of authority, grievance

Talks stall on Colombia's prison crisis

By Frank Bajak
Associated Press

VALLEDUPAR, Colombia — Inmates released a prison secretary as a good faith gesture yesterday to government negotiators trying to end a standoff involving 12 other hostages.

The prisoners released Hilda Rivero late yesterday evening, said Thierry Grobet, director of the International Red Cross in Valledupar.

"She is in good condition and with her family," he told The Associated Press.

Inmates also released a list of demands including freedom for the leaders of the prison takeover, improved conditions and the withdrawal of police from the jail, National Ombudsman Jose Castro told Radionet.

Talks to end the crisis have been slow, as negotiators waited for inmates in the Valledupar jail to respond to a government offer to discuss improving prison conditions if they free their captives.

"They told me that they'll respond to us in writing. All we can do now is wait," said negotiator Jose Noe Rios, sent by President Ernesto Samper to Valledupar, 400 miles north of Bogota, to try to end the impasse.

So far, all contact between negotiators and the inmates has been conducted by telephone.

About 10 inmates have demanded bullerproof vests, a cellular telephone and buses to take them to freedom, as well as foreign asylum. The government has refused.

"[We hope] they understand that what they're asking for is an impossibility," Cesar state Gov. Mauricio Pimiento said.

The takeover began Thursday when prisoners overpowered guards and seized weapons. Three guards and a police officer were killed in the uprising. Two hostages were released Friday. Since then, the hostage-takers have set up sand bunkers in a courtyard outside the offices where they are holding the remaining captives.

Grobet said the hostages were in good condition and receiving food and medical attention.

"They're all being held together and doing well," he said from a celiular phone from inside the jail. The rest of the prison's 600 inmates apparently are not participating in the takeover.

Meanwhile, 1,200 inmates took over a portion of the Modelo jail Monday in Bucaramanga, 190 miles northeast of Bogota, to demand better conditions.

Some threw rocks while others threatened hunger strikes if officials don't improve conditions. The jail, built for 620 inmates, is operating at nearly double capacity.

Also yesterday, inmates in El Barne jail in Tunja released a guard they had taken captive, after officials promised to improve prison conditions.

back the community that nurtured me by starting a foundation that would benefit children today in similar situations," Meeropol said.

The Rosenberg Fund for Children directs its funds toward children whose parents can no longer provide for them because they have been harassed, injured, lost jobs, been imprisoned or killed as a result of their progressive activities.

"I have a profound respect for anybody who would take it upon themselves for the benefit of the greater good to put themselves on the line," Meeropol said.

Examples of the beneficiaries are the families of a black tenant strike leader from New York who was murdered by a landlord's agents in the late '80s and a Latino activist from Chicago who was assassinated for political reasons.

"Those are the type of people in this country who we've been supporting," Meeropol said.

As a way of ensuring the future of the fund, the group is trying to raise an endowment of a million dollars. To raise that money, the fund will be hosting an event in conjunction with the Smith College Chapter of Amnesty International this month.

The event will feature dramatic performances by actress and children's advocate Susan Sarandon, actor Mandy Patenkin, singer Pete Seeger and the University of Massachusetts' own Martin Espada, a poet and professor in the English Department.

The benefit will take place at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, April 26 at the John M. Greene Hall at Smith College. Student Ticket prices are $8 and are available at the Northampton Box Office, Tickers Unlimited, Food for Thought Books and the Odyssey Bookshop.

Workshops plan for new Campus Center

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

The Office of Campus Planning and Space Management is continuing to host a variety of workshops to prepare for the future renovations of the Campus Center and adjoining Student Union, set to be completed for the year 2000.

The last of two workshops that targeted food service options were held yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center basement.

Thus far, telephone surveys have addressed the issue of food services on campus, but another survey coordinated by campus planning is set to pinpoint these "services" more directly.

The following workshops, which will continue until the end of April will address the remaining topics of student businesses and agencies, commuter services, programming and Registered Student Organizations (RSO's).

According to Judith Steinkamp, Senior Planner for Campus Planning and Space Management, the remaining workshops will address the most important topics of the UMass community.

Scheduled for this Thursday between 4–6 p.m., a workshop on student businesses and agencies will be held in Rm. 174– 176 of the Campus Center. On the following Thursday, there will be a workshop addressing RSO's and commuters, also from 4–6 p.m. The last Thursday afternoon workshop will address programming on campus and possible methods to update programming services for the year 2000.

Participants of the workshops will not only be asked to compose a list of proposals and ideal components relating to the topic, but also to integrate their ideas into the core of the basic planning.

According to Steinkamp and other campus officials, there has been a drastic lack in the amount of student input on these proposals.

"We've had a hard time getting students to participate," Steinkamp said.

In order to combat this shortage in student opinion, Steinkamp and Associate Vice Chancellor Beverly Wood will be available for questions and comments outside of the Coffee Shop in the Campus Center on Wednesdays in April from noon–1 p.m.

"We're very excited about the possibilities. There is a lot of opportunity. But different kinds of input are needed at each different stage of the process," Wood said. "We'll just keep trying to find avenues of communication. We're trying to be accessible to get out to people."

According to a survey that Campus Planning has coordinated with the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), student interests primarily lay within acquiring more centralized academic advising services and resources, like computer labs. As well, students would like to see such facilities as movie theaters and recreation rooms made available in the new campus center.

"This summer, we'll look at all the programs, all the square footage, make a wish list and project how much space we would require," Steinkamp said.

Bud Wilkes, Senior Associate Director of the Campus Center attended UMass when the present campus center was officially opened. He concluded with the importance of student participation in the entire planning process.

"The opportunity is unique. We didn't get much input into what we got in the Campus Center and neither did the students. I don't think we were in here a year before we started making changes," Wilkes said.

process, and problems with political and religious group funding.

"When it comes to political and religious group funding, as SGA, we have to watch out for them," Sadlowski said. "There have been lawsuits at other schools because students don't want to finance groups when they may not agree on that point of view. We don't want to be sued."

Title VII does not involve the allocation of money to RSOs or space that they will receive in the Student Union. The SGA Ways and Means Committee controls the RSO budgets and the Campus Center Student Union Commission is responsible for division of office space for each RSO.

Title VII will affect all groups on campus including area governments, Greek organizations, house councils, RSOs and student businesses.

"Title VII involves 70 percent of all undergraduates, or close to it," Sadlowski said.

Sadlowski proposed a Senate Select Committee which would include 30 senators. Their main task would be the passage of Title VII, as defined by the SGA Bylaws.

Their next meeting has yet to be determined.

Mail bomb in Burma fuels thought over government rift

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — A bombing at the home of one of Burma's ruling generals fueled speculation yesterday of a rift in the top ranks of the military government.

The government said the bomb exploded Sunday night at the house of Lt. Gen. Tin Oo, the army chief of staff. The explosion killed his daughter, Cho Lei Oo, 34, wife of an army major and mother of two children.

According to a government statement, a mail bomb was suspected in the "terrorist bomb explosion."

Ethnic and student rebel groups denied responsibility for the blast, saying the attack suggested an internal power struggle between Gen. Maung Aye, a former field commander allied with Tin Oo, and the powerful head of military intelligence, Lt. Gen Khin Nyunt. Those claims could not be proven.

Sunday's attack was the second time in five months that Tin Oo has been the apparent target of bombs. On Christmas Day, two blasts tore through a Rangoon pagoda he had visited hours earlier. Five people were killed and 17 injured.

The bombing came amid a major government offensive against student and ethnic Karen National Union rebels and followed attacks by Buddhist monks last month against minority Muslims.

Man Sha, vice secretary-general of the Karen National Union, attributed the attack to a rivalry within the ruling State Law and Order Restoration Council.

"Inside their army, they're having more and more power struggles," he told The Associated Press in Bangkok.

The government made no initial accusations in the bombing. The regime has blamed past bombings on communists, rebel groups and Nobel Peace Prize winner Aung San Suu Kyi's pro-democracy movement.

"This is an act of cowardice. I'm deeply sorry about it," a vice chairman of Suu Kyi's beleaguered National League for Democracy, Tin Oo, told The Associated Press in Bangkok by telephone. He is not related to the general.

Opposition groups have denied responsibility for past bombings and accused the military of staging them as a pretext for crackdowns.

A veteran of campaigns against ethnic and communist insurgents, Lt. Gen. Tin Oo has threatened in public speeches to "annihilate" opponents of the regime. But he rarely speaks publicly of politics and is a popular commander with the troops.

Several soldiers were seen outside the closed gates of his compound yesterday morning. No damage to the one-story building could be seen from the street.

In a separate incident, the government news agency reported that 289 diehard members of the defunct Burma Communist Party rebel group surrendered Sunday at a ceremony in Maungtaw, 350 miles northwest of Rangoon. There was no apparent connection with the bombing.

Bomb-laden jet vanishes, no answers yet

By Michelle Boorstein
Associated Press

PHOENIX — Capt. Craig Button took off in a $9 million Air Force attack jet last week for a practice run. Within minutes, the plane and its arsenal of four 500-pound bombs were gone.

All that's known for sure is that the A-10 Thunderbolt was last spotted on radar over the Colorado Rockies — nearly 800 miles off course. That was last Wednesday.

Did it crash?

Was it sabotaged?

Or did the pilot steal it, like something out of the movie Broken Arrow?

"Anything you can think of has probably been looked at," said Staff Sgt. Rian Clawson at Davis-Monthan Air Force Base in Tucson. "But the evidence so far doesn't indicate any of these wild hypotheses, like he was trying to steal it, or he went off to Telluride to go skiing."

The Air Force rebuffs the idea that Button purposely veered the plane off course. But officials acknowledged yesterday that investigators are looking into Button's background.

"The investigation... includes all aspects of the plane and pilot, anything to do with the situation," said Staff Sgt. Bret Zieman at Davis-Monthan.

People who live near the base consider anti-government or even cult activity possible.

"It sounds fishy," said Bob Jones, a customer at Famous Sam's Restaurant and Bar. "He could be part of a militia, for all anyone knows."

Officials had theorized the pilot could have become incapacitated and may have put the single-seat plane on autopilot. But radar and witness accounts suggest the plane was being maneuvered and wasn't simply gliding.

The mystery began last Wednesday morning about 90 minutes after Button's plane took off in formation with two other A-10s bound for the Barry M. Goldwater bombing range in southwestern Arizona. The plane was carrying conventional, not nuclear, weapons.

One of the jets reported seeing Button's plane flying in the rear, but a minute later the lead pilot radioed Button and got no response. When the other pilots realized the plane was missing, they broke formation and began the search.

Initially, the search focused in Arizona, but it shifted to Colorado three days later after authorities checked radar records and witnesses there reported seeing a low-flying plane.

Pentagon officials were looking into the time Button spent at Laughlin Air Force Base in Del Rio, Texas, where he was a flight instructor until he arrived in Tucson in February to train on the A-10, an ungainly anti-tank plane commonly known as the Warthog. CBS reported Monday that Button had asked that his training flights at Laughlin be routed through Colorado.

An Air Force official at the Pentagon, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Button had made many cross-country flying trips during his training, and they may have involved stops in Colorado. Button has a brother in Denver.

Button's relatives said they knew of nothing suspicious involving the 32-year-old Massapequa, N.Y., native.

China to sign U.N. rights document by end of year

BEIJING (AP) — In another attempt to head off international condemnation of its human rights record, China announced yesterday it will sign a U.N. rights treaty.

In a meeting Monday with French Defense Minister Charles Millon, Chinese President Jiang Zemin declared China's readiness to join the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights by the end of the year, the state-run Xinhua news agency reported.

The timing of the announcement seemed clearly designed to influence voting at the 53-nation U.N. Human Rights Commission, meeting in Geneva. China wants to punish nations that confront it on human rights and reward those that don't.

Denmark said Monday it would go ahead with a resolution condemning China's human rights abuses, despite France's insistence it would not support the motion and it would block the European Union from doing so as well.

Jiang told Millon that French President Jacques Chirac's decision not to support the resolution was "wise and farsighted," Xinhua said.

"It shows France has an independent foreign policy of peace and shows French determination in developing the Sino-French partnership," it said.

Jiang, saying he looked forward to Chirac's May visit to Beijing, added that prospects are good for trade between their nations. Chirac hopes to sell billions of dollars of Airbus airplanes to China.

If Denmark insists on censuring China, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Shen Guofang warned Monday that economic, trade and political ties could suffer. Denmark "will be the biggest loser," Shen told reporters.

U.S. State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said Washington will work with Denmark and hopes to foil behind-the-scenes lobbying by China to kill the resolution before it can be debated.

The covenant is one of two U.N. treaties that Washington and other Western nations have urged China to sign. The other is the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

GOP seeks accord on chem weapons treaty vote

By David Briscoe
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott said yesterday that Republicans were still seeking an agreement with Democrats that would allow an early vote on ratification of a global chemical weapons treaty.

"There is no agreement to schedule a vote," Lott, (R-Miss.,) said, though he added he hoped to conclude such an accord today.

"A number of issues, both substantive and procedural, need to be resolved, and I hope they will be soon," he said.

Hours earlier, Senate GOP leaders had said the ratification vote would occur before the treaty takes effect in three weeks. Democrats have threatened to block action on all other legislation until obstacles to the pact's approval have been removed.

Lott provided no other explanation for why Republicans were now saying there was no agreement to hold the vote.

The GOP's earlier promise of a vote came in the midst of long-delayed Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings in which Sen. Jesse Helms, (R-N.C.,) the committee chairman, lined up four former defense secretaries against the treaty.

In a hastily arranged rebuttal, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright appealed to Helms' committee late yesterday for help in passing the treaty, which she said is "one of the president's top foreign policy priorities."

Just before Albright's appearance, Senate Republican and Democratic leaders separately announced a breakthrough on scheduling a ratification vote for the 161-nation pact.

Ratification requires a two-thirds Senate vote.

Lott, declined to set an exact date for the vote but assured Democrats it would come before the April 29 deadline.

The Republican leader said he would not decide whether to support the treaty until several issues are resolved.

Senate Minority Leader Tom Daschle, (D-S.D.,) lifted a threat to stall Senate action on all legislation after Lott agreed to schedule a vote. Daschle said he expects the final treaty vote to come next week, although Lott was not that specific.

Daschle earlier told reporters that up to 32 separate and unrelated issues, including support for a ballistic missile defense system, were being linked to Republican support for the treaty. Lott, however, said there was "no quid pro quo" for a treaty vote.

At the afternoon hearing, Albright and Helms greeted each other warmly, reflecting on their meeting last month in Helm's home state of North Carolina. Albright praised his committee for its "strong support and wise counsel" on previous treaties.

"If we are ever to rid the world of these horrible weapons, we must begin by making not only their use, but also their development, production, acquisition and stockpiling illegal," she said.

The chemical weapons treaty does that, Albright said. At the morning session, former Defense Secretary James Schlesinger argued that the treaty would ban use of crowd-control chemicals such as tear gas, impair development of defenses against chemical weapons and open the way for industrial espionage in the chemical industry. Also testifying against the treaty were Caspar Weinberger and Donald Rumsfeld.

A fourth former GOP defense secretary, Dick Cheney, said in a letter read at the hearing that ratification would "lead to a sense of complacency totally unjustified given the flaws" in the treaty.

The treaty, with broad support among Democrats and many Republicans, would ban all chemical weapons production or stockpiling and set up international inspections. Helms and several other senators oppose it as dangerous to U.S. defenses and a threat to the U.S. non-weapons chemical industry.

McVeigh blames FBI in Waco fire

By Michael Fleeman
Associated Press

DENVER — In a letter to an Oklahoma City newspaper made public yesterday, Timothy McVeigh blames the FBI for the 1993 fire that killed 81 people at the Branch Davidian compound near Waco, Texas.

"The public never saw the Davidians' home video of their cute babies, adorable children, loving mothers or protective fathers," McVeigh wrote in a letter excerpted for Wednesday's weekly Oklahoma Gazette.

"Nor did they see pictures of the charred remains of children's bodies. Therefore, they didn't care when these families died a slow, torturous death as they were gassed and burned alive at the hands of the FBI."

Authorities claim McVeigh bombed the federal building in Oklahoma City to retaliate for Waco on the two-year anniversary of the siege.

Cult leader David Koresh and 80 of his followers died by fire or gunshots six hours after the FBI started filling the compound with tear gas during a raid that ended a 51-day standoff. Davidians and their attorneys blame the government for starting the fire. FBI officials said the blaze was started by sect members.

In the letter, McVeigh referred to FBI agents as "wizards of propaganda" who molded the facts to fit their own purposes. McVeigh's attorney, Stephen Jones, said the letter was authentic. It was written to Gazette reporter Phil Bacharach in November, several months after he interviewed McVeigh in prison.

Arthur Ashe Jr. citizen of the world

Bryan Schwartzman

This year the United States Tennis Association's National Tennis Center (site of the U.S. Open) will open a brand new center court stadium. Recently it was decided that the stadium would be named after a pioneer in the tennis world, Arthur Ashe, Jr.

For many, Arthur Ashe will be remembered for that magical day in the early summer of 1975 when he put away an overhead smash to defeat Jimmy Connors and become the first African–American male to capture the crown jewel of tennis, the Wimbledon tittle. However, the notoriety he gained as a black participant in an overwhelmingly white sport allowed him to transcend his sport and become a political activist, an educator, a businessman and a crusader in the fight against AIDS.

I was extremely fortunate when I was younger, because my family was acquainted with Mr. Ashe — that is to say he knew my mother by first name. I was in the company of this dignified and reserved man on several occasions. Part of the inspiration for spending over 10 years of my life playing tennis was simply because of my encounters with Ashe — a man who put a serious dent in the perception that tennis is only for the white upper class country club type.

Soon after he passed away I read his newly published memoir Days of Grace and learned of his accomplishments beyond the tennis court; his belief in and practice of civil disobedience, his passion and action in the fight against South African Apartheid, his belief in raising academic standards and most importantly his philosophy of self– improvement and empowerment through a connection with, and knowledge of the world around. He called this type of thinker a "citizen of the world," who read and exhibited curiosity simply because they are a part of the world.

Especially in the aftermath of the Goodell takeover, Ashe's concerns with activism, the advancement of people of color and overall sense of equity are so important, his message should be considered by the campus community, despite the fact that it has been over four years since his passing.

Ashe felt what he called the "burden of race" throughout his life, from his childhood in the segregated south to his days at UCLA and finally on the men's professional tour. As a young man he was often chased off the public tennis courts in Richmond, Va. His mother passed away when he was only six, and his father was loving but demanding. His childhood, taken into consideration with the fact that most of the time he was one of very few people of color in his surrounding environment, probably had something to do with his reserved nature. His on court style, however, was exceedingly flashy and unpredictable, helping him capture the first United States Open Title in 1968 while still at UCLA.

Ashe expressed concern with what he considered three disturbing trends in African–American advancement: the frequency with which political movement emphasized violence, the institutionalization of affirmative action and the hampering of relationships between African and Jewish Americans.

While at UCLA, several of Ashe's teammates with whom he formed lifelong friendships were Jewish (he joked about eating bagels and lox for the first time when he visited their homes.) Ashe felt there was a great parallel between the double–consciousness that Jews and Blacks felt as Americans. He wrote in his book that no religious or ethnic group had done more to help African–Americans than Jews, and that he could not understand how the climate between the two groups had changed so radically (referring to, as evidence, the riots in Crown Heights Brooklyn in 1991).

"Whatever wrong that individual Jews may have done to blacks, I find no justification whatsoever for the blanket attack on Jews as a people that a few so-called leaders of our people have launched and encouraged."

After he had established himself as a known professional, Ashe has hired by the ultra–exclusive Doral Country Club in Miami Fla. as a celebrity head tennis instructor for the holiday season. It was here that he met Sam Tolkoff, a Jewish basketball coach from the South Bronx who worked as Director of Activities at the hotel for the holiday season. Tolkoff befriended Ashe and introduced him to a basketball/boxing training schedule which boosted Ashe's physical conditioning and agility. (Ashe began training intensely with a jump rope, a great exercise for all would be racquet sport players.)

The two men shared a vision of social justice and a harmonic world, and shared a friendship and correspondence for the remainder of Ashe's life. Ashe would address his letters to "the authority," acknowledging that Tolkoff, through his experiences with basketball players, had a deeper understanding of inner city youth than he did. It is quite remarkable that one who dealt with racism his entire life was able to hold such high regard for what a white individual had been doing to better African–American high school students and ballplayers. I was disappointed that Tolkoff was not mentioned in Days of Grace, but it is understandable that one who was forced to put up at least some sort of facade for most of his life would have difficulty displaying his affection and appreciation in a public forum.

Despite its shortcomings, the friendship of these two men was based on mutual understanding and a desire for the advancement of all people, and has served as a symbolic example throughout my own life.

Ashe saw education as the primary means of advancement and strongly advocated to have higher academic standards for college athletes. Ashe was one of the few African– American sports notorieties who supported NCAA Proposition 48, which did just that. Ashe spent many hours on the phone with personalities such as John Thompson, coach of the Georgetown Hoyas, trying to persuade him to change his position. Thompson had been staging several on– court protests and argued that Proposition 48 would merely keep more young African–Americans from attending college. I find it interesting to speculate if Ashe, with his strong love of social activism and an equally strong dislike of affirmative action, would have supported the recent Goodell takeover. (One thing is for sure, he would have paid attention.)

Lastly I would like to mention several examples of Ashe's involvement in social justice. Ashe, who was relatively inactive during the height of the 1960's civil rights movement, began traveling to South Africa to protest Apartheid and advocate U.N. sanctions in the late '70s. He also advocated strongly for a more open U.S. policy towards Haitian refugees and in 1992 he was arrested in front of the White House for participating in a rally against U.S. policy.

Ashe considered his meeting with Nelson Mandela during Mandela's first visit to the United States in 1990 one of the greatest moments of his life.

"To have spent 27 years in jail for political reasons, to have been deprived of the whole mighty center of one's life, and then to emerge apparently without a trace of bitterness, alert and ready to lead one's country forward, may be the most extraordinary individual human achievement that I have witnessed in my lifetime."

While in prison, Mandela had read Ashe's three volume work, A Hard Road to Glory: The Struggle of the Black Athlete, and upon their first meeting referred to Ashe as "brother." I point this out to illustrate that Ashe's reputation carried itself as far as Mandela's prison cell.

An image that has forever been implanted in my mind was seeing Ashe three weeks before he passed away, transparently thin and unable to stand up in his golf cart. During uncertain times such as these I feel a strong need to bring light to his memory, and hope the best for his wife and daughter who lost a husband and a father too soon.

The final chapter of his book was dedicated to his daughter, but words applied to us all.

"Along the way you will stumble, and perhaps even fall; but that too is normal and to be expected. Get up, get back on you feet, chastened but wiser, and continue on down the road."

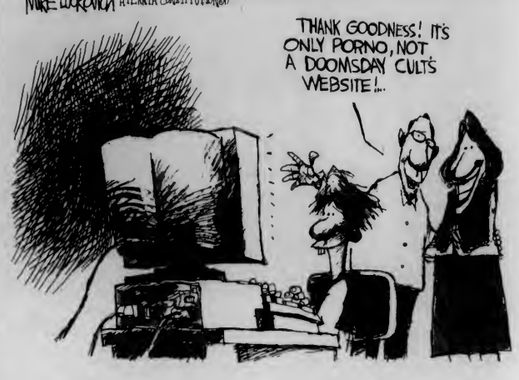
Universities are also used as cover for covert operations abroad. The best known case was exposed in 1966, when it was revealed that the CIA had poured $25 million into Michigan State University from 1955 to 1959 to run a covert police training program in South Vietnam. Five CIA operatives were concealed in the project's staff.

Another example was recently unearthed at the University of Miami. The CIA paid a still classified amount of money to the University for lease of part of its campus grounds located far from the center of the school. The area was turned into a massive military camp which housed over 100 officers and was used to launch post–Bay of Pigs operations against Cuba in the early '60s.

A more widespread use of the campus and student organizations as cover for covert action was "Project 2." This program, initiated in 1969 by the CIA's Plans Directorate, was to recruit students for intelligence gathering abroad. During the period 1970–1974, 23 agents were recruited. To prepare themselves for their assignments abroad, these agents would infiltrate radical organization to acquaint themselves with the theory and rhetoric of the "New Left."

During this process, called "reddening" or "sheepdipping," the students were debriefed by their CIA officers. Although the trainees were warned by their superiors that their mission was not to gather intelligence on domestic dissident activists, "contact reports" were prepared after each debriefing session, and the information gathered was provided to "Operation Chaos." It must be remembered that these files are still intact and are being held by the Agency, pending completion of the current investigations.

The Rockefeller Commission reported that "despite efforts to Project 2 case officers to have their agent trainees avoid taking an activist role in domestic dissident groups, that did occur on occasion." (Commission, p. 139) Thus student agents not only infiltrated radical groups to create their cover for covert operations abroad, but in the process gathered intelligence and in certain instances influenced the course of events.



The CIA's placement of students abroad as covert agents for intelligence gathering purpose places all students traveling overseas under a cloud of suspicion. The fear and mistrust consequently engendered by this activity jeopardizes not only legitimacy of independent students and groups, but perhaps their lives as well.

The CIA continues to be a secret presence on our campuses. Students and their professors should begin the process of re–establishing the university as a true sanctuary of learning. Some campuses already have laws prohibiting secret research, but restrictions should be broadened to prohibit any covert recruitment, surveillance or use of university property or personnel as cover for covert operations. Independent education, nurtured in an atmosphere free from mistrust and manipulation, must be preserved.

La, la, la la, hey, la, la la, hey, la, la la la...

Hey, what's up kids. I'm gonna let you in on a little secret. I don't feel like writing tonight. Maybe I do, maybe I don't. I don't know anymore. Here, let me explain myself.

I wrote a column this week. It was really, really bad. My idea, because I didn't really have one, was to talk about "huck'ums." you know, like when a kid asks you "how come?" but it sounds like "huck'um"?

We met some kids from the neighborhood this weekend when we were soaking up sun, hanging out, and they did that. It reminded me of my campers from Camp Greylock, who do that all the time, because they talk too fast. Sounds like a cute idea, right?

Or a stupid idea.

Exactly. Not very funny.

I'm sorry guys. But hey, I'm just like you. Sometimes, it's just not there, and you have to think of something funny, and you just try to write something and it's really stupid. Like this, for instance.

But I have been thinking about things. Like, when is Bon Jovi going to step it up and come out strong with a new album? They've been away too long, and I sense comeback.

I've been watching a lot of baseball lately, if that means anything. I was watching the Red Sox lose to Oakland Monday night, throwing back a few beers. Pretty interesting stuff.

Seven year old Isaac, from down the street, said a funny thing to me and Slump on Friday afternoon. We were hanging with him when he complained that he had to share a room with his brother. We tried to understand, but then he said, "Yeah, but it's not like living with college dudes, all drunk and stinky all the time."

Isaac's a funny kid.

I talked to my friend from England last week. We met as counselors at my camp two years ago, and he's coming back this year. He's coming to visit at the end of May. I'm pretty excited about that. He's been in Australia for nine months, where he got in trouble because he kept calling me on the company phone, got into a bar brawl, and met yet another girl. He's really a nice guy though. Trust me, kids.

My tooth had a re–flaring this week, and my dad was like, "Hey, look Luke. You have to deal with the problem completely, or it won't go away." But then it went away, proving once and for all that I know more than my dad.

I keep listening to James Taylor's live CD, because of spring and all. He's just so happy, and I don't think he minds if listening to him makes you want to drink a few Busch Lights. More than a few, maybe not. I don't think James would be down with that. But I saw James at Tanglewood last summer, and we were all hammered. He didn't seem to mind then.

My friend wants to break up with his girlfriend. He says he wants to "explore other options." That's cool, I said. "Live your life," I said. That was my brilliant advice.

One of my new dramas is the conflict of "running shoe, no socks." See, I like to wear my sneakers with no socks if I'm wearing khaki shorts, but then my sneakers get all funky, and I have to wash them. But in the summer, I can't wash my shoes every day. What am I going to do?

My current saying is "Nice, nice, nice." It does the job, but it's no great saying. When I was in eighth grade, I called everybody "Big Guy." That one was good. This summer, every night out was the "biggest night ever" and stupid things got a "whatever." Those were good, too. I'm working on a new one, and it has the potential to break in big time. If something is stupid now, it's "interesting." It may not sound funny, but if you ask me to say it, I might break off a little "nugget." But only if you're nice.

Well, that's what you get from me this week. I'm sorry guys. I hope I didn't let you down. The only way I can think of making it up to you is by handing this off to my man James Taylor, who once said:

"Come ah, come ah, come ah, come on. Yeah, yeah, yeah."

That's how I feel tonight.

Racism persists on campus

To the Editor:

Last semester, on Oct. 4, I was falsely accused of stealing at the University Store. This experience has unveiled to me the way in which this University operates. I discovered that a dedicated group of white students were hired and trained to follow students of color upon entering the store. Under that code, I was not an exception. After my humiliation and degradation by fellow students, I was mentally depressed and traumatized to the point of having to see a psychologist. Consequently, for weeks following the incident, I was unable to concentrate on my studies. Ironically, according to the University's Store lawyer, who I believe is paid with students money, everything was done according to the book. Was the book well written? He claimed that the University store has lost about $125,000 annually in shoplifting. Assuming that their lawyer is trustworthy, those in charge of the Store are not qualified to be at their positions since they are not at a level where they can stop their shrinkage without exposing students to humiliation and degradation. After all, there is no need for them to be concerned about the students' respect and dignity since the University has provided them lawyers to justify their malpractice. Students, on the other hand, neither have the time nor the money to fight the established system. Since I am under this category, I bring my case [against] the University Store before the students to let them be my lawyers.

The University has a moral obligation to provide students an environment where they can reach their maximum potential. Clearly, it has failed to provide me with that opportunity. Elevating myself above their irresponsible behavior, I was able to compete with the best engineering students around the country, for admission at MIT. Today, my families, my professors, my friends, as well as the campus community are all proud of me for being admitted to the Graduate Program in Electrical and Computer Science at MIT. Having a chance to go to MIT has no equivalent money value, yet I was almost deprived from that honor.

I would like to conclude by commending the Director of Business at the Campus Center, Ms. Elizabeth Dale for her dedication in creating a Campus Center that is as diverse as the campus community. It is my hope that her example will be followed by the rest of the campus administration. We may not be able to prevent racism on this campus but we can commit ourselves to get a big bite out of it. Recall as long as racism persists on this campus so will wel

Anti–American activities on campus

To the Editor:

I thought I would bring to the attention of the Collegian, and the rest of the campus, a very sad state of affairs present within the Student Government Association. On Wednesday, March 26 a bill was presented, that if enacted, would have put an American flag in the center of each residential area. The flags would have cost a very nominal amount, and several residential areas already have flagpoles. The bill failed by a vote of 17–14. Among those voting against the bill were Senators Shackford, Parenti, Keller, Rolfe, Alam, Fink and every "ALANA" senator present at the meeting. It is pure and utterly disgraceful that these senators would vote against a bill that promotes patriotism and recognize symbolically all the opportunities available through a university such at UMass. I strongly urge any student who is represented by one of the above listed senators to express their most heart–felt disapproval of this outright sentiment of anti–Americanism.

Senator Philip Milson Sylvan

Not the time for Honors College

To the Editor:

I am writing because I am very concerned about Chancellor Scott's proposed Commonwealth College, a new college for Honors students. His proposal contains some very dangerous ideas, including reassigning the best faculty from the campus to the Commonwealth College, adding new residential buildings for the Commonwealth College students and adding new technological resources exclusively for the use of these students. Basically, this school as proposed, would give far greater educational opportunity to a small group of 3,200 "academically talented" students at the same cost as the main campus, while deteriorating the educational opportunities of the remaining 20,000 plus students on campus.

I seem to recall the administration saying less than a month ago that there simply was not money to meet the demands of the students in Goodell. This school can't afford child care, it can't afford an office of ALANA Affairs, heck, it can't even afford to put pencil sharpeners in the classrooms. Now, however, when they want to improve the academic reputation of the school nationally, they can come up with the money to build an honors school. How nice.

I urge the student body to demand equal educational opportunity for all, and I urge the administration to deal with the existing academic shortcomings of the University as a whole before it tries to create a better place of education for the select few.

THE GRATEFUL DEAD
Dick's Picks, Vol. 7: London, September 1974
Grateful Dead Records

THE ALLMAN BROTHERS BAND
Fillmore East — February 1970
Grateful Dead Records

Grateful Dead archivist Dick Latvala recently told David Gans (host of the nationally syndicated radio show "The Grateful Dead Hour") in a radio interview that "the universe was calling for a show from '74." What Latvala probably meant was the high amount of e–mail he's gotten and the large number of online requests in the Dick's Picks chatroom on the Deadnet Conferencing site for shows from that banner year in the Dead's three–decade career.

Latvala always aims to please and so he dug into a little– known run of shows from Alexandra Palace in London over a three–night period, September 9–11, 1974. As he had done with last fall's largely successful Dozin' At The Knick set (a best–of set from the 1990 run at Albany, N.Y.'s Knickerbocker Arena), for D.P.7, he again chose the best songs from the three nights, breaking the "complete, unedited shows" theme that had permeated the previous six Dick's Picks that were released over the last three years.

COURTESY SBA ENGINEERING/ROBERT HUNTER

Bob Weir's past is once again out on disc with Dick's Picks 7, a 3–CD set chronicling a series of 1974 Grateful Dead concerts in London.

Basically, what Latvala brings us is the Dead, no warts. The new 3–CD set starts off with "Scarlet Begonias," which in 1974 was brand new, and without its later companion song "Fire On The Mountain." Yes, jam–fans, the Dead once played it almost exactly as it appears on their album from that year, From The Mars Hotel, but with a little noodling near the end, and fine off–beat drumming by Billy Kreutzmann providing a nice syncopation.

The first disc continues through some short material like guitarist/singer Bob Weir's "Mexicali Blues" and a cover of Jesse Fuller's "Beat It On Down The Line" (beautiful harmonies on this by Weir and backup singer Donna Godchaux), but also some longer material, like "Row Jimmy," which sounds like the Dead just got off a vacation in Kingston, Jamaica; and the always jam-friendly piece "Playin' In The Band," which clocks in at just under 24 minutes here, with the usual jazzy interlude, but nobody really takes the lead, but instead there is frightening chemistry throughout, with some guitar accents by Jerry Garcia and Keith Godchaux's Fender Rhodes electric piano here and there, adding to the jazziness.

The second disc kicks off with Weir's classic song cycle, the "Weather Report Suite," which segues into a song that often featured Garcia's most sincere, tender singing, "Stella Blue." The disc goes through some short material that doesn't really stick out, like Johnny Cash's "Big River," and the Garcia/Robert Hunter tune "Brown–Eyed Women." The band gets back on their wild horse with the boogie blues of "Truckin'," however, which here clocks in at over 10 minutes, with Garcia soloing on a riff that leads the whole band into numerous climaxes and into a jam that Latvala has titled the "Wood Green Jam." The disc then finishes on a magnificent rendition of "Wharf Rat."

Gates's deal fuels debate over PC-TV

By Jeanne Aversa
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Microsoft Corp. is betting that its $425 million planned purchase of WebTV Networks Inc., whose devices let people cruise the Internet from their TV sets, will spur the merging of personal computers and televisions.

"Through their efforts... we hope to dramatically accelerate the merger of the Internet and television," said Microsoft's senior vice president, Craig Mundie, announcing the deal Sunday at the National Association of Broadcasters convention.

Microsoft, which already has a $5 million stake in the Palo Alto, Calif., company, intends to operate it as a separate subsidiary, Mundie said.

"You can expect some Microsoft technologies to show up in the future of WebTV," he added in an interview.

Microsoft's announcement comes as the computer industry and existing TV set makers race to define what the next generation of digital TV sets will look like.

The prize: $150 billion in spending needed to replace the existing 220 million analog TV sets in the United States.

The computer industry's vision is essentially a large-screen computer in living rooms that people use not only to get a crystal-clear TV picture, but to surf the Internet and send e-mail as well.

TV set makers have a different vision: a wide-screen TV with superior picture and sound quality but little, if any, computer capability.

For the computer industry's vision to work, broadcasters would have to transmit programs in a different format than they now use to display pictures on TV sets. Thus far, broadcasters have not shown any signs of doing so.

Microsoft, Intel Corp. and Compaq Computer Corp., which have jointly developed technical specifications for digital PC-TVs, are at the NAB convention trying to woo broadcasters.

"This is TV central," said Robert Stearns, Compaq's senior vice president. "We're hoping to open a dialogue with broadcasters for what we think would be a more effective model of digital TV."

Microsoft, Intel and Compaq executives predict that by next year there will be PC-TVs on the market, capable of receiving digital television, and will not be much more expensive than existing personal computers.

Phillip Farmer, president of Harris Corp., one of the biggest makers of broadcasting equipment, disagreed with the computer industry's vision.

"I think TV is an entertainment medium and the TV in the home will continue to be a separate device," he said.

Harris is selling equipment that will let TV stations broadcast in digital and an even sharper format called high definition.

To whet both consumers' and TV stations' appetite for digital television, Harris and the Public Broadcasting Service are putting together a "road show" featuring demonstrations for the public and technical training for TV station engineers, Farmer said. The first show will be this fall, and officials expect to hit 50 major cities over the next two years, he said.

Joe Flaherty, senior vice president of science and technology for CBS, said TV stations will each have to spend from $1 million to $2.5 million for new equipment to provide digital television, including high definition.

"If you don't do it, you'll go out of business," he told TV executives and engineers.

Last week, the Federal Communications Commission cleared the way for broadcasters to begin offering movie-quality digital television to the American public.

Most importantly, the action means that after 2006 the existing analog system of broadcasting dies. That means people will either have to go out and buy new pricey digital TV sets or converters for existing analog sets to work.

Because it is more efficient than existing analog tech-

Gallery opens up to area youth

By Tricia Van Wankle
Collegian Corespondent

Herter Art Gallery at the University of Massachusetts is featuring young, up and coming artists this week in a display called Spring 1997 Art Education Exhibition. "ArtStart Outreach Program" is in gallery one and "Multimedia Exhibition" is in galleries two and three. These talented new artists bring a breath of fresh air to the gallery with their new works.

ArtStart Outreach Program is an exhibition of choice works of art by forth and fifth grade students from Kensington Avenue School in Springfield. The works ranged from pictures of the children's favorite activities to self-portraits. There is also a section that entails pictures of places where the children feel safe.

"I sense that a lot of the teachers have a interdisciplinary approach. They [make the children] use words and drawings to express their point. I feel one of the most engaging of the children's works are a group of mixed media self portraits. They are about 17 inches in height, the chest opens up and has a little essay which talks about each student's strengths. This is an example of the writing and drawing combined," said Carol Struve, gallery director and UMass Art Department associate professor.

The art is full of a child's perspective but mature enough for any adult to appreciate.

In galleries 2 and 3, the Multimedia Exhibition is full of color and life. The B.F.A. and M.A. UMass art education students have a selection of multimedia works. Multimedia includes paintings, drawings, sculptures and photos.

"There is a considerable range of imagery represented. There are many abstract pieces. It is a wonderful range of materials," Struve said.

Titles including "Enchanted Forest" by Canie Lantz, "Scituate Summer" by Christie Martin and "Escape From Chaos" by Jessica Farley left the viewer to come up with their own interpretations about the creations.

"There is a small sculptural array by Julie Parsons. The images refer to dolls and childhood, they are powerful yet playful. They are made of felt and cloth," Struve said.

The new exhibits bring a spring breeze to the gallery. The works are full of life and color. The exhibit is one not to be missed.

Spring 1997: Art Education Exhibition can be seen in the Herter Art Gallery in Herter Hall at the University of Massachusetts from April 7–11. The closing reception is Fri. April 11, 5–7 p.m. The gallery hours are Mon–Fri 11 a.m.–4 p.m. and Sun noon–4 p.m. Admission is free.

TV digital: giveaway of century

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Critics call it the biggest corporate giveaway of the century: broadcasters getting television channels worth billions of dollars — not just for the upcoming digital TV, but also possibly to sell new products such as stock quotes or all-sports channels.

The broadcasting industry, which is meeting here this week, has thwarted thus far efforts in Congress to force them to pay for the new airwave space. Even Bob Dole, when he ran the Senate, couldn't make that happen.

"This gift takes federal largesse to a breathtaking new level," complains Sen. John McCain, (R-Ariz.), who has tried repeatedly to force broadcasters to bid on the channels at a government auction.

Said cable industry chief Decker Anstrom: It "makes the sale of Manhattan for a few beads look like a hard bargain."

The second channels have been estimated to be worth as much as $70 billion.

Broadcasters bristle at words like "gift" and "giveaway."

They say the channels are simply on loan. Once they switch to digital and its cinema-quality pictures, broadcasters will hand back their existing analog TV channels to the government, which will auction them for non-broadcast uses like mobile phone service, two-way paging and wireless Internet access.

Because digital technology is more efficient than existing analog, broadcasters will use one-third less spectrum than they now use once the switch to digital is complete, said National Association of Broadcasters President Eddie Fritts. "Most people outside the Beltway would consider our return of the spectrum a giveback, not a giveaway."

But the new digital technology gives stations the equivalent of five extra channels on the same-size slice of the airwaves they are allotted. Thus, they could choose to use the extra space to provide new services — possibly for a fee — like an all-sports channel or stock quotes fed to laptop computers.

Given that, President Clinton says broadcasters should have more public-interest obligations in exchange for using the nation's airwaves for free. Current obligations include educational shows for children, public-affairs shows and low-cost political ads.

The Federal Communications Commission, which decided Thursday to give each of the nation's 1,600 TV stations a second digital channel, doesn't have the authority to make stations pay for the channels. And efforts to require payments died without action in Congress last year.

FCC Chairman Reed Hundt, who has raised more than $20 billion for the Treasury by auctioning other slices of the airwaves, would love to sell off the broadcast channels. But his hands are tied.

Hundt calls it "the single biggest gift of public property to any industry in this century."

Donald Simon, Common Cause executive vice president, says it "may be the largest corporate welfare giveaway in our nation's history."

Over the last decade, major broadcast interests have given more than $9.5 million in political contributions, Common Cause reports.

Broadcasters are effective lobbyists and have the power to shape the news and control how and if politicians get on the air, the report said. Broadcasters rebut those charges.

TV stations will have to spend millions of dollars each for new equipment to deliver digital TV, the industry says, and they can't afford to spend billions to acquire the digital channels.

There's a remote possibility that Congress, as it tries to balance the federal budget, may look to digital TV auctions as a source of revenue. Cable and computer companies will push for this. Dole, now out of government, remains a supporter.

Legislation attempts to limit junk email

By Joel Stashenko
Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — "Erin" and "Amy" say they "have really missed you!!" and "really want to see you!!"

With just a few key strokes of a computer keyboard — and, no doubt, more than a few dollars — the curious are directed to find out more at their address: http://www.seductress.com.

It's just one example of the growing volume of unsolicited electronic mail being dispersed across the Internet. Legislation proposed by state Attorney General Dennis Vacco would prohibit such "junk" e-mail in New York unless it is clearly identified as an advertisement, gives addressees instructions on how to be removed from the distribution list and contains the postal address and telephone number of who sent it.

The "Erin" and "Amy" note does include "remove" instructions to prevent future transmissions, but it otherwise would be illegal under Vacco's bill. The message is dressed up to look like the personal notes that people on the Internet customarily send to each other and there is no hint, except for the e-mail address, who is behind it.

Audrey Pheffer, the Democratic state assemblywoman from Queens who is sponsoring the bill in her chamber, said the state should extend the same rules to junk e-mail as it has established for unsolicited fax transmissions.

Pheffer confesses to being computer illiterate, but she said she has heard many complaints about unwanted electronic mail and knows "what garbage sometimes I have gotten in my fax machine."

"As these new technologies pop up, we have to put the same protections into place," she said.

Vacco said unwanted electronic mail — sometimes called "spam" by computer buffs — can be more onerous than similar come-ons carried to people's homes by the postal service. While people can discard unwanted mail in a trash basket relatively easily, Internet users are usually paying on-line charges as they wade through junk e-mail for personal notes.

Though Internet providers like America Online and CompuServe say they have tried to minimize "stealth" e-mail — transmissions for which providers are not compensated — there is clearly more of it being distributed over computer networks than ever before.

Companies like the Philadelphia-based Cyber Promotions Inc., in fact, offer companies to send their junk e-mail to millions of Internet addresses for a monthly fee of about $50.

The founder of Private Citizen Inc., a suburban Chicago company which fights mail, e-mail and telemarketing solicitations, says Vacco's bill does not go far enough.

Bob Bulmash said it is clear that most personal computer users, like most people contacted at home or at work by telemarketers, do not want the unsolicited come-ons. Instead of requiring an "remove" function, Bulmash said the legislation would be stronger if companies are required to get an affirmative "opt-in" notice from people before they could send them e-mail advertisements.

Bulmash said "spammers" are growing at a rate of 750 to 1,000 percent a year.

"They seem to breed faster than fruit flies," he said.

nology, digital gives broadcasters the ability to cram more services in their same-sized slice of the airwaves — for instance, a pay-per-view sports channel or stock quotes to laptop computers.

That is the route Microsoft, Intel and Compaq are pushing TV stations to take.

"Digital TV has got to be more than pretty pictures," Mundie said.

But stations that provide the next step up from digital television — high definition — will not have as much extra space.

third disc. This last run of songs includes the penultimate Dead jam tune, "Dark Star." Coming from a jam on Buddy Holly's "Not Fade Away," we find the band taking a free jazz stance on "Dark Star," playing downright chaotic at times. At one point, just Kreutzmann, Garcia and bassist Phil Lesh fool around on their own before the whole band comes back. Garcia plays at one point in a thick jazz tone reminiscent of Wes Montgomery. After 22:00 of rolling moods, we finally hear the surreal lyrics of Robert Hunter via Garcia's singing.

After "Dark Star" and the also chaotic "Spam Jam," the band brings the lights and dynamics way down with "Morning Dew," not without its own bright improvisational moments. The band closes out with the humorous "U.S. Blues," right off of Mars Hotel. Already, Deadheads on the conferencing are coming up with ideas for Volume 8, and Dick's also going to be looking around soon, too.

With The Allman Brothers' live set of Fillmore East — February 1970 (recorded on a whim by the Dead's then– soundman Owsley Stanley when the little–known Macon, Ga. band opened for the Dead), Grateful Dead Records feature their first disc with no involvement by any Dead members whatsoever.

Fillmore East — February 1970 is pure blues–rock for the most part. The single disc set does feature some nice, tight jamming on "In Memory Of Elizabeth Reed," probably the shortest live version of this on disc, but nonetheless it carries some fine repetitive climaxes at some points. "Mountain Jam" is also here. The title says it all. Other than that, it's mostly blues covers, such as Willie Dixon's "Hoochie Coochie Man," and Muddy Waters' "Trouble No More." If you like blues–rock, here's your stuff, but if you're into the more progressive side of the Allmans' joy, check out other live sets like the later Live At The Fillmore East and Live At Ludlow Garage. Fillmore East — February 1970– is made for completists.

Dick's Picks, Volume 7 and Fillmore East — February 1970 are both available only from Grateful Dead Mercantile. Call them at 1–800–225–3325 and ask for a free issue of "The Grateful Dead Almanac" from which you can order the above two and other discs.

Ohio State: O'Brien not fired by BC

By Rusty Miller
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Ohio State athletics director Andy Geiger Monday labeled as false a published report that his new men's basketball coach was hired despite being recently fired at his old school.

Jim O'Brien was announced last Wednesday as Geiger's choice to replace Randy Ayers, who was fired after a second straight 10-17 season.

A column by Will McDonough in The Boston Globe Saturday said Boston College President Rev. William P. Leahy, angry over leaks he felt came from O'Brien, withdrew a proposed contract extension and told O'Brien "he was no longer the basketball coach."

The column did not site a source.

"It's not true because the coach says it's not true. The alleged meeting he alludes to never took place," Geiger said.

A column in Sunday's Boston Herald refuted McDonough's story. Referring to Boston College administrators, basketball writer Mike Shalin wrote: "The leaks all came from them. Heck, maybe they just wanted to run him out and this was a convenient way to do it."

O'Brien did not return a telephone message left for him in the Ohio State basketball office. He was touring the campus Monday with his Boston College coaching staff.

"They're taking a look at the jobs and have been meeting with our personnel people and learning about Ohio State," Geiger said. "I think that some of them may wind up here — all of them might wind up here — but they need to go back and consult with wives and do all that stuff before all of that happens."

In related matters, Geiger said the university was close to reaching an agreement on the buyouts of the contracts of both coaches fired at the end of the season — Ayers and women's coach Nancy Darsch. Both were fired March 10.

Beth Burns, formerly of San Diego State, was hired last Thursday to replace Darsch.

Meanwhile, the director of the seat license program at Ohio State's new Value City Arena said the hiring of O'Brien did not produce a large response in seat-license sales.

Celtic pride can't lure Pitino from UK

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — Kentucky coach Rick Pitino stopped by Boston on Monday to pitch his new motivational book. The bad news is, he isn't staying.

The man many hope will return the Boston Celtics to their former glory said he isn't interested in the job.

"It's not that I don't have any interest in coming here. I have a lot of interest," he said at a bookstore at Boston University, the school where he began his coaching career. "But I am infatuated with my players at Kentucky."

Speculation that Pitino, who led the Wildcats to the NCAA title in 1996 and to the final game this year, would take over the Celtics increased in recent days when it was reported Larry Bird had spoken with him about the job.

The former Celtics star, who stayed on with the team as a special assistant, reportedly was given permission by owner Paul Gaston to talk with potential successors, even though M.L. Carr is still coach.

Pitino told Bird to wait until the college season was over. Two days after Kentucky lost in the NCAA final, Bird called again. But Pitino stressed Monday that it was merely a "casual conversation" — not a job interview.

He also said that Bird did not express dissatisfaction with Carr, who is also the Celtics player personnel director.

"He [Bird] is someone with a lot of Celtics pride," Pitino said. "He's not upset at any person. He's upset at the state of the organization."

The Celtics (13-63) are headed for the seventh-worst record in NBA history and a franchise-first 11th consecutive season without a championship. But they are also in line for the first pick in the draft, with another high pick coming due to a trade with Dallas. That would give Pitino — or whoever coached the team next year — a lot to work with in a rebuilding program. But he also has plenty to work with at Kentucky, which lost in the NCAA title game to Arizona.

Point–shaving claimed of '80's Pistons

NEW YORK — The NBA yesterday denounced as "baseless" a book's claim that heavy gambling losses by Isiah Thomas and James Edwards raised questions about point-shaving during two Detroit Pistons games in 1989.

Jeffrey Mishkin, the league's chief legal officer, called "absolutely false" the contention in the book Money Players that the NBA recently reopened an investigation into point-shaving in the late 1980s.

Mishkin said the only investigation occurred after the book's authors — ABC correspondent Armen Keteyian, New York Times sports columnist Harvey Araton and Sports Illustrated reporter Martin Dardis — sent letters to Thomas and Edwards, questioning them about point-shaving.

The book, which cites five primary unidentified sources — four of them gamblers — quotes both Pistons players denying any involvement.

"I've never, ever been involved in point-shaving, betting on games," Thomas said in the book.

Thomas, now general manager of the Toronto Raptors, told The Sports Network on yesterday: "During my time in college, high school and sometimes in the pros, yeah you know you play cards, you shoot dice. But I never, ever point-shaved, gambled or bet on games."

Joe Dumars, who played for the 1989-90 Pistons and is still with the team, said he never saw anything to substantiate the charges in the book.

"I never saw anything to indicate to me that would even possibly be the case," Dumars said yesterday. "You look at that, you're talking about a guy who was the most competitive guy that I ever played with. So it would be hard for me to believe that."

Mishkin said both players forwarded the letters to the NBA, and the league then looked into the issue.

"It should be clear to anyone that the authors were also unable to find any substantiation for their claim, which is based entirely on unnamed sources with no factual support," Mishkin said. "It is regretable that in their unrestrained eagerness to create publicity for their book, the authors have chosen to hurl baseless charges at the expense of NBA players and their families."

Keteyian called the NBA statement inaccurate.

"We never used the word 'charges,'" he said. "We said 'concerns.' That's different. We never accused them.

"The league skipped the most serious allegations of high stakes gambling and charges that Thomas lost up to $1 million in high stakes dice games...

"It seems to me that an issue they should be concerned about when two starters are accused of associating with crime figures. The NBA tried to take what we wrote out of context and spin it into damage control."

Tennis teams host home matches today

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

After an incredible fall start, the Massachusetts men's tennis team is continuing its winning ways this spring tearing up the courts. Thus far, the Minutemen have gone 4–1 to improve their overall record to 12–1 on the year.

What is even more impressive about this is that they're doing it with five freshman. This past weekend in Philadelphia, UMass took care of the Hawks of St. Joseph's 6–1, and the Explorers of LaSalle 5–2, behind the team play of five freshman newcomers.

With their usual players out of the lineup, the Minutemen were undaunted and took the doubles point in both matches, and lost only three matches in singles all weekend — two by default of not having the sixth player. Freshman Pat Slyman took care of the competition at the No. 1 singles spot, winning 6–3, 6–2 against St. Joe's, and 6–4, 6–3 against LaSalle.

In the No. 2 singles spot, Rob Manchester defeated his St. Joe's opponent 7–5, 6–1 and most definitely had his way with LaSalle, coming away with a shutout 6–0, and a 6–1 victory.

Rufino Navarro who played at No. 3 came away with a win against St. Joe's, but lost to LaSalle, while Parsa Samii won both matches including a shutout at the No. 4 spot. Kevin Curley, who had yet to play in a match all year, defeated his opponents handily over the weekend as well.

"The five freshman came together, and in my four years here, I've never seen a weekend like it," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "These five young men who now have formed a nucleus of this team, came together in such a way that they were not going to lose either one of those matches this past weekend. They bonded and played to the best of their ability."

Last Friday's scheduled match against Temple was cancelled before the Minutemen went to work on Saturday and blasted out two victories to improve their record to 4–1 this spring. Previously in February, they defeated Vermont and Duquesne, with their only loss of the year to Colgate.

This past weekend exemplifies the hard work that this men's team has showed throughout the whole year. Quietly, they are beginning to make a name for themselves.

"We had kids that had never in the lineup before come out and do the job, and that's what team is all about," Dixon said. "The future is extremely bright for this team."

Today the men's team is on the road taking on Div. III Tufts University, looking to improve on their already increasingly strong record with a match at 3 p.m.

"Tufts will be a tough match, it's one of those things if you look past it, you can get in trouble," assistant coach Doug Knuth said. "So we're just going to go out, be real intense, be real strong, and get them right from the first point."

Women's Tennis:

For the UMass Minutewomen, they will take to the courts this afternoon as they take on Connecticut at 2:30 p.m. on the Upper Boyden tennis courts.

The Minutewomen are coming off of a strong outing in last Friday's win against Fairfield 5–2. Thus far, the team sports a 4–1 spring record and an overall record of 9–3.

"We need to play very efficiently, and play a very clean match and not take them lightly," assistant coach Tom Lowry said.

Connecticut is having a struggling season and this will be another match that the Minutewomen will be favored to win, and need to win, in order to climb up the ladder for a national ranking.

JOHNA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

Mercy, Mercy Me

After invoking the mercy rule in both frames of a double header with Central Connecticut, UMass rolled to 12–1 and 8–0 wins respectively.

■ NHL

and Dave Ellett, the Devils have exploded. They look like the team from the metro–New York area that will make the run for the Cup this year.

• What is up with all of the friskiness lately in the league? Donnes-brooks have been erupting all over the league.

Why? Flat out, the playoff chase is to blame.

Not even families are safe, and Keith and Wayne Primeau, of the Whalers and the Sabres respectively, gave it a go in Hartford's 4–2 win on Monday night. It was speculated that Mother Primeau had both of her naughty little boys by the ears after the game, but that could not be factually determined as of press time.

• It's very curious what's happening with the Eastern Conference playoff hunt, and my lock choice in the Caps are floundering. Their big trade with Boston seemed to solidify their team, but au contraire. I really can't believe I'm saying this, but the Whale has a shot, and their win over Northeast Division leading Buffalo was as huge as Moby Dick's tailfin.

• Everybody keeps talking about Mario Lemieux's farewell tour, and for good reason, because in many respects he's an extraordinary player. He has gone through a tough battle with Hodgkin's disease, a benign form of cancer and a series of bad back injuries.

Amidst all of this, he continually is at the top of the scoring lists. But, this man would not be on my all–time NHL team (maybe as a fourth line center), and let me tell you why.

I don't like his style of play. Lemieux is a whiner; he makes after his namesake, Claude, and dives when barely touched; and while considered a consummate gentleman, he's really a cheap shot artist. Not as blatantly flagrant as Ulfie, but it's been seen many times by these eyes.

I like them tough on the ice, and here are my picks for Jorma's top three all–time centermen, in case you are curious: Gretzky, Bobby Clarke (executor of the Slash Heard Around The World in the 1972 Summit, who never shied away from being considered cheap), and Eric Lindros (basically, Lemieux with attitude and fists). Gordie "Razor Elbows" Howe, would be there, but he switched back and forth from wing and center.

warmed up just fine, throwing smoke by seemingly every Central Connecticut hitter who dared to step in the batter's box opposite her.

UMass opened up the game with four runs in the bottom half of the second.

After three consecutive hits from Karen LaFrenier, Octavia Brown and Galas loaded the bases, Cardenas ripped a two– run single into centerfield. (Cardenas had two hits and four RBI's on the day.) Gutridge followed this with a two–run double of her own. The mercy rule was later invoked in the fifth inning after UMass' eighth run crossed the plate.

Meanwhile Henderson was busy polishing off her perfect day. Her final line read five innings pitched, no runs, no hits, no walks and seven strikeouts.

"We're really hitting better, and playing better as a team," Henderson said. "Things are starting to come together."

Sortino was enthused with her pitchers' efforts.

"I thought both pitchers did very well, but our pitchers have been doing a great job all year," Sortino said. "They're both very capable of pitching the way they did today."

Sortino was also happy with her team's performance as a whole.

"I'm very pleased because we're doing intelligent things at the plate now," Sortino said. "We're showing a lot of patience and poise, which is something we really needed to work on."

we'd like to see him do that in every game," Cannella said. "But it's tough in the midfield, because you don't really get that many chances."

Following DelPercio's first of the period, Justin McAleer scored to bring the score to 14–5. Mitch Ocampo followed with a goal of his own 25 seconds later.

However, UMass rolled on, netting three goals in the game's final minutes on strikes from Costello, DelPercio and John O'Connor.

Minuteman goaltender John Kasselakis recorded 11 saves in the win; UNH goalie Gary Foster made 16 stops.

The official named in Monday's lacrosse article, "UMass doesn't get the call; ACC refs missing the mark," was misidentified. The Collegian regrets the error.

UM faces No. 10 Dartmouth; Walsh helps to lead senior charge

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

Just when you think you know all the answers, some higher power, entity or person changes all the questions on you. It happens, it's awful, but you have to deal with it.

After a strong start to the season, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team were confronted with two ranked opponents in then–No. 10 Yale and then–No. 7 Temple. At that time, the spirits of the Minutewomen were high, but unfortunately, so were the final scores of those two contests. Confusion from top to bottom abounded after two straight shellackings, and answers became questions.

The upperclassmen had to step up and show their leadership, and last Sunday's game versus St. Joseph's was looked upon as a benchmark for the new season within a season. It happened, and with a 11–6 win over the Hawks, the Minutewomen (2–3) have positive momentum to face No. 10 Dartmouth (5–1) in Hanover, N.H. today at 4:00 pm.

Along with junior tri–captain Jen Bowen, one of the upperclassmen that stepped up against St. Joe's was senior attacker Stephanie Walsh, scoring four goals (9 goals–1 assist–10 points), while elevating herself above the 100 career point plateau (95–8–103). Walsh is now the 11th player in UMass history to eclipse that mark, but it has not been a easy road — this season, or any season.

In some circles, the waiting is the hardest part. For Walsh and her senior teammates, the wait for a solid, winning nucleus has been hard as well (12–34 since reinstatement in 1994), but it appears to be on the horizon. It does not take a psychology major to know that Dartmouth is perennially a tough test for any team, and this psych major feels they can answer the winning question.

"I think the hardest part is over," Walsh said. "We have the worst out of our way, and the teams we're going to play are beatable. It's an attitude we have to have — we can win. "The thing about the Yale and Temple games was that we could compete with them, but we put our heads down and checked out. When we play Dartmouth, they might be better skill–wise, but we still have to go in with the attitude that we are going to play our best. We need to show teams that we can give them a good game."

The strain of the pursuit of winning is hard on everyone, especially someone like Minutewoman coach Francesca McClellan. Walsh has given her a consistent offensive option to rely on in her four years here at UMass, but it has not been without its bumps along the way.

"She's had a tremendous career here," McClellan said. "She continues to fight back for us, work hard and keeps putting herself out there. She's definitely gone through some ups and downs in her own game, and with the team, but she's really grown a lot.

"Not only on the field as a player, because she has really made changes in her game, but really as a person as well, and that has been tremendous and a joy to watch."

Born to run

No, Walsh's lacrosse career did not start in Asbury Park, N.J., but in sixth grade at Newton Country Day in eastern Massachusetts. It was a very advantageous situation for her, because most public institutions did not offer the sport until high school.

She stayed there until tenth grade, and transferred to perennial powerhouse Newton North High School in her junior year. Most public school lacrosse players only had two years experience at that time, and her five years of experience helped her to two All–League selections.

"I had that advantage skill–wise, and I didn't feel like I was better, but I had more experience," Walsh said. "The reason why I went to Newton North was because of the athletics, and I wanted more attention towards my athletics. A small private school didn't really accommodate for that.

"So, when I transferred I was interested in soccer, track, which they didn't have at my private school, and also lacrosse. I love to run, and it's a running game. If I wasn't playing lacrosse, I would be running track. I like the whole part about scoring goals, and attacking the net."

Her affinity to many sports was good at the time, but became a dilemma when she had to choose a specific sport for the collegiate level. Success in track, soccer and lacrosse tugged at her competitive bone, but the success of her lacrosse game won out in the end. Yet, she was not recruited by UMass, and it was totally by chance that she made the first lineup of the reinstated program.

"I originally wanted to run track, but then I saw that the program for lacrosse was reinstated, and I had such a strong spring with lacrosse my senior year in high school," Walsh said. "So, I left Francesca a note, and she called me. It was more of chance that I came here."

The will to win

Even for the weekend warriors out there, winning is what drives you to competing in your favorite sport. Those commercials showing golfers throwing their clubs in the ocean might use a little artistic license, but the feeling is well represented — and truthfully, it happens more than you might think.

Walsh's inner competitiveness has painted her as a selfish player, and she has battled that first impression over the last four years — and truthfully, her will to win has overshadowed the team–first concept. But, like the true validity a first impression has on judging the worth of someone, that conception has now been thrown out the window. In seasons past, Walsh had to shoulder the scoring burden because the team was losing and gaining players at a frustrating rate, and she was the only offensive constant amidst the lineup's turmoil.

Now, with young talent and upper class experience, she's not the only one that will walk across the fire for her team.

"Bottom line, I'm very competitive, and I really want to win, and I'm going to do anything to help the team win," Walsh said. "One of my strengths is to score goals, but if I can make a pass to score a goal, I feel just as good. That is what I've learned from my freshman year, and I've learned to be more of a team player.

"I want to win, and sometimes that takes over me. I want to win so bad that I'll try to score as many goals as possible. Now, everyone on the team can score. I'm not the only one."

McClellan knows that Walsh has at times been a little too trigger happy, but she will also miss her after this senior season. The coach knows that all her senior attacker wants is to win, and that has helped her reinstated program.

"She has become a leader," McClellan said. "When she started out she was a very individual player, but she has really grown into being a team player.

"She's really been committed to the program from the start, and we're going to miss her. I'm really going to miss her, because after doing this [motioning her hands like two butting heads] for four years, I tell you she really cares about us, her play and her team."

Through the help of the Ridley High trio, defenders Erica Bryan, Kristen Hocker and Michele Warrington, the complete player has emerged in Walsh. But, the shouldering of the offense has had its impact, though, and her body has begun to pay the price. Last week, Walsh was diagnosed with a degenerative back ailment, and she will have to play in a brace the rest of the season. If this happened last year, thoughts of medical redshirting, or even retirement, would have floated around her head.

With the talent that both Walsh and the team possess, luck has been a rare quality. It happened, it was awful, but the team has dealt with it. It's been a tough road, but Walsh believes they can turn the corner. The destination of this team bus is national respect, and a winning season will help that continuing journey to no end.

"It's been unlucky, to say the least," Walsh said. "It's been a long road, and on the bus [last week] the coach was talking with us four seniors. She looked at us, and we almost had tears in our eyes.

"We were thinking back about all the bad luck we've had, when it comes down to almost getting there, and then not getting there. The thing that was hard, and can still be hard, is sticking with it and still believing that we can do it — we can turn the corner. That's all I want to do this year."

Senior Stephanie Walsh's scoring touch has reigned over Totman Field (background), making her the 11th player in UMass history to break the 100 point plateau.

(the fact that an Emory envelope with $1000 cash had fallen into the wrong hands didn't exactly help matters either).

But Pitino shrugged off those who said he wouldn't last at the school. He looked the other way when writers criticized him.

Instead, he started building a program, his program. Much like Rupp had built the tradition years before, Pitino, in Dick Vitale's famous Frank–Lloyd–Wright–mode, jump started the Wildcat team and reconstructed the Kentucky empire.

What stands as his crowning achievement now is the pinnacle of college basketball. When he won the National Championship in 1996, Pitino capped his effort at bringing Kentucky's little darlings their definitive place in history by cutting down the nets in the Meadowlands.

By staying at Kentucky when critics said he would be gone in five years or fewer, by winning the National Championship, by earning the right to be considered one of college hoop's greats, Rick Pitino mixed the right ingredients with terrific timing and whipped himself up a whole lot of success.

blast, the first of his college career. This is only Kudrikow's second season playing for Coach Stone, seeing limited action in 1995 and red–shirting last year. He came into the 1997 season with only seven career hits, but has hit .476 this season while platooning with Brian Samela behind the plate.

"He left the pitch up, and I didn't know it was out until I was halfway to second base and I heard my teammates cheering," Kudrikow said. "It's a good feeling to be able to contribute to the team when I get my chance."

Samela and Kudrikow have more than filled the void left by the graduation of Andy Kiah. Samela is hitting .359, with three home runs and seven RBIs, and has already earned A–10 Player of the Week for March 24–31.

The Minutemen play their fifth game in four days tomorrow when they host Central Connecticut. Game time is 3:00 p.m.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20
Your home and family conditions improve. Friends and family show you their true feelings. A close personal relationship provides support and gives you a chance to voice concerns. Your originality is highlighted, but others may not see your side of things. Give them time and they'll come around.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21
Things aren't as they seem and your skills sense in sending you signals. Pay attention. Remembering a special occasion will make a friend or family member very happy. Long-distance communication could be just the news you are waiting for. Stick to diet plans.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21
Pay attention to details and fine print; others may not share your honest approach. Watch your back—someone you see as an ally has their own agenda. A friend or family member may expect something for nothing. Trust your intuition and don't give in.

CANCER
June 22-July 22
Your good ideas bubble over; be sure to get things on paper so you'll remember everything. A short trip or excursion could help you keep things in perspective and brighten your outlook. Hold off on major purchases; but treat yourself to a small indulgence; you've earned it.

LEO
July 23-August 23
Listen carefully and read between the lines. Others aren't telling everything they know. Personal and professional obligations may disrupt your usual routine, but change can be beneficial. Work demands pile up, but you'll be able to handle things and will come out on top.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22
You and a partner or friend work well together and accomplish a lot, but you shouldn't get overconfident. Don't be put off by financial concerns or a pressing bill. An older person offers guidance, and support comes from an unexpected source. You'll get some new ideas to better use what is available.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23
Trust your head over your heart right now. Pass up the chance for a behind-the-scenes encounter; it's not worth the personal and professional price. Helping a friend could get off in the long run, but be careful not to promise too much. Try everyone to new ideas and alternative methods.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22
Your confidence hits a peak and obstacles just seem to melt away. You're feeling better about things and it shows. A friend or relative may offer a unique way of looking at a problem. Don't neglect paperwork, and make sure forms are filled out completely for best results.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21
Past experiences could shed light on current problems. Ask the right questions, and you'll get the answers you need to make the correct decision. Wish softly and do more listening than talking, how is the time to wish things out your sensitive side is showing.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20
What seem like obstacles can become stepping stones if you stay focused on your goal. Someone is searching out for you, though you may not be aware of it. Let professional advice border making a move that could turn out costly. Take time out for yourself and you'll get an unexpected benefit.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 19
A small, thoughtful gesture on your part means a lot to a friend or relative. Planning pays off—even though you may have to wait to see the results. Don't rush things, patience can be a big asset right about now. Someone you consider neutral is actually on your side.

PISCES
February 19-March 20
Good deeds come back for you; those you helped in the past return the favors when you need them. Perseverance pays, so keep ahead with projects and tasks that need to get done. Make special plans now for best results. Creativity and enthusiasm are spotlighted, particularly in a group setting.

Pitino visits UM to promote book

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

COURTESY KENTUCKY MEDIA RELATIONS
Former UMass guard and current coach of power-house University of Kentucky Rick Pitino returned to promote his new book.

Former Massachusetts point guard and current University of Kentucky basketball coach Rick Pitino was on campus yesterday, to speak at the weekly sports luncheon in the Campus Center, and to autograph copies of his new book, Success is a Choice.

Although he was in town to promote the book, fans in the luncheon had much more in mind for Pitino, mostly wondering about consistent rumors concerning the head coaching job with the Boston Celtics. Former UMass coach Jack Leaman had a little fun with his former athlete, introducing Pitino as someone who "looks good in blue, but might look better in green," but Pitino gave every indication he'll stay with the Wildcats. Pitino left a college job once before, leaving Providence in 1987 to coach the Knicks. According to Pitino, the move to the Knicks was painful, and to this day he still feels like he let Providence down.

"Would it be a great dream to coach the Celtics, yeah sure," Pitino said. "But how do I face my ten returning players... I'm infatuated with Kentucky, and I'm very happy [there]."

Pitino also addressed the issue of players leaving early for the NBA, a subject he came face to face with in February when All-American Kentucky sophomore Ron Mercer announced he would forgo his last two years of eligibility to enter the NBA draft.

"I lost the best high school player in America because he only wanted to play one year," Pitino said of Lamar Odom, a 6-8 forward from Troy, N.Y who verbally committed to Nevada-Las Vegas early this week. "He didn't like my answer, and he went to UNLV. I'd rather see these kids go to the pros rather than play one year [in college]."

But Pitino, who was on the search committee that hired former UMass coach John Calipari, praised the Minuteman hoop program.

"UMass is a great success story, because they're nationally known for hoop. I thought with [Calipari] that they could be competitive in the A-10. I never thought he'd be in competition for a National Championship."

After leading the Wildcats to the National Championship in 1996, Pitino took Kentucky, minus the services of star guard Derek Anderson, to the final game this season before falling to Arizona. Pitino has been coaching at Kentucky since the 1989-1990 season, and has led the Wildcats to three Final Fours in his tenure.

Pitino said that the book is about raising goals, and overachieving to find success both in business and in life. Pitino has been lecturing on the corporate circuit for over 10 years, but said he didn't want to put his words on paper until he won a National Championship.

Like current Rhode Island coach and former Minuteman star Al Skinner, who he played with and insisted should have his number retired, Pitino played under Leaman and was a two year letterwinner in 1973 and 1974. Pitino ranks seventh all-time in assists at UMass.

"[Pitino] always knew who he was, where he was going, and how to get there," Leaman said. "He was a very good basketball player, but he was always much smarter than he was talented. On the court he was like a coach because of the way he knew the game."

UMass basketball head coach James "Bruiser" Flint was on hand yesterday, and had nothing but praise for Pitino.

"He always has things to say," Flint said. "You'll see a lot of Rick in my coaching, and hopefully I'll be able to match his success someday."

A recipe for success on & off the court

Rick Pitino seems to have found the recipe for success, at least success in college basketball.

Start with a lump of tradition. The lump should be sizeable, but not too large. If the tradition is overwhelming, increase the amount of patience and determination added later.

Add equal parts education, experience and ability.

Mix well with large quantities of patience, drive, determination, hard work, the ability to listen and energy.

Add dashes of composure, charisma, flash and persuasiveness.

Sprinkle with penache, humor and style.

Put in the spotlight.

Follow this recipe and if everything goes right, and the precise amounts of each ingredient are in the mix, the result should be success.

This has been Pitino's recipe, and the end-result was just what he was hoping for.

His post-playing days career has taken him to Hawaii, Syracuse, Boston University, the New York Knicks, Providence, the Knicks again and ultimately — at least for the time being — Kentucky.

At Kentucky, Pitino put all the ingredients together that resulted in his success. He started with a lump of tradition, a big one at that.

The name Adolph Rupp is synonymous with Kentucky basketball — and success. As one of the game's most successful coaches, Rupp built the framework of the legendary program. He was the one who brought Wildcat basketball to national prominence. He was the one who kept it there.

When he left the school, his mission had long since been accomplished. He had ingrained UK with a tradition, and he had cultivated the fans into never accepting second place.

CASEY Kane

That fact makes Kentucky one of the toughest jobs in the country. That the fans are ruthlessly focused on winning, that basketball is like a religion in the Bluegrass State, means the Wildcat coach must have those extra bits of patience and determination.

Pitino also had the education, experience and determination. He had learned under Jack Leaman, the man who coached Julius Erving, at UMass, he had assisted Jim Boehiem at Syracuse.

He had experience. By the time he took the Kentucky job, he had been the assistant coach at two schools and one pro franchise and head coach at two schools and one pro franchise. He had a Final Four under his belt.

He had determination. Remember, this is the man who left his wife in their hotel room on their wedding night to interview for the Syracuse job.

With those components in place, Pitino took the reigns at Kentucky amidst a wave of controversy. Eddie Sutton had just left the school after a scandal had been uncovered by a local newspaper

The UMass lacrosse team drubbed UNH 17-7 yesterday on Garber Field.

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

In what could have been the final meeting between the Massachusetts and New Hampshire men's lacrosse teams yesterday at Richard F. Garber Field, the Minutemen made sure the game was a memorable one.

Showing no signs of let-down after a well played but tough-to-handle loss at No. 3 Duke Saturday, the 12th- ranked Minutemen dismantled the Wildcats 17-7, behind a four-goal effort from midfielder Mike DelPercio.

Massachusetts	17
New Hampshire	7

UNH (1-6) may drop its program at the end of this season because of lack of funding and Title IX reasons.

Playing without Adam Waxer (hamstring injury) and Jay Negus (shoulder), who have been fixtures in the Minuteman lineup, UMass (5-3) struggled in the game's early going.

By the end of the first quarter, the Wildcats had staked a 3-2 lead on goals from Chris Bromby, Mike Sweda and Neal Anderson. Brendan Glass and Casey Costello had each tallied to keep the Minutemen within one.

In the second quarter, UMass came alive by ripping off five unanswered goals. Ken Sussi tied the game at three with his first of the afternoon with 12:34 remaining in the half.

Chris Grande, who saw his two-goals a game streak snapped in North Carolina, jump started the streak by pouncing on the UNH net twice in the second quarter, the first with 10:49 left in the period and the second on an assist from Jim Kennedy 2:37 before halftime.

DelPercio began his scoring spree in that second quarter, netting an unassisted tally with just under seven minutes left before the break. Todd Sokolowski pushed the lead to 6-3 when he sent home his first goal of the season 11 minutes into the period.

DelPercio, who has not had a hat-trick since his senior year in high school, was pleased with not only his performance, but that of the team.

"We stepped it up in the second quarter, we scored a lot of goals and I think that got them away," DelPercio said. "I felt really good today, I was in the right place at the right time, everybody was hitting me."

With a four-goal lead and momentum in hand, the Minutemen came out of the intermission relaxed and in control.

New Hampshire finally put another mark on the board when Dave Hanchett scored on an extra-man opportunity with 11:02 left in the third quarter. But the score came after UMass had already upped its score to nine points on goals from Glass and DelPercio.

After Hanchett's tally, the Minutemen torched the Wildcat target for another four built's-eyes in the quarter. Mike McKeefrey put one home with just under 10 minutes remaining in the period: Glass completed his hat-trick; Sussi connected for his second; and P.G. Massey added to his two assists.

DelPercio knocked in a pair in the final period to seal the Wildcats fate, but nevertheless, UNH made a run at the Minuteman goal.

JORMA KANSANEN ON THE NHL

Everybody loves the red, white and blue.

Yeah, they're the colors of our nation, man, and you can either love it or leave it.

Yeah, that's right, and don't you ever forget about it!

Whoa, got a little too Republican on you but hey, cockroaches and GOP-ers can survive nuclear bombardment. But one NHL team that has not survived any kind of bombardment this season wears the red, white and blue as well: the New York Rangers.

I hate the red, white and blue.

Yeah, they're the colors of our nation, but when Ulf Samuelson puts on the N.Y. jersey, I think of shoving more than loving, man.

Yeah, that's right, and don't you ever forget about it!

The Old Folks Home: the ex-Edmonton Oilers Retirement Association; whatever you want to call them, the Wayne- gers are nosediving and spiralling into a possible first round playoff loss. If the season were to end today, the Broadshirts would be playing at Buffalo in the first round, and an offensively anemic, yet defensively solid, team lit them up for a 5-1 final last weekend.

They're just too old. The young talent that this team does possess (i.e. Nicklas Sundstrom) doesn't get the playing time because the older players still have priority. Great, and speaking of great, Wayne Gretzky (25 goals-68 assists) is having a fantastic year for them, and Mark Messier (36g- 45a) is always a force, but what has that given them?

Answer: a battered squad aching over old injuries, and now, no time left in the season to recover properly. At the beginning of the season this was the major question: loaded with experienced talent, but can they stand the grind of a 82-game season? No.

Sorry, Messier, but no promises will win you games the way your team has been playing lately.

Instead, a neighboring team like the New Jersey Devils has skated right by them, and now hold the top spot in the Eastern Conference — that means home playoff games throughout the playoffs at the Arena Formerly Known As Brandenberg (I will not acknowledge Continental Airlines Arena) instead of MSG, Wayne-ger fans. After making just one trade for experienced leadership, in ex-Maple Leafs Doug Gilmour

Minutemen squeak by Providence

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

It took five home runs, some solid fielding and a whole lot of nail biting, but the Massachusetts baseball team broke a two-game losing streak yesterday with a 7-6 win over Providence at a chilly Earl E. Lorden Field.

Providence	6

UMass jumped out to 4-0 early lead, but had to stave off a bases loaded, no out rally in the top of the ninth inning to improve to 11-6 on the year. Junior Jeff Puleri (3-1) pitched eight innings to pick up his first win, and Jason Bennett earned his first save by inducing a game-ending double play. The Minutemen once again supplied the long ball, with home runs from Muchie Dagliere, senior catcher Jason Kudrikow, Brad Gorrie and a pair from sophomore Aaron Braunstein. UMass has now hit 14 home runs in their last four games, and 28 in 16 games this year.

"Puleri pitched a great game on a tough day to pitch," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "He had all his pitches going."

The Minutemen led 7-3 after seven innings, but Providence tagged Puleri for two runs in the eighth to make it a 7-5 ballgame. Stone left Puleri in for the ninth inning, but after walking the first two Friars, Stone called in sophomore Bill Cooke from the bullpen. Cooke let up a single, loading the bases, but struck out Providence pinch hitter Dan McGowan for the first out. Stone then brought in Bennett, UMass's number one starter, who was available because he's not slated to pitch again until this weekend. Bennett let up a single that brought the Friars to 7-6, but he got Providence third baseman Julian Bracali to pull a low fastball down the line. Massachusetts third baseman Ryan Thistle fielded it cleanly, tossed to Dagliere at second and turned the game-ending double play.

Aside from some late-inning dramatics, the main story of this edition of the UMass baseball team has been an explosion of power-hitting. The Minutemen started off yesterday's game with Providence by drilling three home runs in five pitches. Gorrie, an All A-10 selection at shortstop in 1996, took the second pitch from Providence starter Rob Corraro over the left field fence for a 1-0 lead. Senior catcher Jason Kudrikow then took the fourth pitch from Corraro over the right-center field fence, and Dagliere ended the barrage with an opposite field fence for a 3-0 lead, a pounding that is symbolic of how the Minutemen have been winning ballgames all year. The 28 home runs are only three away from last year's total of 31, and UMass made it the NCAA Regional Finals in 1996.

The highlight was Kudrikow's

Things could not be going much better for the Massachusetts softball team. Though it was brutally cold and windy yesterday at Totman Field, an unpleasant day to watch or play softball, the faces of the Minutewomen were illuminated with the joy only a winning streak can provide.

Behind a complete team effort that included no-hitters from both Liz Wagner and Danielle Henderson, and also two mercy rules invoked, UMass swept Central Connecticut State in swift fashion 12-1, 8-0, extending their winning streak to seven games.

Massachusetts	8
Cen. Connecticut	0

This is only the second time in school history that UMass has received two no-hitters in a doubleheader.

The Lady Blue Devils were put away right from the get- go. UMass crushed Central Connecticut hurler Jen Coleman for nine first inning runs. The Lady Blue Devils appeared stunned and overmatched, committing three of their six errors on the day in the very first frame.

Junior Kim Gutridge got the Minutewomen started when she doubled in Mandy Galas and Stephanie Mareina. Gutridge lit up Central Connecticut for four hits and five RBI's on the day.

Kelly Buckley singled in Sam Cardenas. Galas singled in Becky George. A series of errors, walks and a fielder's choice set the stage for Cardenas once again who delivered a two-run single to finish the scoring.

When it was all said and done, a lackluster pitching performance, and a weak effort in the field helped plate nine runs and seal the fate for Central Connecticut early in Game No. 1. The mercy rule was invoked after four and a half innings.

Meanwhile another story was brewing as Wagner continued to mow down opposing batters. The only blemish on Wagner's line was a leadoff walk in the fourth. Other than that, Wagner was untouchable. She went five innings, gave up one earned run, no hits, one walk and eight strikeouts, just one short of her career high.

"Liz had great pop on the ball," head coach Elaine Sortino said. "I thought she pitched a great game."

Massachusetts 8, Central Connecticut State 0

In Game No. 2, UMass picked up right where they left off, putting two quick runs on the board in the first.

Mareina singled in Galas to open the scoring, and Gutridge doubled her in before the close of the inning.

The Lady Blue Devils weren't pleased to see two-time A- 10 Pitcher of the Week Danielle Henderson take the hill.

While the bats of the Lady Blue Devils grew colder in the brisk wind at Totman Field, Henderson's arm

Iraqi pilgrimage defies UN sanctions

JIDDAH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Defying U.N. sanctions, Iraqi President Saddam Hussein sent an airliner full of Muslim pilgrims to Saudi Arabia yesterday for devotions at Islam's holy cities.

The Iraqi Airways jet with 104 people aboard landed without incident at King Abdulaziz International Airport in this Red Sea port.

The Saudi interior minister said two fighter jets were sent to intercept the Iraqi plane after it entered the kingdom's airspace without clearance.

But it was allowed to proceed once it became clear the passengers were pilgrims. Saudi officials said little could be done to stop Muslims from making a hajj — the pilgrimage to the Saudi cities of Mecca and Medina — even those defying a ban on flights from Iraq.

It was the first international flight dispatched by Saddam since the U.N. Security Council banned flights in and out of his country after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

In New York, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Bill Richardson, called the flight a "flagrant violation" of U.N. sanctions. He said the United States, which monitors the Persian Gulf region with ships, aircraft and sophisticated equipment, would demand a strong statement from the Security Council condemning it.

Some of FDR's family want disability shown

WASHINGTON (AP) — Just weeks before the FDR Memorial is to open near the National Mall, 16 descendants of Franklin D. Roosevelt said yesterday the monument should do more to show their grandfather governed from a wheelchair.

Coping with his disability "most likely gave FDR much of the strength, courage and determination that made him the great president and leader he was," the grandchildren wrote in a two-page statement. "It would be a disservice to history and the public's interest if the impact of polio on the man were to be hidden."

The signatories represent more than half of FDR's 29 grandchildren, but they stressed that there is no "family position" on the memorial. They said they were worried that the controversy would "seriously detract from and disrupt the memorial's public dedication ceremonies" on May 2.

Disability groups already have demonstrated at the monument site, and have requested a permit to demonstrate during the dedication, planning to bring busloads of activists to town for the occasion.

As now planned, none of the monument's three statues of Roosevelt suggests a wheelchair or the steel braces he wore. But the memorial's entry building will display a replica of one of FDR's wheelchairs and a rare photograph of him in a wheelchair. A timeline states that after being stricken with polio in 1921, FDR "never again walked unaided."

New UMass website to address student concerns with advising

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

Members of the Resource Network met yesterday with a member from the Office of Information and Technology (OIT) to discuss the planning of an advising website for students at the University of Massachusetts.

The website, which is in the early planning stages, will be divided into four basic areas of advising: academics, personal, career and resource. Through the site, members of the Network hope to make a broad spectrum of information available to students, staff, faculty and administrators.

An example of the Career Advising site would include links to lists of all academic advisors on campus, academic deans, the University Career Services Network, Mather Career Center, Rossman Alumni Career Forums, career fair listings, internships and the Center for Counseling and Academic Development.

"We want to give students and faculty easy and quick access to information. What we usually do when we need general information is to pick up the phone and call someone we know," said Gary Bernhard, director of University Without Walls. "With a web site all that can change."

One of the main reasons for creating an advising web page is to cut down the number of frustrated students on campus who can't get the information they are looking for.

The group discussed that many students who are double majoring often have problems when seeking advice from their advisors because one advisor usually doesn't know very much about the other major.

Another concern was there is so much information available on campus that faculty, staff and administrators are not trained to help students identify where they need to be.

"One of the ways UMass gets a bad reputation as an institution is that we don't train people to find the appropriate place to send students if they're not in the right place," said Dori McCracken, from the University Advising Center. "UMass' reputation will improve and students will be happier if a person refers them to some place else. Even if that place is the wrong place, the student knows they were still trying to help."

The group discussed different items to include in the web pages.

One idea that was mentioned was the presence of a button, when clicked, would display "hot numbers" or help numbers in different departments for people who are not comfortable searching the web.

"If a person wants to talk to someone immediately or does not want to search the web any further they need to have access to phone numbers and e-mail addresses," said Pat Kochin, senior software and networking consultant at OIT.

Besides the website, the Network also discussed the need for a central dispatch area where a student can get information to almost any type of question about the campus they might have.

The group discussed the idea of hiring people to manage e-mail sent through the websites, answering student questions via telephones.

"Yes, people can search the web, but some people don't have access at all and others just are not comfortable and they need to have the same advising situation in

Appointment debated in SGA

By Victoria Groves
Collegian Staff

A number of potentially important motions were passed over by the Student Government Association (SGA) at last night's meeting in order to debate an appointment to the Administrative Affairs Committee.

Chair Jennifer Casasanto (Southwest Area) was appointed to the committee after a long debate concerning her objectivity and past performance. The main arguments were presented by members of the Pro Student Caucus.

Many said they felt that, during previous meetings, Casasanto had tried to block senators from voting potential senators into the senate who didn't align with her political beliefs.

"I think that through her actions in the senate she has proven that she can't be objective. She's made a lot of decisions in the past that show her sneaky, political ways," said Sen. Will Serweiman (Southwest Area).

Casasanto said she has never told any senators how to, vote on appointments and apologized for the problems her appointment was causing the senate.

"I'm sorry this is causing such division. I don't think this is good for the senate. I don't think there should be sides. I have never told a single person how to vote. I get very angry that they make these allegations against me. I feel it's my job to have discussions with other senators and to present why I am going to vote a certain way. In hopes that they see my view," Casasanto said.

Tom Sadlowski, chair of the Title VII committee, came to Casasanto's defense, claiming that her appointment would add balance to an allegedly stacked Administrative Affairs committee. He also complained to the senate that the debate was a massive waste of time.

"As for her objectiveness, she is very objective. As a whole, I doubt the committee's objectiveness, so I think ken would be beneficial.. This will cause the other group [Pro Student Caucus] not to have a majority. All in all, this is wasting the senate's time. We're supposed to be working for the students," Sadlowski said.

Sen. Paul Ferro (Southwest Area) said the alleged stacking of the Administrative Affairs committee is unfounded and voted against the appointment of Casasanto.

"The claim that the Administrative Affairs committee is stacked is overly paranoid... Mr. Sadlowski's claims of the committee is unfounded... Miss Casasanto has a lot of problems in her closet concerning her ability to be objective. I think Miss Cassanto is not qualified to screen candidates for the senate," Ferro said.

Sadlowski feels that up until now it was very hard for a student not affiliated with the Pro Student Caucus to get appointed to the committee because of their majority in the committee.

Students, administration discuss financial priorities

By Lisa Chiu
Collegian Staff

The third meeting between the administration and student negotiators to finalize the demands from the Goodell Building takeover was held Tuesday night.

Facilitated by student negotiator, Jose Escribano, the meeting began with concerns brought to Escribano's attention by chair of the Student Government Association Ways and Means committee, Jen Corbett.

According to Escribano, Corbett was told by an unspecified person that $50,000 of student fees are being held for "Goodell" purposes, from a $150,000 budget which is to be allocated out to students.

Deputy Chancellor Marcellette Williams said there was no directive given from the administration saying that they are holding money for the Goodell Building takeover.

"That money may be held by Campus Activities; Ric Townes [assistant vice chancellor for Campus Activities], has no jurisdiction for that money, but I will certainly look into it," said Tom Robinson, vice chancellor for Student Affairs.

The agenda then moved to a continuation of the previous meeting between students and administrators concerning the Asian, Latino, African and Native American (ALANA) academic support services.

Escribano said the students would like to allow the existing ALANA support services to be able to have the same academic power as CASIAC or the other University support services. These powers include adding courses past the deadline or dropping courses with a "W".

According to Kenneth Burnham, interim dean of Enrollment Services, his office is currently in discussion with the three directors of the ALANA support services.

Burnham said that giving such powers to the ALANA support services, "makes a lot of sense," and added that he is just going through the bureaucracy of making sure it can be implemented.

Before discussion continued, students brought up the issue of the meaning of the word "priority" in the University budget, which was then heavily debated.

"We still don't know about the UALRC [The United Asia Learning Resource Center] position; you say it is a priority but we don't know if it will be done, how does a priority become a top priority?" asked Graduate Student Senate President Deepika Marya.

"I can't decide top priority now, that's 10 months to a year down the road. I don't know what issues will come up. I can't guarantee that just because something is put into the process that it will go through," Robinson said.

Burnham added that the question raised during the budget process is, does this request compete against others such as community service programs, police, or financial aid.

Robinson said the highest priority for him in this year's budget was phase two of the SATF relief which is on a four year plan, brought forth by the SGA.

"What we want is the [ALANA] support staff to be number one," said student negotiator Salwa Shamapande.

Shamapande added that he would like to see Robinson's list of priorities for FY 98. Robinson

Student union evacuated due to two electrical fires

An electrical fire broke out in the University of Massachusetts Student Union laundry room yesterday, requiring over 200 people to be evacuated from the building. No injuries were reported.

According to Kay Scanlan, a spokesperson for the University, the Amherst Fire Department received a telephone alarm yesterday at 2:30 p.m.

"A fire was discovered in an electrical sub-panel in the laundry room," Scanlan said. "It was immediately extinguished using a dry chemical extinguisher."

The laundry room was evacuated when the fire was discovered.

"In the process of turning off power to the room, a second fire was discovered in an electrical service panel in the Student Union electrical distribution room," Scanlan said. "That fire was also immediately extinguished."

Upon discovery of the second fire, the entire Student Union was evacuated. Power was disrupted to the building for about 10 minutes.

The Campus Center was not affected by the fire, however the connecting tunnel from the Student Union to the Campus Center remained closed until 4 p.m.

An estimate of the cost of damages has not yet been made. Costs will be incurred due to the damage to the laundry, clean-up and repairs to the electrical system, according to Scanlan. Power is fully restored, except for the laundry room.

Mobutu fires his prime minister, replaces him with army general

By Donna Bryson
Associated Press

KINSHASA, Zaire — President Mobutu Sese Seko had soldiers pull the prime minister off the streets yesterday as his reign appeared to crumble even further.

The White House urged him to make way for a democratic government, calling his three-decade dictatorship "a creature of history."

The Zairian president, who had declared a nationwide state of emergency on Tuesday in response to rebel advances, named an army general as the new prime minister. Gen. Likulia Bolongo had previously served Mobutu as defense minister and army chief of staff.

Likulia promised a crackdown on civil liberties, saying his primary goal was "the restoration of public order."

The four-star general, dressed in his army uniform and surrounded by four other officers, did not elaborate on the crackdown at a news conference, but said measures would be taken against the news media if they published articles that "affected the morale of the military."

Several foreign journalists, including an Associated Press photographer and APTV cameraman, were beaten and had their cameras stolen by soldiers during an anti-government demonstration yesterday.

And in southeastern Zaire, rebels bent on ending Mobutu's nearly 32-year dictatorship reportedly captured Lubumbashi, Zaire's second-largest city. They have already captured the eastern third of Zaire in their seven-month campaign.

The United States increased pressure on Mobutu to leave office, with White House spokesman Mike McCurry saying that U.S. officials want to see a transitional government, then elections.

"That clearly reflects our view that Mobutuism is about to become a creature of history," McCurry said.

Last week, political parties allied against Mobutu named Etienne Tshisekedi as their choice for prime minister. Mobutu accepted his nomination in what was seen as a ploy to weaken the opposition by splitting it between Tshisekedi's supporters and those ready to join rebel leader Laurent Kabila.

Tshisekedi is revered in Zaire for the suffering he endured during his decades of opposition to Mobutu. Since his appointment, he had moved to undermine Mobutu by ordering parliament dissolved, annulling the constitution and offering Cabinet posts to the rebels.

The opposition lawmakers who had nominated him said he had gone too far, and they joined Mobutu supporters in calling for his ouster. Yesterday, Tshisekedi tried to lead thousands of supporters to the prime minister's office to assume control. Walking in the huge crowd with his hand raised in a victory salute, Tshisekedi confronted a row of soldiers backed by troops in armored personnel carriers. The showdown took place near a monument to peace and freedom erected in a traffic circle.

Caucus has the majority. Every motion that goes through is to their benefit. It's very hard for regular students to get into the senate because if it comes down to a regular student and their interests, their interests will get in. I feel that [Casasanto] has the best interest of the student body in mind," Sadlowski said.

Sen. Neil Collins (Commuter Area) worked with Casasanto as a member of the Finance committee which she chairs.

"The only way to create an objective senate is to have objective people on committees. I don't think she will help with that process," Collins said.

After approximately 30 minutes of discussion, Casasanto was voted in by a majority vote.

Noho attracts volunteers for clean-up campaign

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

This Saturday the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) chapter of Smith College will host the 13th annual Hunger Clean-Up campaign in Northampton.

Mayor Mary Ford will start off the campaign with a press conference at 10:30 a.m. in the Northampton Survival Center. Students are invited to attend.

Sponsored by the National Student Campaign Against Hunger and Homelessness (NSCAHH), the Smith Hunger Clean-Up committee has presently solicited approximately 200 student volunteers from the college to offer time and support at one or more of 12 area locations.

Among these establishments are the Grove Street Inn, Necessities/Necesidades, the Northampton Survival Center and the YWCA of Western Massachusetts.

Necessities/Necesidades, a shelter that houses women who have been battered, is one of the Northampton establishments involved in the MassPIRG Hunger Clean-Up project.

Elethea O'Dell, shelter coordinator, said that like last year, all volunteers will most likely be cleaning, painting and doing yard work.

These are just a few of the varied activities that volunteers will take part in on Saturday.

"We've had MassPIRG students from all the three colleges of UMass, Amherst and Smith Colleges," said Karol Rothery, administrative director of the Northampton Survival Center.

"I cannot tell you what a difference it makes to have these students clean and paint and to come in and do basic behind the scenes work that can't be taken care of on a daily basis," Rothery said.

Rothery said that last year a dozen or so students dismantled all of the food shelves at the center and cleaned behind them before repainting them.

"It's a wonderful service. This is the eighth year they've come to volunteer. We've really looked forward to the idea that the academic community would support these human services," Rothery said.

A projected goal of $2,000 is expected from the sponsors' pledges for the students' volunteer work.

According to the press release, one-half of all endowments will be donated to one of the 12 local shelters where student volunteers will inhabiting.

Another fraction of all donations will be distributed across the country solely to higher education students who are working to further organize projects that aim to curb homelessness and hunger.

A portion of the proceeds will also be donated to NSCAHH's international projects, three of which will work to curb severe poverty around the nation this year.

For over 13 years, the NSCAHH Hunger Clean-Up project has involved more than 85,000 students in thousands of community work projects. Over $1 million dollars has been raised, making this program one of the nation's most successful student and community events.

Marie McCarthy, a sophomore at Smith and the committee chair of the college's MassPIRG chapter Hunger Clean-Up, said she believes the Hunger Clean-Up is essential to both the Smith and Northampton communities.

"It strengthens the relationship between the two communities by actively trying to improve the hunger and homeless situation," McCarthy said.

Monday's article on Salman Rushdie's appearance at Amherst College included some incorrect terminology. The national language of India was misindentified. The language is called "Hindi." Additionally, the term "Fatwah" was defined incorrectly. A Fatwah is an individual opinion of a legal scholar in the Islamic legal tradition.

said that he would not allow him to see it "in isolation."

"Every vice chancellor has lists, pulling out any one piece is not appropriate, its distorts the budget cycle," Williams said.

Escribano suggested getting the list of priorities from Enrollment Services' as well as all other offices; put them together and see what priorities come first.

"My office has never been closed. We could have a conversation better than this forum... I find this very uncomfortable, I guess," Burnham said.

Student negotiator Justin Beatty replied, "The issue of how comfortable it is to us is irrelevant. As head of a department I would assume that you be able to provide information. If you ask me a question as a student, whether or not I'm in my room, I'll tell you what's on my mind... we just want a copy of the priorities."

Tara Dixon, a student negotiator, asked, "When we can't even get one piece of paper saying how something is done, how are we supposed to believe that the rest can be done as well?"

"It would be a miscarriage of your time if all you're asking for is a piece of paper," Williams said.

The meeting ended without further discussion of ALANA support services and both sides agreed to discuss the issue at the next scheduled meeting.

Northeast GOP changes name to diversify

By John King
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Looking to exert greater influence in national GOP affairs, an organization founded by Northeastern moderates is changing its name and adding a more diverse mix of Republicans to its ranks.

Effective today, the Committee for Responsible Government will become the Republican Leadership Council. The new organization held its first fund-raiser last night in Washington. Its hosts were 1996 GOP presidential nominee Bob Dole and New Jersey Gov. Christine Whitman.

Board members of the current organization include Republican Govs. George Pataki of New York, William Weld of Massachusetts, John Rowland of Connecticut, Pete Wilson of California, as well as former New Jersey Gov. Tom Kean.

Among the new additions are Gov. John Engler of Michigan and Sens. Pete Domenici of New Mexico and John Kyl of Arizona. Also joining the new organization are Sen. Alfonse D'Amato of New York and Reps. Bob Franks of New Jersey, Bill Paxon of New York and Jack Quinn of New York.

The new name of the organization is certain to encourage comparisons with the Democratic Leadership Council, an organization founded in 1985 by centrist Democrats unhappy with the liberal tilt of their national party.

President Clinton, who as Arkansas governor was a founding member of the DLC, used the organization as a springboard to national prominence, and it has been an influential voice in reshaping the Democratic Party's views on tax and spending issues, welfare reform and free trade.

Organizers of the new GOP effort said they hoped the Republican Leadership Council would become an influential voice for a "common sense conservative message" on themes that unite the vast majority of Republicans. But, unlike the DLC, they said it was not designed as a counterweight to any particular faction within the Republican Party.

"To the contrary," said Lewis Eisenberg, the organization's chairman. "The goal of the Republican Leadership Council is to unite the party and to work with the national party to keep us together on the common principles that guide us as the common sense conservative party."

Also unlike the DLC, Eisenberg said the GOP group would be focused, at least initially, more on fund raising and campaign support than on policy development. The Republican Leadership Council will establish state and federal political action committees to support GOP candidates.

Eisenberg is chairman of the New York-New Jersey Port Authority and heads a New York investment firm. He has been active in GOP affairs for years and most recently was New Jersey finance chairman for Bob Dole's 1996 presidential campaign.

real life," Kochin said.

Bernhard said it was "interesting that the planning of a virtual office was driving the planning for a real office of advising."

Kochin said, "One great thing about the websites is that they are not static. Changes can be made to them constantly. They are not like a paper copy."

Two staff members from the Undergraduate Admissions office said that included in the web pages would be class equivalents from other colleges and universities.

Last January, a conference on advising, "News Perspectives on Advising Needs and Resources," was held.

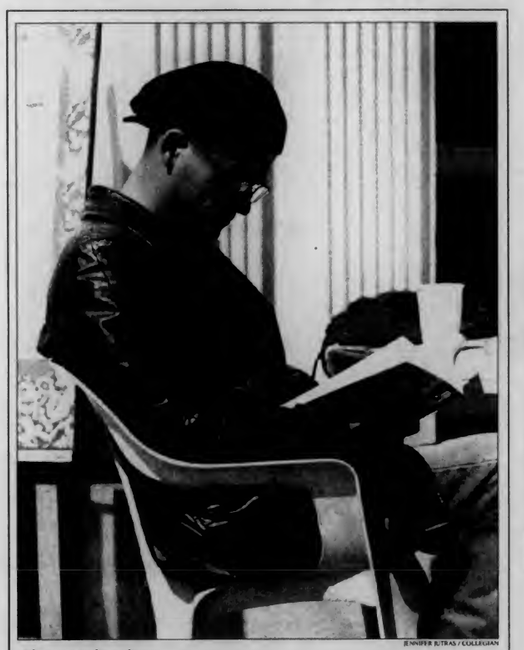
At the conference a student panel offered some suggestions of some "fundamental characteristics of successful advising," according to a report released by the Resource Network Steering Committee.

The students said that a personal relationship with professional adults in the University but outside the classroom is important, and a competent advisor needs to ask questions, plant ideas and challenge the assumptions in addition to giving encouragement and support.

A way to enhance these characteristics, according to the students is to improve information resources on campus, create opportunities for faculty and staff to share ideas and information, create training and development opportunities for advisors.

"A lot of people at the conference said that the availability of information is an issue," Bernhard said. "How do you get it? How do you know where to start? How do you know where you need to go.

"On a campus this size if you stumble into someone who knows the information you are very lucky," he said.



Another important aspect the members brought up was the amount of accessibility that faculty and staff have to the web.

"If we are pushing this technology we have to be able to give people access to the technology," Kochin said.

All computer classrooms are connected to Netscape except for the Crampton Residence Hall classroom in Southwest Residential Area which has access to the web in text only format.

However not all staff, faculty and administrators have access to the web in their offices.

The members of the Resource Network hope to have the web site on advising on the web and functional by September.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Editor's note

To the campus community:

Over the past two days, various students have been distributing a handout attacking the Collegian alleging that the paper "feels ashamed" to print a letter written by a student, Pierre Elysee.

The Collegian would like to state for the record that we do not feel at all ashamed to print any letter to the editor. Mr. Elysee's letter did not appear in the newspaper because it was middled when it was initially sent to the Collegian.

As editor of the Editorial/Opinion desk, I spoke with Mr. Elysee on the night of April 3 concerning his letter. This was the first time such a letter was brought to my attention. I assured Mr. Elysee that his letter would be printed in the Collegian this week; the letter was printed yesterday.

Even after the publication of Mr. Elysee's letter, students continued to distribute this deceiving hand-out. Underneath a copy of Mr. Elysee's letter was another letter by Kirk James Macolini, with the heading, "Type of letter the Collegian feels obligated to print."

Mr. Macolini's letter appeared in the Collegian at least two semesters ago, and does not represent the editorial decisions of this current semester's Editorial/Opinion page. In addition, the Editorial/Opinion Desk does not at all feel obligated to print any letter which it receives.

In my semester as Editorial/Opinion editor, the desk has made great efforts to diversify the page and I hope that these efforts have been noticed.

I apologize to Mr. Elysee for the delayed publication, but would like to add that the letter which is circulating around campus is a misrepresentation of the work of the current Editorial/Opinion desk.

Sincerely,

Mike Burke

Profits, Prisons and the Pentagon

Sam McAfee

One of my earliest memories is the election of Ronald Reagan as President of the United States. Throughout my childhood, my parents instilled within me a sense of criticism of the foreign and domestic policies imposed by this lunatic and his band of thieves and mercenaries.

From the late 1940s until the fall of the U.S.S.R., the U.S. government developed an elaborate military industrial complex (perfected by Reagan), fueling the growth of many industries through lucrative contracts with the Department of Defense. Reports of the power of the Evil Empire were vastly exaggerated in order to justify this abysmal waste of money, and continue hiking the profit rates of weapons manufacturers like Raytheon and Lockheed.

Once the Soviet Union finally collapsed, driven into bankruptcy by the arms race, it was necessary for the U.S. policy makers to devise a new strategy to fuel the public subsidy of private corporations. We are now faced with two new myths, intricately linked in their racist ideologies.

The first strategy involves the domestic state of affairs, where millions of poor Americans, disproportionately black and Latino, have been driven to desperation by vanishing government services at a time of massive job loss and corporate downsizing. The public has been hoodwinked into believing that prisons are the answer to our problems.

The old military industrial complex has been usurped by a new system that relies on racist fears and decaying cities to justify a lucrative endeavor, building prisons. In California for example, the state now spends more money on subsidizing prison construction than it does on education.

When a prison is built, the government contacts a construction company to build it, a security agency to manage it, and a high tech security firm to equip it. Each of these industries and several others, in order to make their profits, are dependent upon public opinion that prisons are needed.

The desperate populations of inner cities and poor rural areas are driven to crime by the lack of jobs and opportunities available to them in this great new era. Those who end up in prison typically find themselves leased as slave labor to the same corporations who downsized them out of a job in the first place. The competition with prison labor undermines the wage bargaining power of other workers, and pits the working class against one another in a struggle for the crumbs that remain.

The second strategy, involving foreign affairs, requires an equally racist and elaborate myth to sustain the remaining military industrial complex. Instead of fighting communism, it focuses on fighting "terrorism," and propels the growth of the informational technology, steel, fuel and several other industries.

The category which U.S. policy refers to as "terrorism" typically consists of popular struggles against repressive, undemocratic regimes, like that of Indonesia or Peru, which are bent on protecting corporate interests at the expense of the population. The label "terrorism" is never applied to the kinds of state repression supported by the United States, like the regime of the recently resigned Mobutu of Zaire, who was put in power by the CIA and committed massive atrocities against the people of Zaire.

Nike benefits heavily from the military regime in Indonesia. That government uses U.S. weapons, training and advising to crush labor and community organizations and keep the wages paid to Nike workers at below survival levels. Nike claims it is providing employment to an otherwise desperate population. However, they are desperate because U.S.-sponsored state terrorism has placed them in such a position.

In Peru, the MRTA still holds their position in the residence of the Japanese Ambassador. The U.S. media are quick to label this group as terrorists for the extreme measures they have taken. However, President Fujimori is never labeled a terrorist for ordering the military to execute or imprison thousands of labor and community leaders. This is partially because his economic policies are good for U.S. corporations invested in the area.

The American media plays along with the "terrorism" myth by portraying terrorists as fanatics (usually people of color) who are driven to kill innocent Americans for their maniacal schemes and fundamentalist values. The favorite target of the press are Arabs, but any third world person will do just fine to fuel the racist fears of U.S. citizens. It is under the threat of this terrorism that we are willing to submit to the draconian measures of the Crime Bill and anti-terrorism legislation which include more FBI wire taps, less search and seizure protection, and support for state military repression at home and abroad.

We must snap out of this trance and recognize that the policies of the United States, both foreign and domestic, are geared for one purpose alone — protecting corporate power. All must fall before the mighty dollar. It is necessary for them to play on our fears and insecurities in order to trick us into supporting policies which are contrary to our interests.

When we engage in day to day struggles with the establishment, such as fighting the UMass administration for fully subsidized child care, we must keep in mind the national and international context in which this struggle takes place. The education of its citizens is not a priority of the U.S. government (nor that of the state of Massachusetts). What is their priority is providing profitable opportunities for corporations. That is why the Massachusetts State legislature won't simply give UMass enough funding for all of our needs, but will instead place us in a position where we must attract funding from the private sector, while simultaneously giving Fidelity a $5 billion tax cut. This is not a matter of money, it is out there for sure; it is a matter of how they spend it, and they will do as they please until we tell them otherwise.

Letters to the Editor

No doubting No Doubt

To the Editor:

Although I am glad someone wrote about the decline of quality in today's media, I am disappointed that Evan Young decided to pick on No Doubt, and even compare the group and Gwen Stefani with the Spice Girls. I won't deny that some of the songs on No Doubt's album, Tragic Kingdom, lack much substance. But Evan, perhaps you haven't heard their best song, "Don't Speak." How can you not like that song? I bet even the Pimp Daddy likes that song. You must admit that it does have some nice musical qualities about it. If you can't, then you have no business critiquing music.

I heard that song, and liked it immediately, without even considering Stefani's "sexy" stomach. And it's not sexy. She's not that attractive. Gwen can choose to wear whatever she likes. She doesn't wear what she does to allure boys. No Doubt "sells" because people like the songs they hear on the radio.

Perhaps in another article, you can discuss radio's influence on record sales. If you still think that Gwen Stefani and her stomach are selling No Doubt's CD's, then I have one question for you, Evan: Why do so many people of the female gender like No Doubt? And I don't think they all find her sexually attractive. It's fun music, that's all. The rest of the article was excellent, by the way.

Like what?

C. Taylor Connor

I can't say I wasn't warned about "like."

We were in fourth grade, and we were sore afraid. Afraid of the legendary disciplinarian who stood between us and fifth grade matriculation.

Afraid of a man called Koch (pronounced "Cook," incidentally, for all fans of UMass soccer or former New York City mayors).

He was the type of guy who made you eat your PB&J sandwiches despite the daily batterings that usually reduced them to a sticky-sweet primordial slush. When an adult entered the classroom, the Koch rules demanded you respectfully rise from your seat. And, most of all, the thing worse than tossing a gaggle of Gremlins in the swimming pool, was the growingly popular usage of "like" as sentence filler.

God save your sorry hide if you used "like" in its improper, Jeff Spicoli–esque context. If there was one mistake all of us struggled valiantly not to make in the presence of Gerry Koch, it was this one — but it was so hard at the time. We'd been trained to say "Pardon?," "Sorry?" or "Excuse me?" rather than the socially inappropriate and rudely blunt, "What?," but to discontinue peppering our speech with our beloved "like" was inconceivable.

It was so difficult for some of us that when called upon unexpectedly in class, we would often inadvertently spout out an odd neologism — "lum," the bastard offspring of "like" and the "um" we'd clumsily insert in our always self- conscious phrasing.

At the time, "like" was at the core of the "Square Pegs" influenced speech pattern of the day. None of us 10-year-olds could even comprehend why this old fogy would so desire to squash our linguistic tic. It was, much like Michael Jackson's Thriller, a pop cultural phenomenon that seemed to know no crossover boundaries.

And like Michael Jackson himself, in retrospect, perhaps it became a bit too attached to youth.

By the time I had completed my first week of college classes, I can recall thinking that usage of the word more than five times in one sentence should automatically prompt an instructor to drop the user's letter grade by a third.

The gratingly gratuitous overuse of "like" that could induce insta-wince in Mr. Koch had now begun to work its evil magic on me, magic more irritating than that of David Copperfield. I almost thought about calling my former teacher and apologizing for my each and every uttering of the word — but quickly realized I might have to stay in school for a fifth–year if I did so.

Since my former classmates and I were systematically deprogrammed over 10 years ago, I guess I was never fully aware of the far–reaching and prolific nature of "like–oids." When I found myself pining for the stammering idiocy of "lum" after a short time at UMass, I had to take some course of action to alleviate this burning aural tension.

So I made a few games of listening to my afflicted University peers, the best of which seemed to occur in sociology classes — shocker, huh? From the most deeply slurred and often quite literally half–baked neo–hippies to the white–hatted legions of narrow–minded Gingrichian conservatives, everybody seems to have an opinion they're ready, willing and dying to voice. Thus, the environment is perfectly dandy for my studies in "likeology."

Although I've probably developed at least 10 different means of likeological entertainment, there are two I especially relish. The first involves counting how long a student can speak before a "like" slips into the sentence — some folks don't even last one second, as they habitually preface their every phrase with the "I" word.

A simple variation on this game that makes it a tad more enjoyable is to count the number of times an individual says "like" in a sentence, or, as tends to happen in the sociology arena, tally the total number of "likes" in a long–winded, self–righteous declaration. If you're ambitious and mathematically–minded, you can even determine the "likes" per minute or sentence.

By this point, it may seem as though I have taken the elitist high ground of language, but what it really boils down to is that in an environment in which basic communication skills are imperative, it's, like, not conducive, like, to, like, hear, like, something, like, you just, like, read.

The mysterious Cosmo attraction

Bob Dunn

I don't understand.

That's all I can say, I don't understand how women whose opinions and intelligence I normally respect can wallow in tripe like Cosmopolitan magazine.

Not only is the magazine more often than not hostile or downright hateful towards men, but it panders to the worst images and negative stereotypes of women that men usually get blamed for perpetuating.

All that you need to do to check out my little claim is to take a minute to glance at the cover of the April issue of Cosmo. In the center, is some anonymous, anorexic Uber– model (who strangely enough becomes less attractive the more you look at her) and she's surrounded by the titles of the "articles" that fill the space that's left over once the ads have been inserted.

For your convenience, I've included the titles of April's cover stories with a brief commentary following. Keep in mind I am not making these articles up.

• "What men think when they first see you naked."

I've got a little hint for women who are worried about what men think when they first see a woman naked. They think one word, "Yippie." By the time a woman has consented to getting naked in front of a man, the guy will probably already have a very good idea what they're in for once all of the window dressing is gone. I feel pretty safe in saying that unless you have a previously unmentioned penis or a full–back "Born to lose" tattoo, there won't be any complaints once the disrobing starts.

• "Dating survival secrets from the women who wrote The Rules."

The women who wrote The Rules are Ellen Fien and Sherrie Schnieder and one piece of their stellar advice is that even in this day and age "Man must pursue woman." Huh? This is the sort of obsolete, archaic garbage that passes for "advice" today? The notion that a woman cannot pursue someone she's interested in was anti-quated 20 years ago, let's move on, shall we?

• "Brand–new breast implants: Softer, sexier and yes, safer."

What? Is Cosmo actually advocating elective, dangerous cosmetic surgery simply to increase the size of a woman's breasts? I've got news for anyone who might be tempted to swallow this advice. Outside of reconstructive surgery following a mastectomy, breast implants are really pretty unnecessary. The reason? Men really don't care about breast size. Shocking, but true. Bigger breasts have slightly more novelty value, but once again men aren't nearly as discriminating as Cosmo would have you believe they are. Men, more often than not are just happy to have a woman agree to go out with them in the first place, regardless of their cup size.

• "The 'Melrose Place' workout."

And here I thought that fad diets and celebrity workouts were fodder for supermarket tabloids and nothing else, whoops! Guess I was wrong. I suppose that the workout involves sleeping with everyone in your building several times trying to boost your optimum heart rate and thereby shed all that extra fat. Once the extra pounds are gone, your cup size should be smaller and then you can get one of those new, sexy implant jobs to boost your bust right back up to acceptable size. Genius!

• "Are you an emotional basket case? How to get over it."

And here, Cosmo gets to show its sensitive side. What better way to show your readers (some of whom may have actual emotional problems) that you care, then by calling them (or cornering them into calling themselves) "basket cases." Once you've humiliated them, what's the solution to their problem? Why, to just "get over it," of course! How simple! Where would these emotionally disrupted women be without the sage advice of the editors of Cosmopolitan? My guess is probably much better off.

What I wish that women would realize is that the "advice" in Cosmo is hardly that. It's the worst kind of popular tripe which manages to insult everyone's intelligence at once.

Do the editors at Cosmo really think that their audience's one goal in life is to snag a husband? And that the only way to do that is to cinch their waists, inflate their breasts and remove every last iota of free will and rational thought from their brains?

My gut instinct is that people, men and women both, have a lot more respect for women who are intelligent, articulate and secure enough in their own self–image to ignore the garbage that rolls off Cosmo's presses every month, than those who treat the information as gospel simply because it comes from a "women's" magazine.

Based on the long–term success of the magazine, however, that seems to be exactly what's happening. I just don't understand.

Opera Comes to the Mullins Center more than any form of music opera can create it brings together many of the art — harold schonberg, the new york times

jeremy brothers

With the arrival of the Netherlands' National Reisopera production of George Frederick Handel's Alcina, opera — usually considered an activity for the elite — can be experienced at a relatively inexpensive price (free for students, actually…) in a unique setting: The Mullins Center. Yes, as we speak, the Mullins Center is making preparations to host a motorcross event this weekend, but in an attempt to maintain their status as the most diverse sports arena on campus, they will bring a 400 year–old art form to life.

A product of the Italian Renaissance, the first opera was Dafne, composed by Jacabo Peri alongside Ottavio Rinuccini, a contemporary poet, in 1597. The next few years saw operas appearing all over Italy, including Peri and Rinuccini's Euridice, the music of which is the earliest surviving opera. Opera became fashionable all over Europe, while Italy remained at its heart — where many opera singers studied their craft — with notable contributions being made to the growing art form in Paris from Jean-Baptiste Lully and in London from Henry Purcell.

George Frederick Handel, a German-born composer who spent most of his life in England, is one of the few opera composers still performing today. His 46 operas were rarely performed until a continuing revival began at the turn of the 20th century. When he died at 74, he was commemorated with a burial in Westminster Abbey. Handel is commonly associated with what is called the "Baroque Period" — A style that arose from 1600 and lasted until 1750, exhibiting elaborate ornamentation.

The neglect Handel's operas have received might have something to do with his contemporaries' criticisms of poor structure of his arias, which featured long repetitions that interrupted the progress of the plot. Another reason might be that many of the male roles were written for castrati — a male singer who had been trained for the opera since his youth, when the child would be castrated to stop his voice from changing. Thankfully, the practice of castration has fallen on the wayside — an example of which can be seen in the National Reisopera's Alcina, where two of the men's (castrati) roles will be performed by women.

Alcina, loosely based upon Arisoto's Orlando Furioso takes place on a magical island — not too much of a stretch from those of Circe in The Odyssey and Prospero in The Tempest. Alcina's island becomes the site for a farcical confusion, where disguised lovers cause much confusion — a perfect plot to test the suspension of disbelief of opera fans everywhere.

This production from the Netherlands is being brought to Amherst as part of the Massachusetts International Festival of the Arts in conjunction with several other events taking place in the valley. Other events include "Schubert in Vienna," a cabaret concert at the White Church in Deerfield on April 12, at 8 p.m.; "Faustus in Africa," a modern retelling of Goethe by the South African Handspring Puppet Company at the Academy of Music on April 16, at 8 p.m.; The Comedie Francaise performs "The Theatre World of Moliere and Jouvet," on April 23 and 25 at Amherst College's Johnson Chapel at 8 p.m. and the always popular Tito Puente — the world's greatest Latin jazz percussionist — will perform at Holyoke's War Memorial Hall on April 26 at 8 p.m.

The National Reisopera will perform Handel's Alcina at the Mullins Center on April 18 at 8 p.m. and on April 20 at 1 p.m. Tickets are available at the Mullins Center Box Office, (413) 545-0505 or through Ticketmaster. Tickets are $5 for children 18 and younger and students with an I.D. Admission for UMass and Hampshire College students are free, tickets for UMass and Hampshire faculty and staff are half-price.

Is the disaster that they're running away from themselves? Elizabeth Shue and Val Kilmer in The Saint.

Kilmer's latest: Run, don't walk, away from The Saint

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

THE SAINT
Directed by Phillip Noyce
with Val Kilmer, Elizabeth Shue, Rade Serbedzija
Playing at Mt. Forms Theater

Somehow, Phillip Noyce's latest international espionage thriller — The Saint — is able to supply the viewer with a bizarre sense of uncomfortability. The film's text appears to hover over the audience, attempting to infiltrate them with a spark of intrigue, yet accomplishing nothing short of feelings of nausea and dizziness.

The Saint is not merely a bad film, in fact, it lacks the proper conventions that would constitute an even remotely watchable movie in the first place.

Noyce (Clear and Present Danger, Sliver) has created a darker persona of The Saint which was inspired by the '60's television series and a number of novels. At least Roger Moore, who played the original screened Saint, successfully balanced intelligence and wry humor to establish depth in his portrayal of Simon Templar, which is the supposed birth-name of the mysterious Saint. In Noyce's world, depth or even compassion for characters is not an issue; rather we are reduced to watching ridiculous people try to look suave from one mundane action sequence to the next.'

Yet, there is so much more to The Saint than a boring rehashed plot and unmotivated characters. In fact, these are the least of this film's problems. If it was just another awful action flick, like, let's say, Mission: Impossible, then we could just dismiss it as one more Hollywood film made for no other reason than for money. However, The Saint's problems go far beyond anything Hollywood has released in quite some time. The Saint is constructed to appear like a bad dream, hazy and disoriented, offering no particular reason for its existence. This film exemplifies the type of movie-going experience that — no lie — makes one leave the theater feeling numb and violated, or perhaps stupider than when they first entered.

Val Kilmer plays the role of the lead character void of any emotion — more like a Vulcan or a robot — than like the master thief he proclaims himself to be. He continuously changes costumes, always choosing the name of a Catholic saint as his alias — what we must assume for no other reason than because it sounds cool. His love interest, Dr. Emma Russell (Elizabeth Shue), contains all the personality in the story, but in all the wrong ways. We are supposed to believe she is a brilliant chemical scientist who has found a way to harness cold fusion. However, she is portrayed as a goofy, blond bubblehead who naively falls goo-goo for Templar and his mysterious aura.

To give a plot summary for The Saint would be giving this film more credit than it surely deserves. There was, for some strange reason, absolutely no editing done to the picture, creating an uneasy sense of tediousness in the viewing. The narrative drags along, never instilling any sense of emotional response, whether it be negative or positive. For over two hours, Templar and Russell run about the streets of Moscow being chased by the Russian mob, yet no matter how much these characters keep running, they manage to go nowhere. The Saint is Hollywood's way of proving that through proper marketing and advertising, people will go see anything. Snapcase returns with a disc worth checking out — Progression through Unlearning.

Latest Snapcase release is worthwhile

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

Snapcase
Progression Through Unlearning
Victory Records

Since their inception in the early '90s, Snapcase have been one of the fastest rising bands in the hardcore scene. Therefore, the release of Snapcase's second LP Progression Through Unlearning has easily been one of hardcore's most anticipated releases of the year.

At first glance, the biggest difference between this LP and their debut Lookingglassself is Frank Vicario replacing Scott Dressler on guitar. However, one listen to Progression Through Unlearning will prove to you that this band has undergone a major maturation process since their first LP. When listening to this album, one must understand this is not the same band who released Lookingglassself.

The biggest improvement is in the vocals of singer Daryl Taberski. Taberski's voice is full of confidence and vitality, and you can hear the emotion and energy in every word he shouts. Although Taberski is a screamer who relies on volume over melody, the fact that he doesn't sound like he's choking on glass is a nice change from the latest crop of hardcore vocalists. Taberski sounds sure of himself and brings to mind a young Lou Koller.

The production on this album is a huge improvement over Snapcase's past releases. Drummer Tim Redmond never sounded better, as his beats are crisp and lay a solid foundation for the songs. Guitarists Joe Salemi and Frank Vicario along with bassist Bob Whiteside are tighter than spandex, and give each song a nice full sound. Producer Steve Evetts has cleaned up Snapcase's sound and therefore showcases them as the excellent musicians they are.

Now for the songs. "Caboose" sets the album off in a raging manner. The song brings about images of a crowded stage, bodies flying, fingers pointing and sweat pouring from the walls — hardcore heaven. "Caboose," as well as the entire album, displays an energy and vitality never exhibited by Snapcase before. It's an important track as it clearly demonstrates the progression Snapcase has made. "Vent," with its cadence-like drumbeat, and "Breaking and Reaching" standout on this album.

Snapcase plays a style similar to what Helmet would sound like if they were on crystal meth. Every song on Progression Through Unlearning is full of the stops and gos and time changes that Helmet made famous. While the album is faster and catchier than most bands of this genre it's way too noisy for punk purists. Each song lays down a solid groove that builds in layers and then explodes in a crashing crescendo with Taberski's voice carrying it over the top.

There are two major drawbacks to this album, and both are problems akin to hardcore in general, as opposed to Snapcase specifically. Hardcore is a form of music best experienced in a live setting. While Snapcase has a good studio presence, they fall short of their awesome live shows. The second problem is that the tempo on this album rarely changes. Around "Killing Yourself to Live" and "She Suffocates" — the sixth and seventh tracks — the album begins to blend together.

Minor Threat may not have been the most original band, but Snapcase's songs are too long for that approach. One should also note that "Vent" appeared on the Anti Matter compilation and "Guilty By Ignorance" and "Breaking and Reaching" have all been in Snapcase's live rotation for quite a while.

Overall Progression Through Unlearning is an excellent album. Snapcase's positive, progressive outlook is a refreshing change of pace from most of today's hardcore bands. It's also nice to see a band build off of past releases and continue to grow — rather then resorting to heavy metal or rehashing their past works. Snapcase is an original, innovative band that maintains hardcore's energy and frenetic fun while playing a sound of their own. B+

Spring snowboarding and skiing

Join the annual spring pilgrimage of daredevil hikers, skiers, and snowboarders, on a hand-over-foot climb in Tuckerman Ravine, and experience an extreme adventure. Located on the southeast shoulder of Mt. Washington in New Hampshire's White Mountain National Forest, Tuckerman Ravine, is famous for its spectacular scenery, deep snow, and challenging terrain.

Tuckerman Ravine resembles a large bowl that collects snow blowing off the Presidential Range of the White Mountain National Forest. Unstable snow conditions and the threat of avalanches can make winter skiing and snowboarding not only unwise, but also life threatening.

Alfresco News with Liz Anderson

Tuckerman Ravine has a snow basin that averages about 55 feet and provides a unique opportunity for people to enjoy late spring skiing and snowboarding after New England's ski resorts have closed for the season.

During the end of March, Tuckerman Ravine's awesome conditions begin to invite adventure seekers to enjoy spring skiing and snowboarding until the end of May. However, Tuckerman Ravine's terrain conditions in the spring are not necessarily safe and can involve less snow, exposed rocks, and crevasses.

For the most part, skiing and snowboarding only take place in the bowel of Tuckerman Ravine, but sometimes hearty winters preserve snow conditions allowing alpine enthusiasts to ski or snowboard all the way down to the base of the mountain.

Access to skiing or snowboarding in Tuckerman Ravine requires hiking from the Pinkham Notch Visitor Center at the base of the mountain located on Route 116 (11 miles south of Gorham and 15 minutes north of Conway, N.H.). There are no ski lifts; skiers and snowboarders must climb and carry all of their equipment, food, and cold weather gear from Pinkham Notch.

While hiking up to Tuckerman Ravine it is best to wear hiking boats and carry ski boots in a frame backpack. Skis should be separated and attached to the sides of the backpack. The tips of the skis must be tied together forming a triangle over the skier's head. Snowboards should be attached to the back of a frame backpack centered in the middle of the snowboarder's back.

Once a skier or snowboarder reaches Tuckerman Ravine he/she will find a pile of large stationary boulders surrounded by snow. Known as the "lunch sticks," these boulders are snow free due to their position in the sun.

They serve as an excellent base for skiers and snowboarders to store their backpacks, change into their alpine boots, and relax before climbing up and carving down the steep walls of Tuckerman Ravine.

When skiers and snowboarders are ready to climb up the slopes of Tuckerman Ravine they must look carefully down at their route to make sure that it does not exceed their skiing/snowboarding ability. Skiers and snowboarders should be aware that in the early spring, afternoon shadows often bring icy snow conditions, which are extremely treacherous.

It is important for skiers and snowboarders to plan carving down the bowl in the morning before the slopes are in the shade. Skiers and snowboarders must always ski/snowboard under control.

"Hot-dogging" or circus skiing/snowboarding is stupid and must be avoided in Tuckerman Ravine. Reckless conduct not only endangers the skier/snowboarder, but also other people in Tuckerman Ravine.

Never ski or snowboard if visibility is poor. Crevasses, rocks, other people, and falling ice are difficult to see in fog or low light. Tuckerman Ravine is notorious for its unpredictable weather and has injured and killed numerous foolish alpine climbers, skiers, and snowboarders.

Beware of the weather's erratic trends. Although it might feel like spring at Pinkham Notch (the base of Tuckerman Ravine), winter-like conditions occur all year long on the mountain.

Even if it is clear and sunny in Tuckerman Ravine, skiers and snowboarders must be prepared that conditions in the bowl can change quickly, and become extremely severe. Weather information is available at the Androscoggin Ranger Station, Pinkham Notch Visitor Center, and the Hermit Lake caretaker's building.

For current information about snow and weather conditions contact the Androscoggin Ranger District at (603) 466-2725. Hike, ski, or snowboard in one of New England's only glaciers. Test your athletic agility and take part in an intense tradition at Tuckerman Ravine.

The sounds of Mandela, and more

Documentary filmmaker Jo Menell's newest movie, Mandela: Son of Africa, Father of a Nation follows the acclaimed leader of post-Apartheid South Africa through the days leading up to his election. Attention also flashes back to flesh out a biography of Mandela from his birth as Rolihlahla Dalibunga Madiba Mandela, child of Xhosa nobles to his later movement through the ranks of the African National Congress, imprisonment, and eventual freedom.

Island Records has released a soundtrack to the film that reveals some interesting jazz and popular sounds from the '50s, a couple of traditional pieces, and a few lamentable modern pop songs, the worst of which seems to have been composed specifically for the film. However, over the whole album an impression develops that may approximate an overview of urban South African music in this half of the century.

A lot of the music you'll find here is of that great modern American form, jazz. From the smooth textbook swing of The Skylarks, to the cool sounds of The Manhattan Brothers, this is the music that a young Mandela was grooving to in his early years. And it's full of a life and happiness that glows despite the atrocious social divisions and oppression of his land at the time it was recorded.

On the second half of the CD, some vocal choir music can be heard, most notably the excellent "Toyi Toyi Mix" from the African National Congress Choir. There are also a number of short pieces composed for the film which break up some of the modern pop that takes over from the earlier jazz tunes. It's sad that these original score cuts are so short, because they really stand out and are often better than the longer songs around them.

As the music becomes more pop-oriented it also starts to express more of South Africa's indigenous musical heritage. While some songs, such as The Specials' "Nelson Mandela" and Vusi Mahlasela's "When You Come Back", use the disappointingly familiar keyboard sounds of early '90s cheesmo-ballads, they paradoxically step onto more independent, African melodic turf. Several tracks here happily do stay clear of the annoying keyboards, most notably the CD's final cut, the moving "Black President" by Brenda Fassie.

Overall, this album is an interesting document of Apartheid and post-Apartheid South Africa's musical directions. It also makes for some good listening. Too bad a few bad tunes get in the way at times. B-

• A new world music label, Alula Records, has taken off running with its first two releases.

Voices, the first, presents searingly gorgeous and high-flying vocal work from luminaries like The Bulgarian Voices (formerly Le Mystere des Voix Bulgare) and famed Tuvans Huun-Huur-Tu, as well as powerful artists Hamlet Gonashvili (former member of the much-praised Georgian ensemble The Rustavi Choir, now sadly deceased) Earborn, Mikhail Alperin, Sarband, Trinivox, and Tam Echo Tam.

Often blending vocal styles from several regions into viable and potent hybrids, these artists all have their feet firmly rooted in tradition. But tradition isn't something pure and unchanging — tradition is constantly being created and reinterpreted. These musicians know it and do it. B+

• The second Alula release is Jucal, by renowned flamenco guitarist Gerardo Nuñez. Flamenco, so dark and moving, flows uninhibited through Nuñez's guitar. Although he takes on a couple of tangos here ("Isa" and "Marquez de Porrina"), Nuñez clearly delves into heady mysteries on his bulerias — especially "El Duendecillo" — and it's here that we can share with him the treasures he finds. The album's final track, "A la Nana" is an 11-minute lullaby that is wrenchingly gentle and viciously soft. Potent stuff. A.

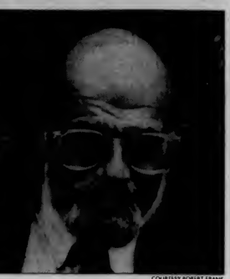
Buddhist memorial for Ginsberg

By Verena Dobnik
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Beat Generation poet Allen Ginsberg was remembered Monday by several hundred shoeless mourners who sat on pillows surrounding his coffin in a ceremony that combined elements of Buddhism and Judaism.

"There is no birth and no cessation," they chanted as gongs were struck, bells chimed and incense burned during a four-hour service led by a high priest at a Buddhist meditation center.

Kaddish, the Jewish prayer for the dead, was read in Hebrew.



Ginsberg had liver cancer and died of a heart attack Saturday at 70. Though born to Jewish parents, he was a Buddhist, beginning each day with a contemplative exercise followed by a hot cup of tea with lemon.

Punk poet Patti Smith sat crouched by Ginsberg's feet, his closed coffin draped with a yellow, red, blue and white silk flag bearing the image of the sun, a symbol of the Shambhala Buddhist community. Kurt Vonnegut also attended.

Ginsberg's remains were to be cremated.

Ginsberg shattered conventions as poet laureate of the Beat Generation in the 1950s and influenced the next four decades of art, music and politics. Followers included Abbie Hoffman and Bob Dylan, as well as Generation X-ers who listened to him recite his poetry on MTV.

In 1956, he published the groundbreaking poem "Howl!" The work dealt graphically with Ginsberg's homosexuality and communist upbringing, and shocked the Eisenhower '50s. Another of Ginsberg's best-known works, "Kaddish," dealt with his mother's life and death in a mental hospital.

Polling parents on TV ratings system

By Jeannane Aversa
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — The TV industry will ask parents whether major changes should be made to the 3-month-old ratings system, Jack Valenti the executive who oversaw its creation, said Monday.

Ranging from "TV-G" for all audiences to "TV-MA," mature audiences only, the voluntary ratings have been under a barrage of criticism from lawmakers and children's advocacy groups for not providing parents with enough detailed information about shows' sexual, violent and language content.

Valenti, who also is president of the Motion Picture Association of America, made his remarks in an interview at the National Association of Broadcasters convention here.

Public Opinion Strategies and pollster Peter Hart will jointly interview more than 1,000 randomly selected parents beginning next month.

But Valenti wouldn't say what results would trigger major changes to the six-tier, age-based ratings that went into effect Jan. 1.

"Is it 51 percent or 64 percent? I don't know," he said. "There's no line in the sand."

Other studies say parents want more detailed ratings than the movie-like ones now in use.

Later, in prepared remarks to the convention, Valenti said: "I have said publicly that we are flexible about changing the guidelines. But we have no intention of making large revisions, unless and until the parents of America tell us they want a change."

In addition to the polls, Valenti said the TV industry would be talking to the nation's roughly 1,600 TV stations to get parental feedback on the ratings' effectiveness.

Despite critics' complaints about the ratings, Valenti said in the interview, "I'm confident that what we're doing is right and useful... It's very easy to criticize."

In his prepared remarks, Valenti said: "Our system is not designed for Congress or advocacy groups. Our aim is to make our guidelines helpful to real parents. They and they alone are the final arbiters of its worth."

Responding to critics, some executives of Fox, cable leaders and some trade association officials have been floating the notion of adding "V," "S" and "L" to existing ratings to note violence, sex and language that some may consider offensive.

The Senate Commerce Committee chairman, Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) has signaled that unless the industry acts on its own, he will move forward on legislation that would require the TV industry to provide more-detailed ratings.

Valenti said he has briefed McCain about the industry's polling plans. "He gave no assurances or quid pro quos," Valenti said.

Red Sox suffer early season loss to A's

By Rob Gloster
Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — A 4:45 a.m. wakeup call. A flight delayed 3 1/2 hours by fog in frozen Colorado Springs. A missed connection in Phoenix. And, finally, a win for the Oakland Athletics.

"It's been a wild day, an interesting day," said Aaron Small, who arrived just in time to pitch the A's to a 4-3 win yesterday over the Boston Red Sox. "That's OK, this is supposed to be exciting."

Geronimo Berroa hit his fourth homer and Scott Brosius drove in the winning run with a bases-loaded walk in the 10th inning. Small (1-0), promoted from Edmonton of the Pacific Coast League earlier in the day, pitched one inning for the win. Rick Trlicek (2-2) was the loser.

Small found out Tuesday night, while playing cards and eating pizza, that he was joining the A's. His Edmonton team was playing in Colorado Springs, so he awoke before dawn yesterday to catch a flight to Oakland.

But the 6:40 a.m. flight was grounded for 3 1/2 hours by fog, and he missed his connection in Phoenix. He sprinted to get another flight, and arrived at the Oakland Coliseum at 1:30 p.m. — the end of the fifth inning.

Fueled by the peanuts he munched while on the plane, Small borrowed a glove from Willie Adams and grabbed a pair of spikes. "They said to go ahead and stretch and be ready. I was running around like a chicken with its head cut off," he said.

Small pitched a perfect top of the 10th. With one out in the bottom of the inning, Ernie Young walked and Scott Spiezio bounced a one-hopper over the head of first baseman Mo Vaughn for a double. George Williams walked to load the bases before Trlicek got pinch-hitter Matt Stairs on a short fly to center.

But Brosius, who earlier in the game got his first RBI of the season on a sacrifice fly, walked on a 3-1 pitch to drive in the winning run.

"I thought he looked tired in the last inning. He just looked like he was laboring and working to throw strikes," Brosius said of Trlicek. "I'm definitely up there with the idea of making him throw me a strike. I just wanted to make him work as hard as he had to."

Trlicek appeared in five of Boston's eight games on the season-opening road trip that ended yesterday.

"You give what you've got left. Yeah, I was tired, but I can pitch tired. It comes with the job," he said. "I want to be in those situations. It's what I live for."

Reggie Jefferson had a two-run double and Nomar Garciaparra added an RBI single for the Red Sox, who went 4-4 on the road trip. Mark McGwire had an RBI double for Oakland. Berroa, who also doubled in the fourth, is hitting .433 this season with a .933 slugging percentage.

Vaughn went 0-for-5 and his average dropped to .207 as the Red Sox headed to Boston for their home opener Friday.

"I'm glad to be going home," Vaughn said. "I've been hitting the ball hard this whole trip, but I don't have too much to show for it."

A's starter Steve Karsay allowed one run and seven hits in six innings. Aaron Sele allowed two runs on six hits in six innings for Boston.

Notes: All of the A's wins this season have come in the seventh inning or later... The Red Sox signed designated hitter Jefferson to a $6.6 million, two-year contract extension that will keep him with the club through 1999... The A's starting rotation is the only one in the AL without a win... Garciaparra stole second in the fifth inning, making him 7-for-7 on steals in his major-league career... The A's placed left-hander Billy Brewer on the disabled list with an inflamed ulnar nerve in his left elbow and purchased the contract of Small from Edmonton.

Hornets sting Celtics for 50th win

By Joe Macenka
Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The Charlotte Hornets would have you believe they're not the least bit impressed with winning 50 games. "It's definitely not at the top of the list. It's just a small goal," Anthony Mason said. "To shock some people in the playoffs and go deep, maybe even go all the way — that would be the biggest goal."

A 136-111 victory over the Boston Celtics yesterday night gave the Hornets 50 victories for the second time in the franchise's nine-year history.

"In my mind that definitely wasn't a goal," said Glen Rice, who led Charlotte with 29 points. "I've always expected us to do much better than that. From day one I've really felt that we were going to have a special season. Just because we're at 50, I don't want the team to get satisfied and relax. Our goal is to go into the playoffs and get as far as possible."

Rice, who sat out the final 13-plus minutes, was one of six Charlotte players to score in double figures as the Hornets recorded the highest point total by any team in the NBA this season. Charlotte's output surpassed that of the Chicago Bulls, who scored 134 in a Feb. 18 victory over Denver.

The Hornets made a franchise-record 15 3-point attempts and built a 25-point edge after three quarters and went on to their widest margin of victory this season.

Rookie Tony Delk had 18 of his season-high 25 points in the fourth quarter as the Hornets improved to 50-26. The only other time Charlotte won as many games was when the 1994-95 team went 50-32.

"We want to win more," first-year coach Dave Cowens said. "And this team believes it can do some damage in the playoffs. Nobody really knows what we're all about to a certain degree because we haven't been healthy with this particular roster ever during the season."

Mason is the latest example of Charlotte's injury problems. He returned to the lineup last night after spending seven games on the injured list recovering from a partially torn tendon in his right arch. He played 37 minutes, made four of 10 field-goal attempts and wound up with eight points, 15 rebounds, six assists and four turnovers.

"I felt a little winded and my shot was rusty," said Mason, who missed six of his 10 field-goal attempts. "It will take a few more games before I get back into things."

Charlotte, which has clinched no worse than the sixth seed in the Eastern Conference playoff bracket, made 59 percent of its field-goal attempts. That included a 71-percent showing — 15-of-21 — from 3-point range.

"The 3-point shooting for the Hornets was astounding," Boston coach M.L. Carr said. "When they start shooting the ball that well, you know it's going to be a tough game."

The Celtics, who lost their 10th consecutive game, came in with five players on the injured list, and three more were unable to play. Rick Fox has the flu, Dee Brown a sore right big toe and Eric Williams a bruised right knee.

Boston's thinned ranks showed most in bench scoring, where Charlotte had a 49-25 advantage in sending the Celtics to their ninth straight loss on the road.

Antoine Walker had 32 points and Todd Day added 24 for the Celtics, who fell behind by as many as 33.

"The job we did on defense is not how we want to finish the season," Carr said, "so we're going to keep pushing."

Softball and soccer roll; lacrosse club takes three

Sports Briefs needs submissions to stay alive. This column features the work of UMass' non-varsity athletes and it depends on the contributions of those very people.

Submissions to Sports Briefs, which runs every Thursday, can be dropped off at the Collegian before noon on Wednesday. Submissions can also be faxed to 545-1592.

If there are any questions concerning Sports Briefs, call co-Sports editors Casey Kane or Chris Stamm at 545-0719.

Intramurals underway

The UMass Intramural softball season is underway. The games, which begin at 5 p.m. and run through 8 p.m., are held on the Boyden lower fields.

The recent weather problems have forced over 100 intramural softball and 35 soccer games to be rescheduled.

• Volleyball Special has begun its season in the main Boyden gym, with games at 6 p.m. Mondays and Tuesdays and 6:45 p.m. on Thursdays.

• There is still time to enter the tennis doubles tournament, World Cup soccer and Ultimate frisbee. Entries are due April 14, with play beginning April 25. Call the Intramural Office at 545-2693 for more information.

• For information about all workout facilities, call the 24-hour facility schedule at 545-2693.

Lacrosse successful despite sloppy conditions

The UMass lacrosse club has been hard at work in the mud and frigid wind, but that hard work has been rewarded with three wins.

Victories over UConn, Keene State and Williams have brought the UMass team's record to 3-2. The team continued its season yesterday against the Army junior varsity squad. Results were not available at press time.

The team's success has started in net and carried forward to the offense. Mike Nolan has been a wall in the UMass goal-mouth, and the skills of defenders Paul Barron, Erik Becker and David Dyer have triggered the offense during the recent winning campaign.

Brendan Keenan has been a vacuum for groundballs, while midfielders John Soares, Mike Dyer, Jason McKentie and Tim Mooney have been solid as well.

On attack, Jude Costello, Trevor Spiers and Dan Seideman have all been key finishers for Judy Dietel's squad.

For information about the UMass men's lacrosse club, contact Dietel at 545-3815.

Sports Briefs was compiled by Collegian staff member Casey Kane.

DePina signs with UM as letter makes it official

The Massachusetts men's basketball team announced today that South Boston guard Jonathan DePina has signed a national letter of intent to play for the Minutemen next year.

The 5-foot-10 DePina played for Bill Loughane this year at South Boston, and led his team to an 18-5 record. Averaging 26 points, 6 rebounds and 4 steals a game in his senior season, he garnered his second selection to the Boston Globe's Fab Five team. He was also honored on the Boston Herald's Dream Team twice and was a four-time All-City league pick.

DePina started every game of his career at South Boston and finished with more than 1,800 career points. His point total included a 48-point outing against Bishop Fenwick.

"Jonathan gives us a pure point guard who has the ability to score and distribute the basketball," UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "He is an exciting young player who makes good things happen on the court and will be fun for our fans to watch. I'm hoping he can come in and push our older guys and help us get better that way."

DePina will join former South Boston backcourtmate Monty Mack at UMass. The two led the high school to a pair of state titles during the 1994-95 and 1995-96 seasons.

The official signing gives Flint two recruits for the upcoming season, as Rafeal Cruz committed to the Minutemen during the fall signing period.

It is safe to say that Norman's odds are that low because he has to win sometime, and the bookies don't want to lose a whole lot of money once he finally does. But in Norman's lengthy career the jacket seems to be getting more and more elusive every time around. Every year though, we always seem to say, 'this could finally be the year.'

Woods has so far proven he can play with the big boys. After finishing an impressive 22nd in the U.S. Open last year as an amateur, he is ready to show the world he can win the whole tamale as a professional. He has three amateur titles under his belt, more than any other golfer in history, but now everyone wants to see what he can do in the real major tournaments.

Tom Lehman, a clutch pick to take the sportcoat, is another golfer to look out for. He placed third on the probable winner chart behind Faldo and Woods, tied with Norman at 8-1 odds. He has been overshadowed by Woods since last year, but no one puts together a more consistent four rounds than Lehman.

Phil Mickelson, who recently became the youngest golfer to win 10 tournaments, is another prodigy to watch this weekend, as he tries to show the golfing audience that Tiger is not the only good young golfer out there (he currently stands at 10-1 odds). The 26-year-old Mickelson's only problem lies in his swing. He's a lefty, which poses a problem. Augusta National was designed to favor righties (if it favors anybody) and Phil will have his hands full this weekend, trying to cut the ball on the dangerous doglegs.

Most of the viewers are keying in on Wood's performance this weekend, to see whether or not the 21-year-old can achieve such a lofty goal — a major tournament victory. It would surprise this sportswriter if he achieves a position higher than fifth place come Sunday.

The Masters calls for the best, and without question Woods is one of them, but beginners luck doesn't come into play on the slopes of Augusta.

Undoubtedly, the Cinderella Story starring Tiger Woods is what everyone is watching this year. It has been predicted that this year's Masters will host the youngest crowd ever to witness a major event

Criticism has risen since the arrival of Woods. Golfers have expressed their unhappiness due to the diarespect given by the youthful crowds. (Those damn Generation X people.) The faithful "I'm Tiger Woods" crowd that follow the Stanford alum from hole to hole, sporting Nike apparel. It is said they are loud, obnoxious and do not follow proper golf etiquette while viewing a match. Could it be that Woods is not only changing the actual game of golf, but the entire perception of the sport?

Faldo may be the favorite to win, coming off of last year's victory, but who is to say who will slide into first this year? He's a steady European player who will be in the thick of it come Sunday afternoon.

Norman should be the man. The one who has to fight off all the demons in his head in order to focus on the business at hand.

• Getting on with it:

So after all these predictions, who's it going to be this year? Faldo, Norman, Woods, Lehman, Mickelson? Weighing the competition, it will most likely be the Woods and Norman show. The most successful golfer for the last 10 years, and likely the best golfer for the next 20.

This year could also present the thickest field in recent memory, with golfers flocking from all over the world — Bernard Langer, Steve Ballesteros, Nick Price, Ian Woosnan, and Ernie Els.

Maybe the green jacket isn't that ugly after all.

Jonathan M. Place is a Collegian columnist.

Michigan–Indiana game on CBS. Michigan was up late, but the Wolverines choked.

A. J. Guyton drained two clutch three-pointers to tie it up and the Hoosiers went on to steal one, 84-81 in overtime, at Crisler Arena.

So, as its team walked off its home court dejected and Sean McDonough signed off, the Michigan hoop band drummed up the school fight song. Which leads me to ask, if your fight song is named "Hail to the victors!" why do you play it after your team loses ugly?

Hail! To the victors valiant!
Hail! To the conquering heros!
Hail! Hail! To Indiana??????
The leaders and the best!

• This had to be mentioned somewhere and there just aren't enough other Collegian sports writers clamoring to get Garth Brooks FleetCenter tickets to notice or care. On Mar. 29, Dick Trickle won a Busch Grand National race.

The 1988 NASCAR Winston Cup Rookie of the Year, at age 48, still has yet to win a Winston Cup race, and this was his first BGN crown. Trickle's Dura-Lube-Chevy looked like Cole Trickle's Mello Yellow-Chevy from Days of Thunder, blazing around Hickory Motor Speedway the day before Easter in the Galaxy Foods 300.

With one of the greatest names in sports history, Trickle has long been a favorite of ESPN's SportsCenter staff, the big show's Keith Olberman and Dan Patrick in particular, who revel in his weekly 28th place finishes.

Now if the Wisconsinite could only beat Rusty Wallace and not just Randy LaJoie.

• The Red Sox have four wins so far this year, while the Yankees only have three entering last night's contest against the Angels. Life's been good to me so far.

• Always a fan of classic old-timers, it was nice to see that the Chicago Cubs signed journey-man catcher Crash Davis, Kevin Costner's character from Bull Durham, the other day. They had themselves a natural disaster at Turner Field the other night when the sprinklers magically turned on during a game against the Braves. It might have been funny for the UMass softball team, which had the same thing happen to it in Florida last year, but it was hardly funny for the poor Cubbies who have sucked with the force of a black hole in the early going.

In the scene from part of baseball movies' holy trinity with Major League and Field of Dreams, Davis said that "sometimes you win, sometimes you lose, and sometimes it rains." Opening their season with 12-straight against Florida and Atlanta, the 0-7 Cubs might have to make a deal with Monty Hall to see what's behind door number one in the foreseeable future.

• Trivia answer: In 1979 Sortino replaced embattled Boston College Athletic Director Chet Gladchuk, who led the team to a 26-2-1 mark.

• Please explain to me how North Carolina is ranked No. 16 in the college lacrosse poll with a 2-6 record, and only dropped two spots after losing 20-5 at Virginia on Saturday.

• While the Bruins and Celtics will probably both finish dead last, it's good to see some things never change. WWII veteran George Bush commemorated Pearl Harbor Day on Sept. 8, not Dec. 8, en route to getting clobbered by Bill Clinton in the 1992 election. Making an appearance in Milwaukee during the hockey final four, Bush was asked on the eve of the BU-North Dakota championship game for his prediction, and said that he liked Michigan.

I wonder how he spells potato.

his offensive production.

"The main thing we count on Muchie for is offense," Stone said. "He's improved his defense over the last two years, and he's a solid defensive player."

The 1997 Minutemen haven't started as hot as last year's club, but Dagliere says the potential is there.

"This year's team is a lot different than last year. This year we have so many aspects that we can take advantage of. We have so much speed, and lately we've shown we have some power. Our offense and defense, from the players' perspective, is pretty solid.

"Especially this year, because of our reputation, every team is going to come after us," Dagliere said. "They're going to throw their ace, they're going to have their best lineup in all the time, and that's when our pitchers have to step up and realize that they're going to have their best people in all the time because they want to beat us, they want to knock us off. They want to say that they beat UMass, because that says something for them."

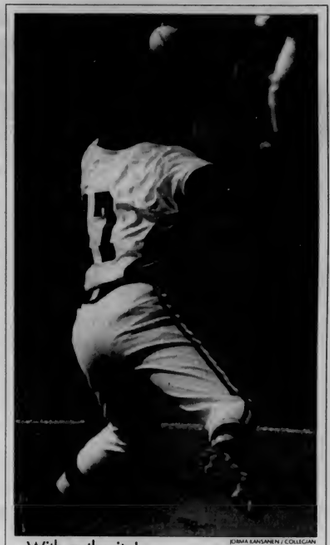
Last year's trip to the NCAA Regionals in Florida was a groundbreaking achievement for UMass baseball, one that Dagliere says this year's team can build on.

"We learned [at the Regionals] that if we play well we can beat anybody. We learned that we can keep up with anyone. After that week in Florida, we learned that we can play with anyone, we just have to bring that to the field every day."

For all of Dagliere's baseball skills, there's also quite a hockey player dying to get out. He scored 50 goals and added 60 assists at Taft High School in Connecticut, where he was a baseball teammate of current UMass pitcher Scott Barnaby. But a shoulder injury and some coaxing from his high school baseball coach — who happened to be Stone's father — directed him to UMass.

"Hockey's my first love, and it always will be. I went to prep school for hockey. [But] my baseball coach at Taft was coach Stone's father, and he guided me more towards baseball," Dagliere said. "I was looking at some schools to play hockey, but I hurt my shoulder midway through my senior year, which ended everything for hockey, and I signed early at UMass.

"I'd love play hockey here, but coach Stone says don't even think about it," Dagliere joked.



Stone might have some trouble stomaching the thought of his All-Conference second baseman playing hockey, considering his value to the Minutemen.

"Muchie's a positive influence on the ballclub," Stone said. "He's a leader in his own way, by what he does on the field."

rest of the Minutemen, reaching base six times, with three walks, two singles and a double.

Muchie Dagliere once again performed flawlessly in the field today for UMass, assisting on seven defensive plays, while putting out three Blue Devils. Along with his defensive play, he went 1-for-3, with an RBI and two runs.

Clark hammered another scud over the fences at Lorden yesterday, while batting 2-for-6, with six RBIs and scoring three times. Brian Semela went 3-for-3 and reached base six times on 3 singles. He had three RBIs and two walks and was hit in the foot by a pitch.

"As long as we execute, we are capable of winning," Stone said.

"Hey, Phil, bring the net. This woman just picked little Jerry, the orphan with the deformed claw that all the other lobsters pick on."

ARIES
March 21–April 20
Get your exercise and diet program back in shape, but don't neglect your reading. Taking a class or hitting the library could pay dividends. You'll have to dig to find the answers to a nagging question, but it's worth it. Putting your thoughts on paper helps you analyze options.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
It may be just the right time to treat yourself to a small indulgence but be careful not to overspend. Watch for bargains. Sending back your pizza now could work out better while saving time and money. A loved one will go along with your plans if you explain things.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
Your thoughts and intuition are on target. You know just the questions to ask to get the answers you need. You'll be able to see and understand things that others don't. An old friend comes back into the picture and could help behind the scenes. Keep an eye on expenses.

CANCER
June 22–July 22
Paperwork could be a problem so resolve to look over things carefully and read between the lines. This may be the time to call in a professional or get a second opinion. Be receptive to off-beat ideas or suggestions—they could pay off big. Visit a friend or family member you haven't seen in a while.

LEO
July 23–August 23
Working with a group leads to greater productivity and accomplishment for you. Your leadership abilities come through, and you'll discover you're pretty good at resolving disputes and getting people to work together. Other people appreciate your efforts, and you'll get the credit that's due.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22
Job pressures increase, but you'll be able to handle them because a family or home crisis is resolved to your satisfaction. Money concerns also clear up and you'll come out ahead. Keep your focus and don't get rattled; a slow and steady pace gets the best results. Watch your back at work.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23
Get an early start on things and you'll have plenty of time for rest and relaxation. Don't get caught in the workaholic game with a friend or family member—forgive and forget. You could be doing some traveling soon, but stay off the beaten path. Insights and attractions can be found everywhere!

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22
A long awaited project gets started at last. Progress seems slow but things really are moving along nicely. Rely on a friend or coworker's knowledge and talents to keep things in perspective. You know what needs to be done and how to do it. Slow, steady progress works best.

SAGITTARIUS

Minuteman batters sharp as UMass batters Central Connecticut

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

After dropping two to Dayton, and just squeezing out a victory over the Friars of Providence on Tuesday, it would be safe to say that the Massachusetts baseball team (12–6, 3– 3 A–10) was looking forward to the match–up against overmatched Central Connecticut State.

Massachusetts	20
Central Conn.	1

The Blue Devils (12–7, 3–1 Mid–Continent Conference), having played as many games in as many days as the Minutemen, had sucked its pitching staff dry, due to conference competition, and had to start centerfielder Ryan Solesky (0–1) on the mound of Earl E. Lorden Field.

The four walks that Solesky surrendered in the first inning set the tone for the rest of the game, and UMass rolled to a 20–1 victory.

"We looked sharp," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "If we're sharp, we're going to win most games."

Northampton native Adam Robinson (1–0) started and picked up his first win of the season. He also collected five strikeouts, which is the most strikeouts that any one Minutemen pitcher has accumulated this season. It also ties Robinson's career high in strikeouts, which he also recorded against CCSU last April.

"I pitched well," Robinson said. "I was excited to pitch, and things worked out. The umpires were consistent, I had movement on my change–up for the first time all year, and I kept my pitches down."

The right–handed sophomore allowed only one hit, an opposite field homerun by CCSU's Jamie Palmese. That blast in the top of the fourth was the only stroke of luck the Blue Devils received.

This mid–week victory was key in Stone's eyes, as it was important to get a strong outing from his starting pitcher.

"He did a good job, dealing with the conditions," Stone said. "He was consistent. He kept his pitches down. His change–up was looking good."

It was an impressive win for Robinson, who battled the sub–springtime temperatures and picked up his first win since beating the Blue Devils last season.

Coming in for Robinson after five innings was another sophomore in Rich Hartman. Hartman was flawless in the last four innings, giving up no runs on two hits, with three K's and no walks.

The Minutemen got on the board early, scoring five runs in the first inning, in which Solesky walked four of UMass' first six batters.

In the fourth, the Minutemen did a number on the lefty, posting four runs off of Doug Clark's rip into right field. An error by CCSU's rightfielder on the play carried Clark all the way to third base, clearing the previously filled bases.

It was more than enough for UMass' pitching staff, and Clark's three–run blast in the fifth just put icing on the cake.

From the sixth on, the Minutemen took advantage of the fatigued arms of the Blue Devils and scattered seven runs throughout the lineup. Pete Gautreau's two run homerun in the eighth finished off the scoring for UMass.

The hitting department, which took the Blue Devils weakened pitching staff to school, was led by third baseman Adam Correa, who went 3–for–5, with two RBI while scoring four times. The sophomore from Amherst, who is filling the gap at third left by Bryan Mazzaferro (out with a broken foot) came up big for Stone and the

Something for all, from Cubs to D. Trickle

There's something odd on the results sheet for the Harvard softball team that the University of Massachusetts will face today. I thought I'd heard of just about every school there is out there, and then last year St. Joseph's went out and beat Madonna College. The Hawks pounded the Material Girls who took their beating with dignity, saying "don't cry for me, Argentina."

Now this. In between Santa Clara

Is this a team or a microbrew in Madison? Sounds like something you'd order, "hey bartender, give me a Wisconsin Stout." If a finely–poured Guinness Stout is the nectar of the Gods, then Wisconsin–Stout must be the nectar of the cheeseheads.

And, just for laughs, Gillen on PC fans when his team's losing...

Minuteman baseball is now his first love

Second baseman Dagliere shining

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

All you need to know about Muchie Dagliere is tattooed on his right arm.

Right above the bicep, below the shoulder, the junior Massachusetts second baseman has a tattoo of a baseball, with his No. 7 at the top and the "UMass" logo at the bottom. Dagliere got it during last season, a season in which the Minutemen won 40 games and made it to the NCAA East Regional Finals, two games away from the College World Series.

For someone who could go down as one of the greatest players in the history of Massachusetts baseball, it is a permanent reminder of not only what he means to the UMass baseball team, but what UMass baseball means to him.

"I got the tattoo because basically, for my whole time at UMass, baseball has been my life, and the memories of UMass baseball I'll have for the rest of my life," Dagliere said. "Everything about last season, the 18–game winning streak, the 13–12 game against South Florida [in the Regionals], just everything going well. I'll always remember UMass baseball, and [The tattoo] seemed like a perfect symbol for that."

Dagliere has anchored second base for the Minutemen since the first day he set foot on Earl E. Lorden Field as a freshman two seasons ago. A 5–foot–7 junior from North Haven, Conn., Dagliere put up the offensive numbers in his first two seasons to warrant all the pre–season hype he's received. He hit .343 his freshman year, with eight homers, 38 RBIs and 50 runs scored, only to follow it up with a sophomore season in which he hit .415, good for 23rd in the nation, with 53 RBIs and a UMass–record 81 hits. He also garnered All Atlantic 10 honors.

Coming into this season, Dagliere was named A–10 Pre– season Player of the Year, and was being touted as an All– American candidate. But according to him, the hype really doesn't mean that much.

"There's pressure every game, but I try not to think about it. It's not a big deal. I still have to go out there and play the game just like everyone else if I want to earn that respect," Dagliere said.

Offense has always been the name of Dagliere's game, and this season has been more of the same. He's back up to a .403 average, with three homers and 19 RBIs in 17 games. He's been hitting in the No. 3–spot all year, but Dagliere isn't your prototypical three hitter.

"My job is to hit line drives and get people over. I'm not a home run hitter. I'm a line drive hitter, and I get the ball where it has to be hit. I'm kind of a table–setter in [UMass coach Mike Stone's] eyes."

Dagliere was a shortstop in high school until his senior year, but switched to second when he realized that's what he'd play in college. It was a move Dagliere didn't warm to immediately.

"I struggled during my freshman year, especially turning double plays. I wasn't ready for this level defensively. But it's during the winter when we practice in the gym, that's when everything becomes fluent," he said.

"I wasn't worried about the offense at this level, it was more the defense I was worried about. Last year I started to feel a lot more comfortable in the field," he said. "I wasn't as worried. It just comes with seeing ground balls and putting a lot of work into it."

While Dagliere has focused on his defensive skills, Stone has noticed

Watch for Woods, Norman and Faldo in golf's greatest

JOHNATHAN M. PLACE

There's Lord Stanley's Cup, the Vince Lombardi Trophy, glistening gold medals, and what's that you say?... A green jacket?

Yes, the ugliest award presented to any one athlete will be displayed this weekend at the Masters Championship, which just as it so happens, starts today. As usual, the majestic fairways in Augusta, Ga. will host the greatest professional golf event of the year.

• Addressing the Ball:

Last year we had the privilege of watching a rare event. A tournament that was never won (Huh!). Sure. Nick Faldo's score at the top of the charts earned him the single–breasted green trophy, but he didn't win the Masters. Nope, no one won... Greg Norman lost. (We'll just call last year a mulligan.)

He exploded from day one, scoring remarkably low for the first three days. It was in the bag for Norman, and Faldo was sitting comfortably in second place awaiting a handsome check.

But suddenly everything went wrong. (The fourth round resembled a boxing bout sponsored by Don King. It almost looked as if Norman was throwing the match.)

Not a face was smiling when the tournament came to a close, after Norman dropped from first to second, and Faldo, who made no mistakes and scored for par, took the jacket.

After Faldo received his reward for getting the lowest score, he made it clear to the press that he wasn't thrilled about being crowned champion. What could he say? "Yes, thank you. That jolly ol' chap really blew that one. Ha! Ha! Ha!"

How could you be happy, after seeing your friend and colleague make an utter fool out of himself? Faldo knew he didn't deserve the victory.

• The Caddy's Predictions:

Norman has heard more about last year's Masters than he wants to remember, and the only redemption he can think of is squelching the talk about his incapability by winning a major event. The Shark is ready to strike.

Las Vegas has announced that the odds of Norman winning the Masters is 8–1, just behind Faldo and Tiger Woods' leading odds of 7–1.

Women's tennis quickly escapes the cold

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

Yesterday afternoon's match between the Massachusetts women's tennis team and the Lady Huskies of Connecticut was finished in less time than it took to thaw out after watching the match.

The Minutewomen wasted little time in sub–zero weather and ridiculously strong wind conditions, as they blanked UConn 6–0, on the Upper Boyden tennis courts.

The six singles matches were played first, and the doubles matches cancelled, as the weather certainly had an effect on the way this match was played. The Minutewomen, however, did not struggle the least bit in this contest on their way to their fifth win of the spring season, and an overall record of 10–3.

"This was not really an indication of anybody's tennis ability, but I think that we were very tough mentally," coach Judy Dixon said. "I think in playing conditions like this, that's what you have to do, and I'm pleased with them."

However, what was a true indication of tennis ability was the way that sophomore Gillian Kane of the Minutewomen played at No. 5 singles, taking care of her opponent, Sarah Russo, 6–2, 6–1 in the first singles win of Kane's career.

"It felt good, I was mixing things up, coming to the net more, and my backhand was definitely working well," Kane said.

On the day, there wasn't one player for UMass that really had a scare from any of the Huskies. Freshman Ola Gerasimova, playing at No. 1 singles, was toying with Jen Ounjian while coming away with two modest shutouts at 6–0.

Likewise, junior Caroline Steele, at No. 2, was dominant with a 6–1, 6–0 win over Tracey Apone.

"We knew that their team was a little down from last year, but we didn't want to take them lightly," Steele said. "Judy [Dixon] told us some things to work on, that we don't normally do, and we just came out and took care of business."

To say the least, the Huskies are in a little bit of a downfall, as they came into this match with four freshman players, injuries, absences, and a tough schedule. The loss drops their record to 2–7 in the spring and 9–11 overall on the year.

"We're inexperienced, and we haven't had much practice so far this spring," UConn assistant coach Rich Tallo said. "I just told them to stay positive, to hang in there, and not beat themselves."

The Minutewomen, however, knew this was another one of those matches that needed to be taken care of quickly and efficiently while they prepare for the tougher teams on the schedule. That, plus the simple fact that no one wanted frostbite, hurried the Minutewomen yesterday.

No. 3 singles player Jackie Braunstein ruled her court with a 6–0, 6–1 victory, as did senior Liz Durant at No. 4 singles. Durant beat up on Diane Aivano by the same score.

Lana Gorodetskaya, at No. 6, rounded out the competition with two shutouts over her opponent, for the 6–0 victory.

Windy, cold weather was the major factor in this match with many unforced errors, mishits, long shots and frustration. Unfortunately for the Huskies, most was on UConn's side.

Minutewomen's travels to Harvard put two winning streaks in jeopardy

By Jackie Leroux
Collegian staff

Somebody's win streak is about to come to an end.

After beating Central Connecticut 12–1 and 8–0 yesterday the Massachusetts softball team is on a seven–game win streak. The Minutewomen (14–15) toppled such teams as Dayton, St. Bonaventure and Rutgers.

The competition will get tougher today when they head to Cambridge to play a doubleheader with the Harvard Crimson. First pitch is set for 3 p.m. The Crimson are on a six–game win streak, with wins over Holy Cross, UC–Davis, Wisconsin–Stout and Santa Clara.

This is the first time Harvard and UMass have played each other since 1984, when the Minutewomen won both games.

"We're going into this blind," coach Elaine Sortino said. "I know that they're a top Ivy–League team, but other than that, I really have no idea what to expect from them. We used to have a big rivalry many years ago, but it's been so long since we played them."

To date, Harvard has compiled a 16–10 record, for a .615 winning percentage. The Crimson has been hitting well, with an average of .270, but it's barely above its opponents average of .265. Harvard has also given up just as many hits, 186, as it has made itself.

Harvard is led at the plate by senior co–captain Katina Lee and senior Melissa Kreuder. In 26 games, Lee has a batting average of .360, and has a slugging percentage of .467. Kreuder has been batting at .313 with a slugging percentage of .388.

UMass struggled with its hitting earlier this season, but it has seen dramatic improvements recently. Against Central Connecticut on Tuesday the Minutewomen got in 10 hits in their first game and 12 in the second, upping their batting average from .233 to .249. Their opponents have been hitting at .224.

Even though Tuesday's win was against a lackluster team — the Lady Blue Devils have now lost twelve in a row — the Minutewomen are riding high off the dramatic improvements in their play. The team is finally beginning to pull together and play like the defending A–10 champs they are.

Kim Gutridge has been solid at the plate for the Minutewomen so far this season, with an average of .311. She had four hits and five RBIs against Central Connecticut. Sophomore Mandy Galas has also seen some improvement lately. She had five hits and two RBIs on Tuesday, and is now batting .302.

The pitching of the Minutewomen has been incredible in recent games. Junior Liz Wagner and sophomore Danielle Henderson are both coming off no–hitters from Tuesday's game. Henderson has lowered her ERA to 1.49 and Wagner is now at 2.80.

Taking on UMass on the mound for the Crimson is junior Tasha Cupp. Cupp has a win–loss record of 10–4, and an ERA of 1.74. She is backed up by sophomore Kathleen Brown, who has an ERA of 3.84.

Denmark presents resolution to U.N.

GENEVA (AP) — Undeterred by political threats and economic muscle, the United States and a group of European countries submitted a resolution yesterday criticizing China's human rights record.

Underlining the disarray in the European Union over the issue, Germany, France, Spain and Italy were notably missing from the European co–sponsors.

Instead, Denmark — encouraged by Washington — agreed to lead the way, presenting the resolution to the U.N. Human Rights Commission, which is meeting in Geneva.

The resolution's mildly worded text voiced concern at "continuing reports of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms" in China, and "increased restrictions" on Tibetans.

It cited the "persecution and harsh sentences imposed on persons who have peacefully availed themselves of their freedom of assembly, association, expression or religion."

Accused Nazi's U.S. citizenship revoked

CHICAGO (AP) — A federal judge revoked the U.S. citizenship of a retired machinist yesterday, ruling he lied about his Nazi past and "unquestionably" participated in a massacre of hundreds of Jews at the Treblinka death camp.

The U.S. attorney's office said the government would seek to have Bronislaw Hajda deported.

The government charged in a lawsuit that Hajda had covered up his Nazi past when he applied for a visa to the United States in 1950 and later when he became a citizen.

It sought to have his citizenship revoked and have him deported.

During his trial last month, the 73–year–old Hajda emphatically denied the allegations, telling the judge he was a victim of misidentification.

But U.S. District Judge David H. Coar rejected Hajda's claim, saying documents presented by the government proved that Hajda served as a Nazi guard.

Students rally at Whitmore; confront Scott

By Victoria Groves
Collegian Staff

CHRISTOPHER A. CESNEK/ COLLEGIAN
Students march into Whitmore yesterday and confront Chancellor Scott.

Despite cold weather, approximately 75 undergraduates, members of the Graduate Employment Organization (GEO) and Goodell Building takeover supporters marched to the Whitmore Administration Building yesterday, protesting the administration's lack of action regarding child care and other issues.

The rally started on the steps of the Student Union when University of Massachusetts student Tom Taaffe began speaking to the gathering crowd.

"For the last 12 years the administration has been moving childcare from committee to committee... their answer is to put it in a committee and bury it," Taaffe said. "Goodell was about addressing this problem. We need to remind the administration who pays for their job."

Taaffe went on to list a number of administrators who he felt should be "administratively withdrawn," including Paul Page, Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance; Patricia Crosson, Interim Provost; and Thomas Robinson, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

"Tom Robinson is the weakest representative for students I have ever seen. His job is to shut you up," Taaffe said.

He went on to outline the three priorities he felt the administration should have, amid the cheers of supporters.

"Students, teachers, books. If it doesn't relate, what is it doing here? Very little of the budget is spent on us," Taaffe said.

Mary Sutherland, student organizer around issues of access and poverty, echoed the concern of administrative accountability.

"If we are worried about where we will live, how we will eat and who will take care of our children? We must hold administration accountable," Sutherland said. "Basic human rights are being violated."

Former Student Government Association (SGA) president Maurice Caston Powe addressed the crowd, urging them to continue working towards the issues fought for in the Goodell takeover.

"I've noticed in the last few weeks is that the work we started In Goodell is still undone," Caston Powe said. "We could sit in Herter [Hall] all day and talk to administration. I'm sick of talking.

"People are telling me now [that] I wasted six days of my life in Goodell. I refuse to believe that. I'm willing to work hard to make sure what we started is finished... we still don't have answers. Don't let this die."

Before heading to Whitmore, numerous other students took the microphone and addressed the crowd.

"A lot of children are going to suffer because the administration doesn't come through on it's promises. Now is the time to say 'handle your business, or we're going to handle it for you'," UMass student Justin Beatty said

Chancellor speaks to marchers in Whitmore

The protesters entered Whitmore Administration Building at approximately 1:15 p.m. and were there for about 15 minutes. All office doors were closed and few people were in the hallways.

"Why are the doors closed? Because they're scared," Beatty said.

Standing outside the office door of Chancellor David K. Scott, the group chanted slogans reminiscent of the Goodell takeover and banged on the walls and doors until Chancellor Scott exited his office to address the crowd.

"The discussions in Goodell led to a task force," Scott said.

Students complained that there was a task force in place before the Goodell takeover, and that no action is currently being taken to remedy these issues.

"Many of us involved don't feel that anything is being accomplished. We need direct answers," said Amy Howland, member of the Student Board of Business.

Scott said that one of the problems was that a fixed group of students were not participating in the negotiation process.

Case shows holes in UM child care

By Laura Forster
Collegian Staff

Rebecca Woodworth has been an undergraduate student at the University of Massachusetts for the past two years. Woodworth, a transfer student, hopes to graduate in seven weeks, except she has a problem; she is a mother of two year–old Sara Beth, and has just been told she will have to pay $600 per month on her bill for University funded child care — money she doesn't have.

Woodworth was told at the beginning of the academic year that she would be receiving a scholarship and would not need to pay additional fees, but later, at the end of the fall semester she was told there had been a mistake.

Woodworth was informed that she would have to reapply for a scholarship for her daughter to be enrolled into preschool day care instead of toddler day care, since Sara Beth is over two years and nine months. Woodworth is unable to find financial aid this late into the school year.

Over the past two weeks, she has been struggling to find child care for her daughter. Woodworth sent Sara Beth to stay with her parents last week at their home in New Hampshire which is four hours from UMass.

Woodworth described her frustration at her present condition as "[a] single mother whose financial aid is maxed out... and when my daughter calls me up crying 'Mommy when are you gonna come get me?', what am I going to do?"

Yesterday, Woodworth, attempted to bring Sara Beth to class with her but was told not to do it again by her professor.

She is also facing frustration with UMass' Child Care Center, which she feels has not been helpful and have only accused her of not following her contract of agreement with the Center, by failing to pay.

"It is bad enough that I cannot pay, [but] for them to accuse me of doing this intentionally..." Woodworth said.

Maryanne Gallagher, director of the University Child Care Center, said that the Center was still willing to work with Woodworth on her situation and spoke on various measures the Center is trying to improve upon.

Gallagher said a meeting held by a planning committee for the Child Care Center, yesterday, was established under the request of Chancellor David K. Scott. This meeting brought up the following issues for the Center to work on: defining needs; identifying funding sources; reviewing current sources and proposals of salaries for programs.

Gallagher said she would like to increase advertising of the Center since she doesn't think enough people are aware that the University has one. In addition, starting in July, she is hoping to open a part–time child care program to increase accessibility for parents.

Commenting on the Center's future plans, Gallagher said, "We're not starting with a clean slate here but we're bringing it all together to move forward."

Editor preserves Sanger's papers

By Michelle Hillman
Collegian Staff

Editor and director of the Margaret Sanger's papers project, Esther Katz spoke on Wednesday on the complexities of compiling historical documents as an editor.

According to Katz, Sanger, who died in 1966 at the age of 87 was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize, and was one of the 50 most influential people in the 20th century, as well as one of the first in the fight for birth control rights.

Sanger's life was also full of failure because, according to Katz, "she never won the Nobel Prize she so badly wanted," and "the birth control legislation she fought for, never passed in her lifetime."

According to Katz, the "intoxication and the rapture" of Sanger's letters and documents don't carry over into a biography. The biography is primarily the voice of the author.

Katz later added, "the value of collected editions is that the voice of the editor does not intrude so much, you can chose to read the annotation or not."

She stated reasons she chose to take on the 10–year Sanger project as editor instead of biographer.

"A biographer knows more about the subject than can be published — for this reason I chose to edit [Sanger's] papers."

As an editor, Katz must define historical sources, analyze and edit the papers before they are published. Katz collected more than 100,000 of Sanger's documents, including letters, diaries, reports and "anything written to or by Sanger."

The documents, which are housed at New York University, were then compiled into two indexed series on microfilm, with a 250 page guide. Katz's intent was to "provide a centralized collection of the documents."

"[Sanger] left a legacy as controversial as the birth control movement itself," Katz said, which made it difficult to determine what not to include.

"Biographers have to make difficult decisions when reconstructing a life," Katz said. She is also working on a book edition focusing on Sanger's life which would be "an intense look at Sanger the individual."

The Sanger project which is "offering an alternative form to biography" will be mounted on the Internet "hopefully by the end of the month, allowing readers to jump from document to document," Katz said.

Katz concluded her talk discussing funding cuts for her project and other historical projects by the National Endowment for Humanities and the National Historical Publications and Records Commission.

"Historical editing takes a great deal of careful research, time and money," Katz said.

The cuts are expected to hit women's programs hard, according to Katz. She noted that the future of women's papers do not look promising.

She added that she was not convinced that the papers of women like Jane Addams or Elizabeth Cady–Stanton would be preserved like the "great dead white men," such as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson or Woodrow Wilson.

"Women have left their mark, but you have to know where to look," Katz said.

Katz's talk was sponsored by the Women's Studies Proseminar Series as part of the Graduate Certificate in Advanced Feminist Studies and is co–sponsored by the Graduate School.

Restraining order placed on dorm room intruder

University of Massachusetts Police are investigating with the District Attorney's Office several reports of an individual entering residents' unlocked rooms in a Southwest Area Residence hall during early morning hours.

Some victims and witnesses have also reported the individual climbing into bed with the resident.

"We are having several ongoing conversations with individuals who have given us reliable information as to the identity of the individual which will assist us in completing the investigation," said UMass Chief of Police Jack Luippold.

According to Luippold, police have a strong lead and have obtained a restraining order against the individual throughout all residential areas on the UMass campus.

However, reports so far have only been received from residents in a "certain Southwest residential hall," Luippold said.

Public Safety wants to remind campus residents the importance of keeping doors locked at all times whether they are in or out of their rooms.

If anyone has any further information about these incidents, police encourage students to call 545–0893.

Public Safety also encourages students to report any suspicious activities on residential floors to call 911 or 545– 2121. All information will be kept confidential.

"It's my understanding that the people meeting are different. My view is if it were a fixed group of people, by and large, it would be more beneficial. I suggest we try to get a defined group of people consistent from one week to another," Scott said.

Referring to a past meeting with student negotiators and administration, Beatty said that the administrators present were not committed to working with the students.

"Almost every administration member was trying to get out of that meeting as soon as possible," Beatty said.

Students also expressed concern over what they consider a lack of notice about the meetings.

"I'll check. I don't know how the meetings are advertised," Scott said.

Marching to Childcare Committee meeting

After exiting Whitmore, protesters marched to the Campus Center and walked in on a meeting in progress of the Campus Childcare Planning Committee. The group sat quietly as the committee finished its business.

"We share the enthusiasm that there's so much support to raise awareness about the need for childcare on campus. We feel it's really important to keep everyone posted," said Maryanne Gallagher, Director of University Childcare and committee chair.

Jennifer Fasulo, a rally facilitator and GEO member, said that after researching and creating a proposal, the Family Issues Committee met with administration at the bargaining table. According to Fasulo, administration was only willing to give them one third of what they had requested for childcare.

"We asked for $300,000, and they said they would give us $100,000. That's less than Chancellor Scott's salary," Fasulo said. "We see them putting money into things we don't think have priority. We want to have a voice in the decision making process of where money goes. We want to be in the room.

"We don't want to wait until it happens and protest it. Who makes the list of priorities? Why can't students participate? We don't even get to see the list."

Karen Fogliatti, also from GEO, said that while this rally was centered around childcare, it concerned many other issues of concern to students as well.

"There's a feeling that the discussions are going to stall in committee. We don't want to spend the next weeks, months, years in committee. We want action," Fogliatti said. "The issues are making the University accessible to people of color and those with low incomes. Also, affordability, childcare, housing, better recruitment and retention."

"It's about all the issues that were raised in Goodell," Fasulo said.

An outreach through email

In reaction to a press release issued by the UMass/Goodell Student Rights Group and distributed from the GEO office, Chancellor Scott has sent an email message to all individuals with UMass accounts.

Scott said claims that the administration is "backsliding from their written agreements with the students" are unfounded.

"The campus administrators who have been negotiating with an ever-changing group of student spokespersons have remained steady in their conviction to negotiate in good faith with elected student representatives and appropriate task force members," Scott wrote "They remain open to constructive arguments presented in an on-going dialogue."

A memo accompanied Scott's message, concerning the ongoing discussions of unresolved issues. It was listed as coming from Marcellette Williams, Deputy Chancellor; Frederick Byron, Vice Chancellor for Research; Royster Hedgepeth, Vice Chancellor for University Advancement; Frederick Tillis, Associate Chancellor; Crosson, Page and Robinson.

The memo read that the administration does not believe that the current meeting format is advancing resolution of the unresolved issues.

"In each successive meeting there have been fewer and fewer of the students with whom we held discussions in Goodell. It is our impression that the purpose of the meetings has shifted from discussions about unresolved issues to accusations, innuendoes, and allegations... we are unwilling to continue to be interrogated and impugned," read the memo.

It calls for a core group of no more than 15 students to be composed to meet and negotiate with the administration. Any other students will attend the meetings as observers.

The memo also read that the administration will be arranging for a facilitator/mediator to ensure a more constructive direction for discussions.

Group displays negative & positive depictions of women

By Laura Forster
Collegian Staff

In an attempt to prevent body image disturbance and eating problems for women, the Five College community, with support from the Five College Eating Disorder Commitee and the Eating Disorder Awareness and Prevention Program of Seattle, have launched a campaign to target responsible and irresponsible advertisements of body shape and size in the media.

Students and health educators within the Five College area chose 10 advertisements, five of which they thought give responsible images of women, and five images which were irresponsible.

University of Massachusetts began its part of the campaign Monday by setting up a table in the Campus Center concourse displaying the advertisements.

The agencies which were selected as representing positive images include: Jansport, the National Fluid Milk Processor Promotion Board, Playtex Apparel, Tommy Hillfinger and the Weathervane. The irresponsible agencies include: Miu Miu, Charles David, Bergorf Dooman, Vogue magazine and Lagerfeld.

Gloria DiFulvio, University Health Services educator and coordinator of the Women's Health Project, feels that with the support of Five College community, representing 35,000 students, the campaign will prove successful.

DiFulvio explained that the goal of the campaign was not only to make agencies aware, but to make students aware of the issue of body image in their own lives since there are more people on campus with eating disorders than are diagnosed.

"We're trying to say it's okay to be who you are, you cannot force yourself to be a specific image," DiFulvio said.

Adrianne Zahner, a freshman education major, is one Peer Health Educator helping out on the campaign. Zahner hopes that the campaign will help promote more diversity in the body images depicted in advertisements so that people can feel comfortable with their bodies and take care of them in the right ways.

Zahner gave an example by saying, "It's okay to say [you] want to go jogging, but not if it's because of an image."

In replying to some students arguing that the advertisements are not being credited for their artistic quality, Zahner replied, "They may be interesting in a museum, but not for selling clothes."

Students who did not agree with the chosen advertisements were also encouraged to give their feedback. One such example is Melissa Bemis, a sophomore dance and pre- communications major, who felt that the advertisements chosen as negative images were actually closer to her body type and that she could never achieve the bodies depicted in the positive image advertisements.

The table displaying these images is located in the Campus Center Concourse and will be open for the last time today from 9:30 a.m. – 3 p.m. Students are encouraged to fill out surveys giving their feedback on the advertisements and sign the letters of support and petition, as well as pick up various informational pamphlets, such as national body image statistics.

Nikilani Akaka and Liz Nellis sit at an informational table aimed at promoting a healthy body image for women.

It's back to Connecticut for UMass women's track

By Greg Thurell
Collegian Correspondent

After coming off a third place finish against a strong field of teams in Connecticut, the Massachusetts women's track and field team faces another difficult meet this weekend as it travels again to the Constitution State.

This time the Minutewomen take on the Northeastern Huskies, Brown Bears, Boston College Eagles and host Southern Connecticut.

"This meet has four of the top programs in New England," according to coach Julie LaFreniere. "Brown is a very strong program, especially in the jumps and throws, while BC has national quality distance runners. Northeastern is a strong program overall."

With the hopeful return of a few runners, this meet could provide a good measuring stick for 3–2 Massachusetts as it faces the New England indoor champion Huskies. The rest of the field will also provide a strong challenge for the Minutewomen to overcome.

So far this season, the sprints have been extremely strong for UMass. The 4x100m relay team has looked impressive early this season, already placing second, by .02 seconds, on the UMass all-time performers list. All four athletes on the relay team (Emma Gardner, Melanie Bell, Shelanda Irish and Raquell Shelton) have qualified for the New England Championships in the 100m and have solid chances of scoring on Saturday with Bell, Irish and Gardner also in the hunt in the 200m with freshman Andrea Comeau.

Irish could score in the 400m along with teammates Michelle Cooper, Mary Eaton and Yves Amazan.

The hurdles look to be another area the Minutewomen hope to excel in, especially if junior Silifa Kenku can return to the 400 hurdles from a week's absence due to a hamstring injury. The 100 high hurdles feature two New England qualifiers in Comeau and Melissa Ward.

The mid-distance and distance events could be helped by the possible return of junior standout Rebecca Donaghue, the all-time UMass record holder in the 1500m and standout in the 800m as well.

Nicole Way holds the seasons best in the 800 while Christy Martin and Sally Hirsch are the top two 1500 runners this season. This group has displayed the ability to hold its own with the strong BC contingent. Hirsch and Martin will double in the 3000m while Kristen Donaldson and Tracy Meagher will be looking to score in the 5000.

The throwing events look to be progressing nicely, with Stephanie Townson and Shana Mitchell in the discus and hammer, with Townson also looking to place in the shot.

With Northeastern and Brown as the favorites, the Minutewomen come into this meet with a chance to sneak up on them by showing solid performances in all areas.

first with 10 goals. Grogan played in the goal for three quarters, allowing only one goal. Nieves finished up the game, allowing one goal and making two saves.

UMass heads to Williams College next weekend, April 18– 20, for the CWPA New England Championships where the Minutewomen are seeded No. 1.

Fenway billboards get mixed reviews

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — Lauded by John Updike as a "lyric little bandbox," Fenway Park is fast becoming a lyric little brand-box now that three 20-foot high Coke bottles have been hung conspicuously above its famous Green Monster.

The advertisement covers three sides of a light standard, just above the net that keeps home runs from pelting Landsdowne Street below. The Red Sox have said the bottleboards will bring in more than $1 million (some of it for charity) — money necessary to compete with big-market teams with their layers of luxury boxes and megabucks marketing deals.

"Anything that brings in that kind of revenue, I'm for," general manager Dan Duquette said yesterday as his team prepared for today's home opener against Seattle. "It's a Classic Coke for a classic ballpark."

But others wonder if the presence of the bottles is defacing the beloved ballpark.

"If this is the way they're going to treat Fenway, they might as well tear it down," said John Carroll, head of the Carroll Creative Inc. advertising firm in nearby Brookline. "There's no question the Red Sox are getting squeezed. But you would hope that some things would be off-limits."

Red Sox marketing vice president Larry Cancro did not return a call seeking comment. But CEO John Harrington said during spring training that the team decided the ads are less intrusive than the rotating signs behind home plate that other ballparks are using to maximize TV exposure.

Harrington also noted that the New York Yankees had signed a deal with Adidas for $95 million over 10 years to put its name and logo all over Yankee Stadium.

Other arenas — including the FleetCenter, which replaced the beloved Boston Garden — have sold their names outright. And nothing is more recognizable than Kenmore Square's landmark Citgo sign, visible over the Wall even though it is several blocks away.

"The Citgo sign is arguably there for some historical value. It's not as blatant a marketing tool," even though it once was, Carroll said. "There's only one reason for this: money." He also noted that the Citgo sign is not on the ballpark premises, which makes it different in his mind than advertising on the back of a turnpike toll ticket or in a subway car.

"Why is it different?" he asked. "Because Fenway has a different position in people's experience and there's an attachment to it more than a toll ticket."

Carroll's objections notwithstanding, advertising is as much a part of the ballpark experience as trampled peanut shells. Old parks, as well as many minor-league and spring training sites, have their entire outfield walls covered with ads, including Fenway's 37-foot-high Monster before it was painted green in 1947.

"Those look almost charming at this point," Carroll said. "It's one thing to sell every inch of space inside the ballpark, but I think this is worse. There's something about the high-tech relentlessness of the advertising now that I think strikes the wrong cord."

Harrington stressed that some of the money — at least $100,000 — will go to the Jimmy Fund, a cancer charity long favored by the Red Sox. Additional donations will be made for each time a player hits one of the bottles with a home run.

a win, and since knowing the fact that we hadn't beaten them in so long," Slyman said.

The Minutemen are back in action tomorrow with a double-header on the road as they take on Seton Hall in the morning and Fordham in the afternoon.

"It's going to be tough, Seton Hall is a Big East team, and they play a tough schedule, so they're going to be strong," Knuth said. "I think as far as pure talent goes, we're better, but again it going to come down to which team wants it more, and can perform that morning," Knuth said.

Every match from here on out is preparation for the Atlantic 10 tournament and the Minutemen will be looking for a significant finish in this year's tourney. However, first things first as UMass has two big matches this weekend.

"Going down there we're very confident, and we feel that going into any match, that we should win if everyone plays as well as they can," Slyman said. "The expectations are to play as well as we can, and hopefully we'll come out with the win."

swinging for them all the time, and forget how to hit the ball."

Since the partial success over the last five games (3–2) and the with the consistency from various players on the team, Stone has many options to work with, both on the field and at the plate.

"Braunstein is taking charge of the situation in left field, Gautreau is hitting well," Stone said. "But we're still unsettled in a couple of spots."

Brian Samela and Jason Kudrikow have been sharing the duty of catching this season. Although Samela has seen the majority of the time behind the plate, due to his defensive skills, Kudrikow has improved greatly on the offensive side.

"Samela has got the edge," Stone said. "He throws better and receives better. Kudrikow is hitting very well right now, but Samela's a lefty [which helps balance out the lineup]."

Kudrikow is currently batting .407 with 15 RBIs; while Samela is batting .391, with 3 HRs and 10 RBIs. Stone has consistently kept both players in the lineup, covering both the catching and designated hitter spots.

What has to keep Stone happy is the depth UMass has behind the plate. Both players are acquiring great experience and come clutch time (A–10 tourney) he will appreciate having two quality players to work with.

First base has also displayed double talent with Dave Giglio and Matt Wolcott, who combined are batting .286, with 12 RBIs.

"Wolcott may see some time as the designated hitter," Stone said. Giglio has taken most of the time at first base, most likely due to his longer stretch.

Temple, just like any other conference opponent, poses a definite threat. As Stone has said before, any baseball team can win on any day.

"They're a scrappy team from Philadelphia," Stone said. "They always play us tough. We have to focus on playing well. As long as we're sharp we'll be tough to beat. But every series counts."

This series counts even more considering UMass' recent series to Dayton last weekend, when they dropped two out of three to the sub-500 Flyers. Currently, the Minutemen are sitting on top of the Atlantic 10 charts, and wins this weekend will strengthen the team's chances come tournament time.

with goals by junior midfielder Jen Herker and freshman midfielder Rebecca Minaker keeping the Minutewomen in the game, but to no avail. The pace of the game, with the sub-freezing temperatures, fell considerably in the second frame. But, UMass played to the final ticks of the clock, frustrated Dartmouth to no end.

Next up for the Minutewomen will a return to the friendly confines of Totman Field, with the Lady Knights of Rutgers (6–2) coming to the Valley at 1 p.m. tomorrow afternoon. The two teams know each other well, and the combined score in their last two contests is a very close 15–12, with Rutgers on the winning side in both games.

The Lady Knights appear to be making the next competitive step, upsetting No. 12 Brown on March 15 by a 9–5 score — and that win Bears has propelled them to a 5–1 mark since that time.

To say the least, the offense has been explosive, with Dina Cavallo (26–5–31), Brandi Bailey (14–13–27) and Amanda Mazzarella (12–7–19) combining for an impressive offensive threesome. Goalie Paula Chamoun (.685 save percentage) has held the other team back, and has not allowed more than nine goals in a single contest this season.

"We've had a history of close games with Rutgers, and we'll probably be looking at that again," McClellan said. "But, this time we want to be on the winning side."

The politics of liberation

Editor's Note: On Monday night, Kwame Toure, the former Stokely Carmichael, will speak at the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m., in what will most likely be his last public speaking engagement in the United States. The following are excerpts from the preface of Black Power: The Politics of Liberation in America, Carmichael's most influential work co-written with Charles V. Hamilton.

This book is about why, where and in what manner black people in America must get themselves together. It is about black people taking care of business — the business of and for black people. The stakes are really very simple: if we fail to do this, we faced continued subjection to a white society that has no intention of giving up willingly or easily its position of priority and authority. If we succeed, we will exercise control over our lives, politically, economically and psychically. We will also contribute to the development of a viable larger society; in terms of ultimate social benefit, there is nothing unilateral about the movement to free black people...

Stokely Carmichael

We aim to define and encourage a new consciousness among black people which will make it possible for us to proceed... [This consciousness] might be called a sense of peoplehood: pride, rather than shame, in blackness and an attitude of brotherly, communal responsibility among all black people for one another...

Black people in America have no time to play nice, polite parlor games — especially when the lives of their children are at stake. Some white Americans can afford to speak softly, tread lightly, employ the soft-sell and put-off (or is it put down?) They own the society. For black people to adopt their methods of relieving our oppression is ludicrous. We blacks must respond in our own way, on our own terms, in a manner which fits our temperaments. The definitions of ourselves, the roles we pursue, the goals we seek are our responsibility.

It is crystal clear that the society is capable of and willing to reward those individuals who do not forcefully condemn it — to reward them with prestige, status and material benefits. But these crumbs of co-optation should be rejected. The over-riding, all-important fact is that as a people, we have absolutely nothing to lose by refusing to play such games.

Camus and Satre have asked: Can a man condemn himself? Can whites, particularly liberal whites, condemn themselves? Can they stop blaming blacks and start blaming their own system? Are they capable of the shame which become a revolutionary emotion? We — black people — have found that they usually cannot condemn themselves; therefore black Americans must do it...

Anything less than clarity, honesty and forcefulness perpetuates the centuries of sliding over, dressing up and soothing down the true feelings, hopes and demands of an oppressed black people. Mild demands and hypocritical smiles mislead white America into thinking that all is fine and peaceful. They mislead America into thinking that the path and pace chosen to deal with racial problems are acceptable to masses of black Americans. It is far better to speak forcefully and truthfully. Only when one's true self — white or black — is exposed, can this society proceed to deal with the problems from a position of clarity and not from one of misunderstanding...

Finally, it should be noted that this book does not discuss at length the international situation, the relationship of our black liberation struggle to the rest of the world. But Black Power means that black people see themselves as part of a new force, sometimes called the "Third World;" that we see our struggle around the world. We must hook up with these struggles. We must, for example, ask ourselves: when black people in Africa begin to storm Johannesburg what will be the role of this nation — and of black people here? It seems inevitable that this nation would move to protect its financial interests in South Africa, which means protecting white rule in South Africa. Black people in this country then have the responsibility to oppose, at least to neutralize, that effort by white America.

This is but one example of many such situations which have already arisen around the world — with more to come. There is only one place for black Americans in these struggles, and that is on the side of the Third World.

Stokely Carmichael and Charles V. Hamilton from Black Power: The Politics of Liberation in America. The book was originally by the Colonial Press, Inc. in 1967.

UPC sells out

Anticipating a free Spring Concert on May 10? Well, I'm here to tell everyone that it is not going to be free — unless we act now.

Plus the show does not feature what we want. Why? University Productions & Concert (UPC) never asked us directly who we wanted to play. Instead UPC decided to book the show by fitting musical acts into specific stereotypes which UPC refers to as "music genres" (such as blues, alternative rock, hip-hop, etc.)

These so called "genres" will not bring this campus together, but only further segregate us. I will not stand for this and I hope that none of you will either.

I personally took on UPC by going around and asking students if they would support having a DJ at the concert. I hope UPC realizes that I conducted this survey to help the organization because of its financial difficulties.

Two weeks ago UPC sponsored Spring Elation: an all- night rave in the Campus Center Basement that was supposed to raise money for Spring Concert. This is where UPC messed up big time.

"We already pay enough money. Fight for your rights. Use your voice to be heard, use your wisdom and finally use your power."

Jessica M. Miller

As a student organization UPC is here for the students of UMass and for this reason promotions for UPC sponsored events should be centered around the campus community — apparently this was not so for Spring Elation.

Record stores in Philadelphia, New York, Boston and who knows where else, were promoting Spring Elation by handing out UPC flyers.

UPC was supposed to be hold this event to educate the students and bring the campus together for an entire night.

Instead, I see this as an intended invasion on our school.

Plus, UPC charged the same admission price for UMass students and non-students. By the way, the event cost $25 — more than half my paycheck.

This is my question for UPC: was Spring Elation for UPC or us, the students of UMass? Decide for yourselves! Don't forget — your tuition money sponsors UPC.

Can we really trust UPC? This is the ultimate question we as students are facing.

Back to Spring Concert, $2 is not a lot of money but once you put money in front of this concert, it is my belief that It will never be free again — if anything, next year will probably cost more.

We already pay enough money. Fight for your rights. Use your voice to be heard, use your wisdom and finally use your power. Everyone is created equal and it is our birthright to be treated as so.

Now it's time for the results of the survey I conducted asking students whether or not they wanted a local DJ at Spring Concert and if yes, who would you want? The Greenhouse Effect won, "nuff said.

I want to now thank all those who helped me accomplish my mission. If you are still not sure what my mission is — it's quite simply, 'unity,' that's what I'm all about. Let's keep it real.

The new liberalism

Editor's note: On May 8, the Collegian will celebrate its 70th anniversary as a daily paper. To mark the occasion, the Collegian is reprinting an editorial from each of the last 30 years. Today we feature an editorial originally printed on Sept. 25, 1978.

When the Class of 1981 first shuffled through the halls of Yale University last fall, over 50 percent of those students reported in a released poll that their political views were conservative. Such was the case in college campuses across the nation where the angry activism and national concern of students from the sixties seemed to have faded completely over the horizon. The newly empowered Southern politician in the present White House seemed to have shovelled in a new wave of conservatism which had even infiltrated the hardy minds of the young.

Politics is a game, we've heard, but worse, politics is a game of words and labels which are often evasive and misleading. And the reported bout of "conservative" is point in case.

Conservatism has been associated with laissez-faire politics — the belief that an economic system be left for the most part, to its own natural ways. In short, conservativism is passive politics, the belief that whatever happens by course, is for the best.

But in a recent poll taken across the nation as reported last month in the New York Times, 85 percent of those reporting conservative political sentiments also reported they were in favor of increasing social welfare programs and a national socialized medical program. These last views certainly cannot be called traditionally conservative views.

Social welfare and socialized medical care certainly represent activism and certainly represent the desire to take hold of an economic system and not let it run its natural course. These views also represent the idea of "sharing the wealth" and are totally opposite to the conservative notion that "the best shall succeed and [that] it be rightly so."

Obviously the term conservative as used by both college students and U.S. citizens in polling is both evasive and misleading in consideration of these instances where reports of overriding conservative viewpoints in the United States may not actually be existing as reported.

Then, on the other hand, conservatism has always been considered from the right of the political spectrum to the norm and one can deduce that perhaps that norm now is supporting socialized programs.

If this be the case, one can simply see a change in the American point of view — that is, that conservatism may no longer be "conservatism" as we have traditionally known it, but actually a new form of liberalism.

Notes from Campus Center Basement

A man walks up to the gates of heaven. Saint Peter peeks his head over the top of some great big book and says "What were you doing during the 90's?" The man looks up and says, "I was an undergraduate at UMass." Saint Peter looks surprised and says, "That's all you did?" The man responds, "Well, I had a double major and two minors..."

Jeremy Brothers

A bad joke, that's what my life is becoming.

I told myself a few weeks ago that I was going to approach the impending "day 'o graduation," (see, I'm trying to make it sound fun...) with as much optimism as I could muster. Yesterday, someone asked me how my semester was going and I lied.

"Oh, I can't wait to finish, the light at the end of the tunnel is in sight," or some other foolish platitude.

The entirety of my following class was spent wondering where I could add another major and wouldn't it be silly to be called a "Sixth Year Senior."

I made a little chart and put it on the floor below my desk. I was resolved to march over to CASAC and demand that they let me into whatever section of the major chart that my piece of paper landed on.

It was really exciting for a few minutes. I thought we might be able to market a game show based on this concept. I came up with a very hummable theme song in my head.- What would my new major be? Classics? Art History? Linguistics? (You might notice a trend forming with my choices...) The moment of truth had arrived.

Journalism. That's where my fortune lay according to a piece of paper that I blew off my desk. I thought of the prospect of spending another few semesters with a bunch of Scoop Brady poseurs bitching about getting good clips and internships where they don't just make you get coffee. I wretched.

So, I guess I'm graduating. Who would have guessed?

There are a few things that should be cleared up before this week ends. I don't want to polarize the campus anymore, but I've realized that there are two kinds of people who go to UMass: people who get it and people who don't. It's hard to define these two categories, but I'm sure that this is a debate which has gone on long before there ever was a UMass, and therefore we can try to point them out.

(Insert banal, almost obligatory, bit about how the Collegian is run by a bunch of hard-working kids with good hearts, some of whom allow irony to get the better of them...)

"People who don't get it" — People who get upset too easily when the comics are repeated (alternate choices include: when the Collegian runs something they don't find funny, when the Collegian doesn't run something they find "vital."); people who don't understand what a "review" in music review is (alternate choices include: movie reviews and theater reviews).

"People who get it" — A much smaller group of people at UMass. They obsessively look for spelling errors and split infinitives, marking up the Collegian with a red magic marker and when they're done, they throw this copy out. The majority of this group stopped reading the Collegian years ago, when they started getting deja vu.

Quick fun fact for those who were either scratching their heads or just didn't get it after looking at yesterday's opera cover story. George Frederick Handel is one of the few 18th century opera composers whose work is still being performed today, not one of the few opera composers still performing today. I'm sorry for those who were excited by this, but no — Handel will be at the Mullins Center for either the Motorcross competition this weekend nor the performance of his opera next weekend.

Hey, remember folks... keep those cards and letters coming. We love to hear from you and your ideas. Special thanks to the floor in Orchard Hill who thought that a comparative essay of the dining commons of the Five Colleges would make a great cover story. We'll keep that in mind.

Fund call boxes not flagpoles

To the Editor:

As one of the 17 Senators who voted against the motion to place an American flag in the center of each residential area, I would like to explain my motives for doing so. Primarily, I feel that the SGA has other things to spend money on. I personally would prefer to see an extra call box on campus than to see the "beautiful" stars and stripes waving over me on a dark night.

Secondly, if we want to beautify the campus, we should do it with art or flowers, not with flags. For hypothetical purposes, let us imagine that flowers and art were scarce and we did resort to flags. Wouldn't it be wonderful to sit on a PVTA bus and pull into Hagis Mall and see a multitude of flags? UMass-Dartmouth does it, why shouldn't the flagship University? One flag for every ethnic group represented on this campus. Imagine seeing the flags of American, Cape Verdean, Irish, Puerto Rican (among others) waving side by side. This show of solidarity would illustrate the diversity on campus. I am sure that the administration would not mind since it would certainly help heal UMass's reputation of being insensitive to the needs of "minorities."

In closing, I would like to apologize to any of my constituents who found my vote "utterly disgraceful" (as Senator Milson put it). As an ALANA Caucus Senator, I feel that my vote fairly represented the sentiments of my constituents. ALANA students do not need American flags to remind them of where they are. We know we are in America when we are followed around stores, when we have to take over buildings to be recognized and when we are the lone colored faces in lecture halls. The few beans in a sea of white rice — only in America.

Senator Diana Estrade

No more child care No more children

To the Editor:

I am appalled at how this "Child Care Now!" campaign has been advertised in the Campus Center. They covered up and taped over most of the other people's signs that were posted on the Campus Center and the Student Union bulletin boards. The excessive and repulsive amounts of paper used was not only terrible for our presently critical environmental crisis, but it was mean-spirited and disrespectful towards fellow, innocent students who also want to voice their causes, functions or just to sell something.

The campaign is not the only guilty party who selfishly covers all the other signs — many do, but not usually to the extent that this "Child Care Now!" campaign has.

I think we need to find a solution to this soon. Perhaps, a solution could be that we are each only allowed to put up one sign on each board. This would be fair because each time I go to hang up a few of my own signs, within hours, I go back and they are usually covered up.

To address the "future procreators" (on the "Child Care Now!" signs), there are already more than five billion people on this planet and this planet can obviously not sustain us in the way we are living. Until we can work out a beneficial way to sustain life in this delicate eco-system that we live in, it is selfish and ignorant to continue to propagate on this planet: to go on living the way our ancestors have, seems impossible at this time without suffering severe consequences. It is time to ask why we have children and the consequences it might have. It has been determined that the number one threat to the environment is over-population because it drives all movement on this earth.

I know there are women who are exceptions to this, but to create more child care on this campus would be advocating that it is fine to have children before someone has finished college and financially prepared to support a family. This is extremely irresponsible. Women, before choosing either to have or not to have children you should be able to take responsibility for your choices. I think we should have more control over our sexual drives — we are not animals.

Furthermore, I am tired of these student takeovers, occupying buildings and threatening these administrators until they get their way. Threats are not a fair way to create change — It is not democratic. [To the administrators,] just because a groups wants something, does not mean that it is best to appease them, just because they've made some noise. It seems as if there is no deliberation over whether these threats are fair or if they should take priority over all the other problems on this campus.

I hope that there are people who agree with me — It seems these days that everyone on this campus has the same beliefs or maybe it is their few voices that drown out the rest of us.

New compilation where it's at

Well, most of you have probably spent your hard-earned cash on the new Snapcase release, or you're saving it for the new Integrity and Strife albums that are about to come out. However, if you have any money left and are willing to take a chance on an excellent hardcore compilation check out New York Underground! Hardcore and Beyond Vol. 1.

New York Underground is an excellent look into some of the lesser known New York hardcore bands. In fact the only bands on this compilation who have had releases prior to this are Muddfoot and Cleanser.

Day In The Life is the first band on the compilation and they contribute two songs: "Spin Control" and "Self Serve." Day In The Life feature ex-Mind Over Matter vocalist George Reynolds and are about to become very well known. They play a driving style of post-hardcore similar to Drive Like Jehu. However they are not as eccentric as Jehu and at they're speedier moments sound a little like newer Snapcase.

Keepin' it real

with Adam Dlugacz

Muddfoot are the second band on this compilation and they contribute "Low Budget" and "Call You Back In 10 Minutes." Muddfoot used to sound like Into Another crossed with Jawbreaker, however this compilation shows them forgoing the Into Another side for a more straight up pop- punk sound. "Low Budget" is probably the best song on this compilation.

The other standout band is Kill Your Idols. Kill Your Idols are another Long Island band and feature ex-members of Clockwise. They play straight up old-school hardcore in the vein of Minor Threat, and they're brand of posi-core is a nice edition to the hardcore world. One song "Lost In Space" is a S.O.A. cover. Look out for these guys.

Pacifier contribute two tracks and are another throwback hardcore band. Pacifier sound like Black Flag, only with a little more melody and not quit as dynamic a sound. John Henry feature ex-Token Entry, ex-Black Train Jack drummer Ernie. John Henry play solid punk rock more reminiscent of the Iam then anything else. John Henry are a proficient band but neither of the songs stayed in my head or stood out. The Drastics play oi/punk the way it was meant to be played, fast guitars with a snotty vocalist. Cleanser contribute "Many Days" and "Rebel."

Every compilation has it's duds and this one is no exception. Reach's version of Leeway meets Into Another is interesting on "Insecurities" and then falls flat on it's face on the second song. Ouiji Pig take the prize for dumbest name and worst songs. These guys sound like Bush and shouldn't be on this compilation, actually the only thing anyone should do to these guys is shoot them.

New York Underground! Hardcore and Beyond Vol. 1 can be ordered from Clean Recordings, P.O. Box 585, Woodmere N.Y., 11598.

• Also out is the debut full-length from Cleanser. Cleanser's album entitled Grime showcases this Long Island band at it's best. Cleanser play metal influenced hardcore, however they sound like a hardcore band incorporating metal rather then a heavy metal band passing themselves off as a hardcore band. The songs are surprisingly catchy and intricate.

I don't actually consider these guys a hardcore band as they strike me as emo-metal if you can imagine the concept. However fans of 108 or Bloodlet should check these guys out. The only weakness is that the vocalist doesn't quite have the vocal power to match the bands intensity. Grime can be ordered through None Of The Above Records, P.O. Box Farmingville, NY 11738.

• In upcoming shows we have the Very Loud Music Festival at Pearl Street and Strife will be playing at Pearl Street around the end of April.

• Some upcoming releases: A split full length CD from Fully and Lady Luck on IJT records. Lady Luck features Roger Miret on bass and Fully features Sergio from Quicksand on bass. 25 Ta' Life have a full length coming out on Another Planet Records. Silent Majority have a full length coming out on Exit Records. Exit Records should also be releasing a split CD with Triplace and Indecision. In My Blood is releasing a compilation featuring Floorpunch, 97A, Rain On the Parade, Atari, Pushed Too Far and Ensign. None of the Above Records will be releasing full lengths from Tension and Kill Your Idols. 2Damn Hype Records is releasing a Clash cover album featuring Shelter, Murphy's Law, H2O, Menauder, Shift, Swinging Utters, Rykers, Down By Law and more. Another Planet Records have a live CD coming out featuring Murphy's Law, H2O, Crown Of Thornz, Skarhead, Sub-Zero, Down Low, 25 Ta Life, Coldfront, Warzone, Rejuvenate, Maximum Penalty and Nine Lives.

Patrick Shanley

What is this new phenomena that is hitting the idiot box?

Web TV.

How about that. Recently I have been reading, hearing, and seeing a lot about this new medium for crawling the net and surfing the web. Everything that I have come across has been very mixed. Most of it, though, has been real negative. I am one who has to see to believe because otherwise how is one supposed to know what is good and what is bad by what others tell you.

So being the curious person that I am, I went to a local Circuit City and asked the nice salesperson for a demonstration and a test drive on my own.

When you purchase a Web TV package for about $300, you are getting a set-top box, which is essentially a 33.6Kbps modem, allowing you to log onto the Internet and to surf the Web. Unlike conventional hookups, you do not have a choice between ISPs (Internet Service Providers). You must pay Web TV Networks (the ISP) a sum of $19.95 a month for cyberspace privileges.

For your money, you get up to six different e-mail users per account, a custom web browser with a simple menu interface and a remote for navigation. For an additional $80 you can get a wireless keyboard — Yippee! One of the cool things is you're automatically given software upgrades and are notified about it too. At this time, there are very few plug-ins available for the system.

So what did I find when the salesperson left me to my own devices? Well, I considered the possibility of trying to pull a racey web page and leave it in plain view on the large screen demo TV, but my conscience got the better of me. Actually, what I did find is that I should have listened to those who told me it stinks, because it really does.

First and foremost, the system does not have the extensive and endless possibilities that a regular PC and say Netscape have. Secondly, the resolution of images is just nothing compared to a PC. Some of the pages that I pulled up included the Museum of Modern Art, NASA and National Geographic. PC screens are far superior than TV.

Another very big draw back is the fact that there is no downloading or printing capabilities as there is no hard disk.

There is no port or plug or anything for this system. Also, even though e-cash is not really big here in the U.S. yet, there is, however, a slot for a smart card. But unless you have a smart card, forget doing any e-cash transactions on the web.

I guess that Web TV really stinks, but could have a lot of potential. Yes, I think that is the accurate word, potential.

There are a lot of things that would have to be added to Web TV in order to grab PC users away from there desktops. Why would someone with all sorts of goodies want to go to something without any and is hard to use even for seasoned veterans? Exactamundo!

There are a few promising aspects that could lure even the most die hard net head.

A) you will soon have liquid crystal television, thus enhanced resolution.

B) you could lie in bed surfing the net at night before you fall asleep.

That was the other thing that got me, also, the fact that this new medium is marketed towards families and novice net surfers. I don't understand how they can portray this system as easy to use, because it is not.

It took me a good 15 minutes just to get used to the dang thing. Even then, I was still a bit shaky with it. I would guesstimate that it would take a novice at least four to five sittings of about three hours each to get proficient with it. D-

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20

Be sure to stay on top of things and finish what you start. Letting things slide now could cause problems later. Your imagination soars and lets you escape a dull routine. Other people want to help you but are unsure how you'll respond, so be generous and accept their advice to the spirit it is offered.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21

Take on added tasks and responsibilities: distractions will dwindle to a minimum and you'll have plenty of time and energy to concentrate on important matters. Keep your plans simple for the immediate future; anything too elaborate could backfire. Do your research first.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21

You have time to catch up on things as an ever-increasing pace; taking a little time to come back to basics may if you're not careful. Your attitude improves and you could be the one others turn to for support and guidance. Be helpful, but refuse to get drawn into a bad situation.

CANCER
June 22-July 22

Personal and professional pressures may be building up fast. Just hang on—you will come out ahead in the end. Family and friends help you keep things in perspective. Your enthusiasm attracts others, and people will take your side. A quick trip or special night out will boost your spirits and recharge your batteries.

LEO
July 23-August 23

See yourself as others see you, and see others in a realistic light. Now is not the time to take things for granted. Make sure you read the fine print and check out the details. Drew inspiration and solutions from past successes to deal with current problems.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22

Trust your instincts. Someone you consider a friend may be more interested in getting something for nothing at your expense. Keep an eye on your budget. Don't neglect domestic chores and responsibilities. Loved ones will come through when they're needed most.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23

Be aware of what's going on around you—much is occurring behind the scenes, but there are clues. Do some thing romantic and fun. Now is the time to take the initiative and be bold. Travel and education, perhaps together, could be on the horizon. Catch up on phone calls and errands.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22

You have more energy and enthusiasm, but don't get drawn in over your head. You may be frustrated with a friend who needs more help than you can provide. Know when to back away from a situation and cool down. Accept support and encouragement from a loved one who wants to offer it.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21

Make an effort to balance work and family. Going to extremes with either one will cause problems. Do things with a group rather than alone. Taking a moderate risk could lead to a big reward. Try to keep a secret, though it may be hard. You'll be glad you did.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20

Ask questions and be persistent to get the answers you need. Support from a friend or family member could have strings attached, be aware and decide if you want to pay that price. Older person offers helpful advice and younger person's enthusiasm proves contagious.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18

You have the time and the information to find the source of a problem and clear it up. Strive to see the big picture and refuse to get bogged down with small details. Don't be too proud to accept help from friends and family members. Take a small break and get away from things to collect your thoughts.

PISCES
February 19-March 20

You know the right thing to say and the right time to say it. Someone who has been opposing you comes over to your side. You could reunite with old friends. Listening to a friend or loved one who needs to talk could score points as well as give you a new perspective.

Season's toughest stretch starts with Loyola

By Jeremy R. Adams
Collegian Staff

JEREMY R. ADAMS \ COLLEGIAN

Jay Robbins, UMass' face-off man, will literally go head- to-head with Loyola tomorrow.

There are a few especially visible programs in college lacrosse, and Loyola College has one of them. The No. 9 Greyhounds are currently 4–2, and in just as crucial need of winning this Saturday at Richard F. Garber Field as are their hosts, the 5–3 Minutemen.

The all–time series between the two schools weighs in Loyola's favor, at 4–0. The Minutemen first met the Greyhounds in 1963, and most recently in 1992. Loyola won the last meeting 17–10.

UMass is ranked No. 12 in the country right now, coming off a home win against New Hampshire on Tuesday. The Minutemen's season has had its ups and downs, from back to back losses to top–caliber opponents Hofstra and Virginia, to a strong showing in a win over perennial power Army.

"We're where we want to be. Obviously we wanted to be 8–0, but the team has progressed well. Being able to be [practicing] outside consistently, hopefully that will help us," said Massachusetts coach Greg Cannella.

Inconsistent performance by Mother Nature has not affected the Minutemen lately, regular outside practices have aided them in preparation for the match–up with the Greyhounds.

Loyola boasts one of the all–time best lacrosse programs in NCAA Division I history, and this year is no break in tradition. The Hounds' four wins are over strong Division I opponents, including Air Force, No. 8 Notre Dame (Apr. 20 at home on the Minutemen's docket), Fairfield and No. 11 Brown.

Cannella praises the Greyhounds, citing them as a team with many strengths.

"They're a very talented team, they've got great team speed," Cannella said. "They love to play the transition."

"They've got great shooters and are very well coached team, a good group of athletes. They will be ready for us," Cannella added.

One concern of the Minutemen against Loyola may be shoring up some transitional problems, as New Hampshire was able to capitalize on the absences of defensive players Adam Waxer and Jay Negus due to injuries.

"You certainly miss people when they are hurt, especially Adam," Cannella said. "He's a great communicator on the field, and a very intense player. Hopefully he'll be back in action on Saturday."

Waxer saw limited action in the close loss at No. 3 Duke due to a pulled groin muscle, and sat out the UNH win. Negus was sidelined in the Duke game when he suffered a partially separated bruised shoulder.

"They're going to both try to give it a go in practice, but you've got to be careful because there are four more games to go after this Saturday they have to be healthy for and we want to make sure they are," Cannella said.

The remaining schedule for the Minutemen after Loyola includes home meetings with No. 8 Notre Dame, and No. 5 Syracuse. Harvard and Brown are the Minutemen's two remaining away games of their regular season.

The game will be broadcast live on WMUA, 91.1 FM. Pregame begins 15 minutes before the 1 p.m. face–off.

UM women face Rutgers after close loss to Green

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

As both teams walked off of a frigid Chase Field, the Minutewomen (2–4) had their heads held high, while the Big Green (6–1) were getting ready for a verbal thrashing from coach Amy Patton.

Despite a toughly fought 8–6 first half score, and a balanced scoring attack, UMass was not able to come back and pull off the upset.

The difference between good and great teams is the great ones make the winning run on the scoreboard, and Dartmouth did just that. Five unanswered goals starting the second half culminated a 7–0 run for the Big Green, and they held on for the win.

The fact of the matter was the Minutewomen were just not going to walk into Dartmouth's home opener and stroll away with a victory. UMass had to play their best, and in this game, they were close – to the frustration of Big Green players like senior defender Andrea Krumholz. Frustration was mirrored on the faces of the home team as the visitors kept up the comeback bid, and in the second half, sportsmanship evolved into hard, cheap fouls by the hosts.

For UMass coach Francesca McClellan, this is the team she wanted to see against their other nationally ranked opponents this season. In six games, the Minutewomen have faced four top 15 teams, with all of their losses coming to said teams.

"We are very pleased with the team's effort," McClellan said. "And there were two important things that evolved from this game. One, our team play, because we played as a whole unit on offense and defense. Two, we played for 60 minutes. The game never really got totally away from us, and we're continuing to improve."

The game started out strong for UMass, with sophomore attacker Laura Korutz (8 goals, 6 assists, 14 points) scoring off of the opening draw, giving the team the lead just :14 into the game. Dartmouth came back with three unanswered goals, until senior attacker Stephanie Walsh (11, 1, 12) put on a scoring move clinic, netting her first of two goals in the game at the 11:45 mark for the 3–2 lead. After a Big Green timeout, the teams traded goals for the rest of the half, with the hosts rattling off two important goals in the final minutes for the 8–6 lead.

The scoring run continued until the 8:44 mark of the second half,

UMass baseball hosts Temple for three game-series

JENNIFER JUTRAS \ COLLEGIAN

Aaron Braunstein, who has helped the UMass baseball team with his offensive output, will be called upon when the Minutemen face Temple this weekend.

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

Starting tomorrow at noon, the Massachusetts baseball team (12–6, 3–3 Atlantic 10) squares off against Atlantic 10 rival Temple (6–18, 1–5 A–10) in a three–game conference series. Saturday will see a doubleheader at Earl E. Lorden Field, with the third game of the series at 12 p.m.

This weekend's matchup carries along with it more than just another conference series. What's exciting about this weekend's games are not necessarily the contests themselves, but that there are two records just waiting to be broken.

The first record is that of career games won, which is deadlocked at 20 between senior co–captain Jason Bennett and UMass alumni Jeff Toothaker, Doug Welenc, Carl Boteze and Phil Tarpey.

"He's got to be sharp," coach Mike Stone said of his first– game starter. "He pitched well against Dayton. His slider is back, and he's using all four of his pitches well."

For good reason, Stone was reluctant to talk about Bennett breaking the record because he didn't want Bennett to lose focus on the business at hand — pitching well.

Bennett has appeared in 37 games during his collegiate career, 21 of which he has started. His career record stands at 20–4. The most important thing is a win for the ballclub, but this record is long deserved for Bennett, who has paid his dues and is currently the team's No. 1 pitcher in the rotation.

The other record is not a career record, but the total number of last year's homeruns hit. Last season, the Minutemen hit 31 balls over various fences along the East Coast. This year, led by the bats of Doug Clark (6 HRs) and Aaron Braunstein (6), UMass (30) only needs one more homerun to tie last year's mark.

The homeruns are good, but Stone wants to make sure his team doesn't forget how to get base knocks.

"I'd prefer to see them hit line drives," Stone said. "It's nice to have the runs, but soon they'll be

Men's tennis downs Tufts as spring season rolls on

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's tennis team is continuing to roll over the competition, with its latest victory coming on the road in a 5–1 win over Tufts University on Wednesday.

The unseasonably cold weather once again played a factor as the doubles competition was cancelled, although it didn't matter as the Minutemen wrapped things up early, to improve to 13–1 on the season, 5–1 in the spring.

"The big thing was to find out which team was tougher," assistant coach Doug Knuth said. "I challenged them to be tougher, and fight through the elements, and they did it, right from the first point."

UMass took five of the six singles matches for the win, with freshman Rob Manchester at No. 3 singles setting the pace. He notched his team–leading 15th singles victory 6–3, 6–1 over James Kinnera.

Freshman Patrick Slyman kept up the strong play of the newcomers as well with a 6–3, 6–0 win at the No. 2 spot.

"I think all the freshman have got a lot closer with a team," Slyman said. "[Wednesday] was a tough day, cold, and windy, and we knew it was going to be tough, but we came out and played pretty good."

The other two first–year players, Rufino Navarro at No. 5 and Parsa Samii at No. 6 both came away with straight set victories as well, 7–6, 6–2, and 6–2, 6–3 respectively.

Junior Alejandro Aller, and sophomore Todd Cheney were back in the lineup. Aller was a winner 6–2, 6–4 over Adam DeMezza at No. 4 singles, while Cheney fell to Andy Schwartz 6–2, 6–1.

The victory for UMass marked the first time that they had beaten Tufts since the mid–1970s, and that most definitely had an effect on the way the Minutemen went about this match. They came out strong, erasing that statistic and picked up a solid win.

"It felt good, with the weather conditions and all to come out of there with

Minutewoman water polo cruises in CWPA Tournament

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's water polo team successfully finished the CWPA League Tournament last weekend, winning all of the matches. The No. 9 Minutewomen are 17– 3 overall on the season, a new school record for single– season wins.

The first match took place amidst a cheering crowd that included Chancellor David K. Scott Friday night at Totman pool. The Minutewomen crushed Boston College 26–0, the fourth time in their history that they had a shutout.

They came out strong in the first quarter, scoring nine goals in the first eight minutes. Freshman Emily Didinger led the team with four goals. Laurie Edwards, Marcie Hupp, Jacqui Tichenor and Andrea Vazquez all scored three goals apiece.

UMass coach Bob Newcomb said that one goal for this game was to keep up the intensity of play that they had in California, as well as executing fundamental game skills. He was very pleased with his team's performance.

"BC is a little on the weak side, and we were much faster than they were, so it really allowed us to go right down and get a jump on them," Newcomb said.

Sophomore Peggy Nieves was in goal, where she tallied five saves, had five steals and one assist.

One of the obstacles that UMass had to overcome was having a shallow end goal. According to Newcomb, with Nieves' height, it makes a big difference in the game.

"This is just one of the limitations we have in this facility, the fact that we have to play with a shallow end goal, which looks gigantic here and with a short goalie it is even more of a disadvantage, but we really tried to press them defensively and they only had a couple of shots in the whole game," Newcomb said. "That's a credit to our defense."

The win against BC was a good start for the Minutewomen, preparing them for the rest of the weekend.

"We've never played BC before, we really just dominated the game from the very beginning and I think we just played like UMass water polo and this year we are really good," senior Nancy MacNeil said. "We have a strong team, a lot of depth and BC is a new program — this is the first year they have been in the league — so I think we just played really good right from the beginning, we started off and took control of the game and did really well."

On Saturday, UMass took on Wellesley College in the teams' first meet of that day, downing the visitors 20–1. The Minutewomen came out strong again in the first quarter of play, tallying eight goals. They scored six in the second quarter, three in the third and three in the final. Senior Vicky Bamond led the Minutewoman offense with five goals.

Nieves was in goal for the Minutewomen and had five saves. The only goal she allowed came in the last quarter of play. Vazquez also came out strong for the defense, making five steals.

That evening the Minutewomen headed over to Amherst College's Pratt Pool to take on rivals Harvard University. Last year, UMass lost to Harvard in double overtime 9–7. The Minutewoman totally dominated the Crimson this year, however.

UMass had 24 goals to Harvard's four, scoring 11 goals in the second quarter to make it their strongest of the game. Freshman Katie Grogan had eight goals against the Crimson, breaking not only the record for single–game scoring, but also the record for single–season scoring at 59.

Nieves also set a new school record — she had 15 saves on 19 shots.

The Minutewomen finished up the tournament with a 21–2 win over MIT. Continuing the pattern they started in the BC game, their highest scoring quarter was the

Coptic Christians react to suggested army ban

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Christians should be purged from Egypt's army for the sake of national security, the leader of Egypt's largest Muslim fundamentalist group said in remarks published yesterday.

Mustafa Mashoor, the supreme guide of the Muslim Brotherhood, told the weekly Rose El Youssef magazine that Coptic Christians should also be forced to pay a religious tax that was once levied on Christians and Jews in the Muslim world.

Christian leaders criticized the remarks, saying they pointed to the group's intolerance. The brotherhood, which has renounced violence since the 1970s, has repeatedly said it would treat Christians and Muslims equally if it were ever in power.

"The remarks unveil the ugly face of the group's ideology and removes its tolerant mask," said a front-page editorial in Watani, the newspaper of the Coptic Christian community.

Christians make up 10 percent of Egypt's 60 million people. Mashoor could not be reached for further comment, but a tape of his interview was played for The Associated Press.

Mashoor said that ridding the Egyptian army of Christians would better serve Egypt's security.

Customs agents seize suspected drug funds

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — U.S. Customs agents found more than $5.6 million in suspected drug money hidden in the false ceiling of a tractor-trailer in one of the largest seizures of cash headed across the U.S.-Mexico border.

The money was found Wednesday when agents searched the truck trying to enter Mexico over the Bridge of the Americas. Authorities were trying to determine the money's source and intended recipient. Customs Special Agent in Charge George McNenney said that the agency suspects it is related to drugs, considering the amount and the effort taken to hide it.

"When you see currency in this amount, hidden in the ceiling of a trailer, it is more than likely drug money," he said.

The rig's driver, who was not identified, was not detained. Possession of cash — even in large amounts — is not a crime. U.S. law requires border crossers to declare if they are taking more than $10,000 out of the country, but authorities usually cannot detain a person if they unwittingly moved cash.

"Before we can make an arrest we have to have probable cause to believe that the person involved committed a violation," said Customs investigator Joe Webber.

One expert predicted that drug lords will react violently to the seizure, seeking retribution for a significant cash loss.

NCAA: UM 'did not know' of alleged Camby violations

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

The National Collegiate Athletic Association's (NCAA) enforcement staff announced on Friday the University of Massachusetts, "did not know nor should [it] have known," former basketball star Marcus Camby received benefits from a sports agent while a member of the men's basketball team.

When allegations claiming Camby, last season's consensus National Player of the year, violated NCAA regulations when he accepted gifts from Hartford, Conn. lawyer Wesley Spears, Chancellor David K. Scott named a committee to examine the case. If evidence showed the University was aware of Camby's interaction with Spears, the NCAA would be in a position to penalize the school's athletic department.

Though this recent development shines favorably upon UMass, an official ruling will not be issued until the NCAA Executive Committee examines the report when it convenes May 6–8.

The UMass investigative committee was chaired by Associate Chancellor Susan Pearson; Glenn Wong, head of the department of sport studies and the University's faculty athletics representative to the NCAA; Jeff O'Malley, assistant athletic director for compliance; Jo–Anne Vanin, dean of students and associate vice chancellor for student affairs; Patricia J. Vittim, associate professor of entomology and co–chair of the Faculty Senate Athletic Council; and Linda Bruno, commissioner of the Atlantic 10 athletic conference.

The committee submitted its findings for review by the NCAA enforcement staff in mid–March.

Scott said that Pearson's committee played a large part in the speed with which the NCAA addressed the issue.

"Their thoroughness and attention to detail has enabled the NCAA to move on this matter with expediency," Scott said.

In a letter to Scott, the NCAA's William S. Saum said the enforcement staff, "appreciates the University's thorough review of this matter."

Kwame Ture to speak tonight in one of last U.S. appearances

By Gregory Casimir
Collegian Staff

Tonight, in the Campus Center Auditorium, militant black activist and international spokesman Kwame Ture will be a featured speaker in a program at University of Massachusetts.

Ture was diagnosed with cancer in 1996 for which he is currently being treated, but his appearance at UMass will be one of his final in America before he returns back to Africa at the end of the month.

Formerly known as Stokely Carmichael, Kwame Ture, like Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Malcolm X, is regarded as one of the most influential Civil Rights/Black liberation leaders of the '60s.

In 1965, as chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), Carmichael championed the development of independent political, economic and cultural resources for the black community. This concept took on the identity of the slogan "Black Power," — a phrase that resonated throughout Africa, the Caribbean, Europe and America.

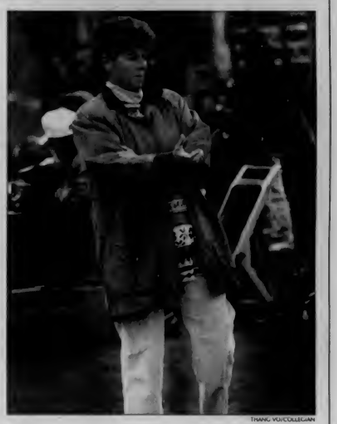
In 1967, Carmichael went to Africa under the invitation of Dr. Kwame Nkrumah, the Pan–African theoretician and first president of the newly independent Ghana. After the assassination of King in 1968, Carmichael moved his base of operations to Guinea where he served as the exiled President Nkrumah's political secretary until the president's death.

At the invitation of President Ahmed Sekou Toure, the then–Carmichael made his home in Guinea. In tribute to his two mentors, he changed his name to Kwame Ture. and remained active in Africa and the U.S. as the president of the All African People's Revolutionary Party, a Pan– Africanist organization.



Prof. Esther Terry, chair of the W.E.B. Du Bois Department of Afro–American Studies, expressed what having a person of Ture's caliber come to UMass means.

"His life encompasses so much of the contemporary political history of the black world in our time. We in the Department thought there should be some public recognition of that in the Valley," Terry said.

The tribute will take place in the Campus Center Auditorium. This program is being sponsored by the W.E.B. Du Bois Department of Afro–American Studies and the Distinguished Visitors Program, the Campus Activities Office, the Black Mass Communications Project and the Black Student Union.

The panelists for the tribute will include: Judy Richardson, the co–producer of the prize–winning documentary "Malcolm X: Make It Plain," Bill Strickland, a faculty member of the W.E.B. Du Bois Afro–American Studies Department, the author of Malcolm X: Make It Plain, and a member of the Board of the Rainbow Coalition; and Ekwueme Michael Thelwell, a student activist with Ture at Howard, novelist, and former Chair of the W.E.B. Du Bois of Afro–American Studies at UMass.

This event is free and open to the public. For more information, call 545–2751 or stop by the W.E.B. Du Bois Department of Afro–American Studies on the third floor of the New Africa House building.

Students, SGA members question provost candidate

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

Provost candidate Kenneth Smith told students last Friday that he wants to work together with them if he comes to the University of Massachusetts.

"We want to build a community and we want to build it on respect," Smith said. "That should be the underlying philosophy."

Currently a teaching faculty member at the University of Arizona at Tuscon, Smith spoke to a group of 10 students at Memorial Hall last Friday evening.

Smith began by describing his professional career and experiences at Arizona, where he was Dean of the College of Business and Public Administration and vice provost before he returned to teaching.

"During the time I have been there, the University has improved dramatically in our faculty and our academic programs," Smith said. "We have been successful in making the quality work for students."

Smith said that the University of Arizona had undergone a transition in its perception of its mission.

"We have gone from thinking of ourselves as a research University to thinking of ourselves as a student–centered program," Smith said. "We need to think of things more from a students' perspective."

Smith went on to say that he felt that the nature of higher education and the needs of students are changing rapidly. He felt that it was important for students to evaluate their academic and life–time goals.

Second NELSC conference succeeds in Latino unity goal

By Gregory Casimir
Collegian Staff

The second annual weekend–long Northeast Latin Student Conference (NELSC), held in the Campus Center, came to an end yesterday at 2 p.m.

The conference was directed by the Steering Committee and 15 volunteer University of Massachusetts students. The members of the committee included Ernie Casada, Tara Sanabria, Victor Perez, Yuisa Perez, Rosa Rodriguez, Mayra Anderson, Ana Genoa, Melissa Hernandez, Westley Pereira, Jackie Leon, Malwin Davila and Wilma Crespo.

Pereira expressed his opinion on the necessity of a conference for Latino students.

"The purpose of the conference is to promote Latino unity in the neighboring Northeastern states, and to also help create a network among Latino students in the college area," Pereira said.

The theme of the conference was, "Nuestra Cultra." NELSC offered three days of informative and educational workshops that centered around an exploration of the history, society and community of Latin American peoples.

Among some of the workshops that took place were "Roots: Identifying our Roots," which featured Louis Reyes Rivera, a poet, historian and author from New York, and a workshop led by Lynette Bloise, the associate director of mental health at UMass, that addressed the issue of drop–out rates in the Latino community.

Tara Sanabria, a psychology major, spoke on the origin of the conference.

"It comes from a need to address certain issue that pertain directly to us," Sanabria said.

"In order to create unity among other people, we must first create unity among ourselves," said sophomore Yuisa Perez.

The conference attracted many students from UMass and other schools as well. UMass Boston and Lowell were in attendance, as well as students from New York, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island.

In addition to the insightful workshops, the NELSC also offered a cultural gala to celebrate their heritage and culture. Cayena, the UMass Dominican student dance troupe, performed as part of the festivities. There was a poetry reading, and a party as well.

On the last day of the conference, Sanabria gave a speech that urged all the participants to keep the work started at the conference alive.

"By remaining committed to our community, using the ideas and action plans from the conference, as well as the connections that you will make, you will turn concepts into reality," Sanabria said.

By the amount of people in attendance, many people involved felt that the NELSC was an overall success.

A statement issued by the Steering Committee read, "A good conference is not only made up of the planning and organizing that goes into it, but by the contributions made by those in attendance."

For those people who were not of Latino descent, there was something for them as well.

"We all have similar issues," student Rosa Rodriguez said. "There isn't something like this for Cape Verdean students or other groups. This is a good event for all to benefit from."

Senior Victor Perez, a finance major, conveyed his thoughts on the true spirit of the NELSC.

"It was more than a conference. It felt like a family," Perez said.

Air Force uses U-2 radar in search effort for A-10

By Rich Saskal

EAGLE, Colo. — Abnormal shapes in the snow have provided the only tangible tips for the Air Force in its search of the rugged Colorado mountains for a missing pilot and his $8 million warplane.

While skiers have provided useful information, U-2 radar photos provide the best chance of pinpointing where Capt. Craig Button may have crashed his A-10 Thunderbolt 11 days ago.

Any wreckage would be covered by snow, but the high-tech U-2 radar cameras can see through the snow. Photos taken this weekend will be analyzed to see if the shapes under the snow are just rocks or pieces of the plane's engines, which investigators say are likely to have survived a crash.

"They are abnormal shapes that return on the radar different from normal, natural phenomenon," Lt. Gen. Frank Campbell said yesterday. "We need a little more information before we put ground crews at risk in high-snow areas."

The photos have led investigators to focus on six specific sites within a 476-square-mile wilderness area about

Remaining hostages freed in Colombian jail drama

By Ricardo Mazalan
Associated Press

VALLEDUPAR, Colombia — Heavily armed inmates in control of this northern city's overcrowded prison released their 11 remaining hostages yesterday after authorities promised no reprisals and improved living conditions.

Under a 12-point agreement reached during negotiations Saturday, the 10 inmates controlling the Valledupar district prison agreed to free the hostages yesterday and today surrender weapons including submachine guns, semiautomatic rifles and more than 1,000 rounds of ammunition.

"Everyone's tired. I think everyone's happy that this is coming to an end," said local International Red Cross coordinator Thierry Grobet, who helped mediate the 10-day standoff.

The 11 freed captives, including prison deputy director Isabel Maya, walked out of the jail's only gate in the midday heat, some shaking hands with their former captors before entering Red Cross vehicles that took them to a hospital for checkups.

Chief government negotiator Jose Noe Rios promised not to retaliate against the mutineers, who killed three guards and a policeman in the failed April 3 escape attempt that led to the takeover.

During the course of negotiations, they freed five hostages. The 10 mutineers include three ex-policemen and most are either serving time or awaiting sentence on charges including murder, kidnapping and sedition.

The government also pledged to create a special commission that will review inmates' cases, and said it would allow those from other parts of the country to be transferred to prisons closer to their homes.

The more than 580 inmates who did not take part in the escape attempt were not confined to their cellblocks and, authorities say, put pressure on the mutineers to resolve the crisis peacefully. The prison was built to house 120 inmates.

Grobet said no one was hurt in a brief exchange of gunfire before dawn yesterday between security forces surrounding the jail and the mutineers.

"Those in the prison say it was a provocation from outside. And those outside said that that all the gunfire was inside," he said. Colombia's jails are plagued by overcrowding, unsanitary conditions and corruption among guards, some of whom participated in more than two dozen disturbances and riots this year to protest a plan to replace them with police.

Critics have said the prison inmates would never have been able to get to the weapons locker had guards been more professional and less chummy with inmates.

Justice Minister Carlos Medellin said Saturday that the government would create regional committees to study the corrections situation and present to Congress legislation that would free inmates convicted of lesser crimes and to expand house arrests.

20 miles west of Vail. They will be analyzed at Beale Air Force Base near Sacramento, Calif.

One U-2 spy plane searched for Button along with 10 airplanes and 10 Army helicopters yesterday.

The search for Button, 32, and the A-10, which was carrying four 500-pound bombs, shifted from Arizona to Colorado on April 5 when faint radar signals were detected in the central Rocky Mountains. Radar data and witness accounts indicate Button consciously broke away from a three-plane training formation over Arizona and flew to Colorado. Air Force officials previously suggested Button could have become incapacitated and put the plane on autopilot. Campbell said investigators plan to re-interview people who reported hearing booming noises in the Vail area on the day Button disappeared. Other witnesses have said they saw dark clouds that could have been smoke.

Once upon a pond... The Regatta

On July 21, 1871 the first college crew of Massachusetts Agricultural College scored an outstanding achievement when they beat the crews of Harvard and Brown Universities in the first Intercollegiate Regatta of American Colleges. Mass Aggie's team was comprised of farm boys who had practiced just over a week, from a College that had been in existence for only four years.

An account of the miraculous win appeared in the Springfield Republican: "The crew have practiced but 10 days under Josh Ward, and their boating knowledge has been gained in a old boat... Ward says that the time was so short that he concluded not to put the boys on severe training. So he has given them coarse food and plenty of advice."

Despite a poor start and an outside position, the M.A.C. boys quickly pulled ahead, and by the time they crossed the finish line three miles down the river, they were in the lead by a dozen lengths, nearly two minutes ahead of second- place Harvard, setting the record for a six-oared crew.

When victory became apparent from the sidelines, a spectator observed William Smith Clark, president of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, shouting, jumping and throwing his hat into the air. Later, as the triumphant team marched proudly through Amherst, the delighted President Clark followed behind shouting loudly, "We've won, we've won!"

The crew of 1871's inspiring victory caught the entire nation's attention and helped to put the young Massachusetts Agricultural College on the map.

Students talk on 'whiteness' class

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

A group of University of Massachusetts students gave a presentation on the nature of white society, the focus of a new Women's Studies class, in Thompson Hall last Wednesday evening.

The presentation was an adaptation of one they gave at the Conference on Whiteness and White American Culture in Burlington, N.J. this past winter.

The students have extensively discussed these issues in the class, "The social construction of Whiteness and Women," taught by Women's Studies Department Professor Arlene Avakian.

Avakian said that the concept of whiteness was a growing interest of hers, and because of the amount of literature now available, she was able to institute the course.

The presentation, which summed up some of the discussions and concepts the students experienced over the course of the last semester, opened with students reading journal entries on the nature of the course and some of their feelings regarding the issues being discussed.

One of the goals of the presentation was to explore race through a limited number of primary and secondary sources. The class selected and read three brief passages from their class materials. The passages then served as a springboard for discussion amongst the students.

The first selection came from a book called Killers of the Dream, which was written by Lilian Smith and was originally published in 1949.

Avakian explained that Smith was a Southern woman reflecting on the ways racism affected white people and the contradictions between their society's establishments of Christianity and racism.

The induced discussion involved ideas such the relationship between sexuality and racism and the oppression involved in each.

The second selection came from The Invention of White Race: Racial Oppression and Social Control, a book written by Theodore Allen, who suggests that racial oppression may be separated from race. As an example, he uses the oppression of the Irish people over time.

"We're so conditioned to look at race as biological... once you separate race from biology theoretically, it turns your head around," Avakian said.

The students' follow-up discussion explored a number of comparisons between oppressed groups in the United States and the distinctions between them. The question at hand was, "Is racism an issue of color?" The discussion did not allow adequate time to come to a conclusion, but opened up many doors, and many ways of looking at the situation, Avakian said.

The last reading was taken from a Toni Morrison book titled Playing in the Dark. The book discusses the creation of whiteness through literature and other forms of media.

The specific passage discussed tans and hair color and related them to complex issues for race and what society sees as attractive.

In the following discussion, the students discussed the nature of the paradox that says that attractive skin is darker, yet at the same time, society sees lighter hair as more beautiful. Some suggested that tanned skin is attractive because it is seen as exotic, but that the light hair represents a person's desire to retain their whiteness.

The students then took the opportunity to relate their discussion to the UMass campus — more specifically the Goodell takeover in which many of the participants were involved.

Some of the students suggested that although the leaders of the takeover emphasized that it was not just limited to ALANA students, issues of race could not be separated from the takeover and that many of the actions taken could be seen as attempts not to isolate white students by making the takeover a race issue.

Following the discussion, audience members were given a chance to introduce related topics for discussion, and add their own spin to the talk.

Many of the students who have taken this course and were a part of the presentation praised the course as one of the best they have ever taken.

"What's most interesting about this discussion is the responsibility it necessitates from the white people who participate," said Erin Feldman, a senior social thought and political economy major.

The course "The Social Construction of Whiteness and Women" will be available for next semester through preregistration.

"I want to challenge white students on this campus to enroll in this class next semester so they can start confronting their own white privilege, because as a white people, we have a lot of work to do," said Kathy McCarvey, a senior Women's Studies major who was part of the presentation. "Because this is a great place to start."

"We need to help them [students] formulate a better understanding of what they want to achieve in their education," Smith said.

Speaking on the role of the provost, Smith said that a provost's relationship with students was a critical part of the job.

"The provost should be a voice for the students," Smith said. "One of their responsibilities would be their ability to build a strong relationship with students."

Smith then invited the students to ask him questions.

"I would be interested in seeing UMass from your eyes," Smith said. "I would like to know how this would be an even better place to go to school."

Addressing students' concerns

Student Government Association (SGA) Trustee-elect and Speaker of the Senate Brian Tirrell asked the first question, inquiring how Smith felt about the proposal to create an honors college at UMass.

"Well, one of the things about a University like UMass is that we have great diversity in the student body," Smith replied. "The real trick is how within a big institution you make it seem small and personal, to tailor to the needs of specific students."

Smith said that he felt the University should pursue initiatives like the honors college proposal and others that target the needs of specific group of students, while maintaining a larger sense of community.

"My answer is basically to say that we would like to take a lot of these initiatives and develop a stronger response," Smith said. "One caveat is to develop sense of community that brings people together and to make sure that students take advantage of the richness and diversity of the campus."

SGA President Lia Wong asked Smith for his view on ethnic studies at UMass.

"There are two contexts, academic programs and support services," Smith said. "We need to look at what are the things we can do to make sure that the University is providing a learning environment in which students are successful."

Continuing education student Jennifer Restle then questioned Smith on his feelings about access for disabled students at UMass.

"The University of Arizona is one of the more accommodating universities in the country. We have had some good results," Smith answered. "We also have one of the best programs in the country for learning disabilities. What that means is we are more experienced."

Wong continued the discussion by asking Smith for his views on student activism.

"I would like to build a relationship with students so that problems could be solved in the normal course of things," Smith said. "If we have a demonstration, it tells us that the normal processes are not working effectively. I would be disappointed if it got to that point. I would hope that we could have an ongoing dialogue on these issues."

Smith said that he would schedule regular meetings with students leadership in order to improve communications on campus.

"I would want to have regular contact with students," Smith said. "A regular time to meet with representatives of student leadership to make sure that I understand things that are developing on campus."

The meeting closed with Smith explaining his reasons for applying for the provost position at UMass.

"What I have done in my career is I think I have made a difference in helping the organizations I have been involved in significantly improve," Smith said. "I would like to join a University that I could contribute to, where I could make a difference. I see it as an opportunity to help a university to realize its potential and become even better than it is."

Smith was the fourth candidate to interview at UMass for the provost position. The next candidate scheduled for interview is Dario Cortes, who will speak with students tonight at 6 p.m. in Campus Center 804-8.

An objective press?

Last week clashes erupted on the West Bank over the building in Har Homa, a new suburb in the Jerusalem area. The American press has condemned the building as a provocation and have practically accused Israel of breaking international law. Meanwhile, Yassar Arafat has used Har Homa as an excuse to kill innocent Israeli civilians. In response to Arafat's breach of international law, most American leaders short of President Clinton condemned his actions, but the press ignores their condemnations.

Last week at the American Israel Policy Affairs Committee (AIPAC) national conference in Washington, D.C., Democratic and Republican leaders addressed the conference. All agreed that Arafat was wrong. However, if you read Associated Press articles or watched CNN broadcasts about AIPAC, then you only heard House Speaker Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.) and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu condemn Arafat and the complacent American press that helps him wage war against the innocent. The press did not mention a word about the speeches from Vice President Al Gore, Sen. John Kerry (D- Mass.) and House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt (D-Mo.), all of whom agreed with Netanyahu and Gingrich.

"In the first half of 1996, the New York Times referred to Netanyahu as a hard liner 33 times, but only used the reference twice for Syrian dictator Hafez Assad."

Matthew Wurtzel

Earlier this month, both Democratic and Republican senators co-sponsored a bill to remember the 30th anniversary of the reunification of Jerusalem. Names on the original proposal include Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.), Alfonse D'Amato (R.-N.Y.) and Jesse Helms (R.-N.C.).

How can our leaders on both sides of the aisle be wrong? When Democrats like Gore, Kerry and Gephardt agree with the likes of Gingrich, D'Amato and Helms, it becomes clear who is right and who is mistaken.

The press clearly has an agenda that distorts issues surrounding the Arab-Israeli conflict. On CNN's "Reliable Sources," they refer to AIPAC delegates as extremists who will do anything to quell those who hold dissenting opinions about Israel. However, AIPAC is right. The press has an agenda against Israel.

The media displayed its true colors last week with its coverage of AIPAC. By ignoring Democratic leaders and focusing on the presence of the lone Republican speaker at the conference, they painted a picture of AIPAC delegates as hard line conservatives rather than a mixture of liberals, moderates and conservatives who are all concerned about the future of Israel.

The coverage of AIPAC is clearly not the only example of the media's inaccurate coverage of Middle Eastern affairs. In the first half of 1996, the New York Times referred to Netanyahu as a hard liner 33 times, but only used the reference twice for Syrian dictator Hafez Assad. Although Assad is not an elected leader, in the same period the Times never referred to Assad as a dictator.

More recently, the press has not given us all the facts in the recent insurgencies surrounding Har Homa, and the "Jerusalem question." The new suburb was once part of East Jerusalem in Jordan before the 1967 war. The Jordanians fortified all the hills in East Jerusalem. The snipers atop the hills regularly killed innocent Israeli civilians. After the Israelis captured East Jerusalem in the 1967 war, the government decided to build residential neighborhoods on the hills, so no one could use those hills as fortifications. Har Homa is the last undeveloped hill.

When Old Jerusalem was under Jordanian rule before 1967, the Jordanians barred all Jews and most Christians from entering the city to pray. They allowed Jewish and Christian holy sites to fall into disrepair and ruin. Today, the Israelis keep the city open to all faiths, and they permit maintenance on all religious sites.

The media refers to East Jerusalem as Traditional Arab East Jerusalem. The traditional and Arab references suggest that the area is predominately Arab. However, East Jerusalem is home to 200,000 Jews and only 175,000 Arabs. Clearly the press is misleading the public.

Not only does the press fail to inform readers about Har Homa's history and the truth about Jerusalem, they often omit the fact that the Israelis are building 2000 new homes in Jerusalem for Arabs in addition to the 3000 for Jews in Har Homa.

Only the media and Arafat talk about the Jerusalem question. The politicians and diplomats know there is no question surrounding the city's future because the Oslo Accords clearly state that Jerusalem will remain unified as the Israeli capital. The Accords forever bar the notion of a Palestinian capital there.

The media fails to fulfill its role as messenger of truth when they neglect to place current events in context by omitting background history. The media's failure reveals their bias in favor of the Arabs. The media's inaccuracies and biases are just as much a threat to the Peace Process in the Middle East as Arafat's use of terrorism.

Honoring Kwame Ture

Tonight at the Campus Center Auditorium, the UMass community will be presented with a rare and invaluable opportunity. In honoring Kwame Ture, the University rises to embrace ideals it often espouses but seldom enacts.

When we honor Ture, we honor freedom of thought and expression, resistance to oppression, dissent from arrogance, determination in the face of daunting odds and a steadfast commitment to the truth.

Valuable above all will be the opportunity to listen to the words of this extraordinary figure. Ture's speech promises to be one of the most important given to the Five Colleges in many years, because the concerns and perspectives he brings with him couldn't be more timely.

Hussein Ibish

Ture's historic call for "Black Power" in the mid 1960s was a bombshell. It separated the first period of the civil rights movement, which challenged the de jure segregation of the Jim Crow south, from the empowerment movements of the late '60s, which challenged the de facto segregation of the United States as a whole.

The issues raised by Ture's call for Black Power 30 years ago remain largely unresolved. De facto apartheid in housing and education, for example, are still standard features of American society. With chillingly prophetic prescience, Ture and Michael Thelwell wrote in 1966 that the increasingly African American inner cities "can either become concentration camps with a bitter and volatile population whose only power is the power to destroy, or organized and powerful communities able to make constructive contributions to the total society." Thirty-one years later, this observation and its implications are at least pressing as when it was first made.

A crucial aspect of Black Power for Ture was identification with the Third World. Ture explained that African Americans had a responsibility to oppose and try to neutralize United States imperialism, and support anti- colonial struggles. In our era of the New World Order, where the United States styles itself the "sole remaining superpower" and seeks unprecedented world dominance, this necessary moral imperative bears almost constant repetition.

Ture became a dedicated Pan Africanist and socialist and was a close associate of the Pan Africanist independence leaders Kwame Nkrumah and Sekou Toure.

Having spent the last few decades living in Guinea working to advance this agenda, Kwame Ture brings to us a Pan African vision of tremendous importance. The post-Cold War era has brought about a renewed colonial rivalry among western powers for control in Africa. A particularly destructive Franco-American rivalry is being played out in Zaire, Rwanda and elsewhere.

Worse still, African states are being increasingly turned against each other to benefit western interests. The frenzied American campaign against Islamism has led to the creation of an anti-Sudanese front in the Great Lakes region involving Uganda, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Rwanda and Burundi, as well as Egypt to the north, serving as a reminder of the degree of manipulation that continues to characterize intra-African relations.

Furthermore, western powers continuously stymie and subvert any attempts to find African solutions to African problems, reenforcing divisions and dependence.

The Pan African vision, which involves increasing degrees of African unity and cohesion, remains a potent intellectual force with widespread appeal and a potentially mighty weapon in the cause of freedom and justice. Ture's Pan African voice speaks to the most pressing issues facing the entire continent. It is the clearest and most coherent response to colonialism's still-favorite divide and conquer tactic.

Ture's commitment to truth and justice are also reflected in his unwavering support for Palestinian human rights. During these days of terrible suffering in Palestine, it will be reassuring to welcome and honor here at UMass, this great friend of the Palestinians and all colonized peoples. In this regard again, Ture's moral vision carries the utmost urgency.

Tonight's tribute to Kwame Ture will be a profound and moving occasion, not just because it allows the University to fulfill its highest missions, but because it will give all of us the chance to listen to a man whose wisdom and insights the world desperately, and increasingly, needs.

The subject of homosexuality is one that causes much trauma, whether it be from misunderstanding, ignorance, or just plain bigotry. It is a subject that evokes a great deal of emotion and tension, perhaps as much as differences between genders, between races and between ethnic groups.

Homosexuals in our society have been under attack and have suffered a great deal because of these misunderstandings. While these attacks, ignorances and fears can be understood, they simply cannot be justified.

It is for this reason that we support the legislation now pending on Beacon Hill that would guarantee basic human and civil rights for homosexuals. These bills would prohibit discrimination against any person for his or her "affectional or sexual preferences." House bill 2650 would grant equal opportunity in public employment, while House bill 2527, a more general bill, would cover the private sector. This would protect homosexuals from discrimination in such areas as credit, housing and private employment. More outdated sex laws, the kind that have been arbitrarily applied to persecute and entrap homosexuals, would be prohibited by House bill 5498.

The homosexual community is not asking for any special privileges or rights, but just an equal chance to live in society and to be free from undue harassment. All they want is a fair shake, and it is wrong to deny them one.

We believe that it is time to consign these laws to the mentality of Puritanism. It is not the function of the government to pass judgment on anyone's bedroom activities, nor should it be ours. This legislation which now sits before the state legislature goes a long way to assure freedom from harassment and a decent life for homosexuals. Any human being, regardless of affectional or sexual preference, deserves no less than that.

Letters to the Editor

Still waiting for an apology

To the Editor:

In the April 3 edition of the Collegian, a comic strip named "Leedee" written by Mike Rybicki depicted two characters making fun of people with disabilities. That evening, after seeing and hearing about the strip, about 15 students with disabilities went into the Collegian and demanded an apology. We were told that a retraction would be printed. On April 7, Mike Rybicki wrote that the "comments made about the hearing impaired were meant only to be deliciously and darkly ironic."

We do not believe this to be an apology and that his "comments" were nothing but ignorant. It is this ignorance that perpetuates the stereotypes that are inflicted upon people with disabilities everyday. We are sick and tired of the ignorance and stereotypical labels that are branded on us by the majority in our society. We are students who happen to have disabilities and we face enough discrimination on this campus without the Collegian promoting these stereotypes. Some people who read this may think that we are too insensitive and to those people we say that if they had to face the blatant discrimination that we do everyday on this campus, as well as in our society, they would be writing this letter.

To the Editor:

Have you ever just been relaxing in your dorm around eleven o'clock when you suddenly feel thirsty? You know the only thing that can stop your thirst is a Snapple, Sprite or a Fruitopia? Well, we all know we can get a Sprite out of a machine, but what about the other drinks? You then get the idea to go to the Southwest Munchie Store to get the juice and you think to yourself, I just might get a slice or two. However, when I went on my routine trip to the Munchie Store, I ran into more than I bargained for. I ran into harassment. When I arrived at the Munchie Store, I brought a Snapple and cracked it open while I decided between pizza or a cookie. I took a stroll to the back of the Munchie Store and gazed at the people on the court. I then decided a juice was enough, as I walked to the door, I heard a voice saying "Did you pay for that?" in a rude, obnoxious voice. I turned to the individual and said, "Ask your supervisor, she just rang me up." The supervisor stated that she did ring me up. However, he continued to argue with me, saying I stole the juice even though his supervisor clearly told him I did not.

We then began to argue. When it was finally over, I left and told him never to accuse me of something I did not do again or I would not take it lightly. I foolishly thought the incident was over. I again, about a week later when back to the Munchie Store and bought a Sprite. He again began accusing me of stealing, even though his co-worker told him she rang me up. At this point, I realized this worker was harassing me. I again began to argue back, and I proceeded to remind him of what I said previously; that being I would not take this harassment lightly.

Also to all of you who think it's just a black thing, it isn't. Many other nationalities, including whites, have complained of the rude, arrogant behavior of this worker. I am writing this article to inform the UMass population of this individual. This individual who thinks he has the right to wrongly accuse someone of stealing and harass them and get away with it. As a student of UMass, I should not have to worry about being harassed. So if you run into the ominous figure in the back of the Munchie Store wearing glasses, where the frozen yogurt is, and he begins to accuse you of stealing, do not take it sitting down, report him. I just wonder how someone with no people skills or personality can work in an environment surrounded by people? Go figure. To all patrons of the Southwest Munchie store, remember this student worker with too much time on his hands is watching!

Let your voice be heard

To the Editor:

I write here about an issue which will affect all graduate students at UMass, and which I feel demands attention.

On next Tuesday night, April 15 — tax day, no less — the Senate will be voting on its annual budget. I have been a member of the Senate Finance Committee for the past two years and unlike last year when the Senate approved its consecutive annual deficit budget, this year we have been working hard to approve a budget which will yield a surplus. There are only two problems that I can see: one is that we have to raise the Senate tax to do it, and the other is that the budget contains a number of items which I feel should already be cut.

Raising the tax is an issue that I actually support insofar as it is justified by the depreciation of monetary value due to annual increases in the cost of living. The Consumer Price Index (inflation) has risen just over 10 percent in the years since we last raised the tax and so I support a tax increase of 10 percent to maintain consistency with the value of money. That means your current annual tax of $70 could increase to $77.

However, you should know more about the actual Senate budget. The Senate proposes to raise over $230,000 with your taxes this year (last year we taxed more of your for over $250,000). Of that $230,000, the Finance Committee is proposing to spend over $104,000 on Senate operations — that's over 45 percent of your taxes being used to support salaries for the four student Executives who run the Senate (two make $10,011 a year, the other two make $13,791 each) plus anywhere from $25,000 to $40,000 to maintain the office personnel (depending on the proposed deal), and another $10,000 or so in administrative expenses and overhead. And a full $10,011 stipend goes to the editor of that fine graduate student publication, The Voice.

The Finance Committee is proposing adding another student employee (at $10,011) to the budget to do office coverage when the Senate already pays four Executives full TA salaries and maintains another professional staff person. I do not think this proposal is rational or fair. I think more of the Senate tax should be going back to more graduate students, not to the few who run the Senate.

I clearly see a financial disparity that exists in the Senate, despite the otherwise good intentions of a lot of Senators, including the current Treasurer. I believe that we need to raise the tax to get the Senate out of its current budget deficit and rebuild our reserve base, but we must also be held accountable for our actions, which are, in the case of this year's budget, not in the best interests of all graduate students. You can best express your interests by being present at the Senate meeting next week when this issue comes up for debate. Please come to the meeting and make your voice heard, regardless of where you stand on the issue.

You should have more say in where your $77 is going to go next year, and if you don't want to about $34 of it going to run an organization which has spent itself into deficits the past three years, then you should come to the Senate meeting on April 15 and be heard (can you imagine 45 percent of our income taxes going back to maintain government salaries and operations? In reality, less than 2 percent of our federal tax dollars go to operating the U.S. government). Of course, if you do want $34 of your money to go to Senate operations, then you should be heard as well.

And if you just don't care about giving the Senate that money, I'm sure we'll gladly take it and spend it without your input.

Blur set Britpop precedent yet again

By John Hendrickson
Collegian Staff

"Blur Vs. Oasis." That one phrase singlehandedly sums up the essence of the British music scene of the '90s. The competition between the two bands effectively ended in late '95, though. Blur released The Great Escape, their fourth LP, within weeks of Oasis' sophomore effort (What's The Story) Morning Glory? Glory broke sales records in Britain and reached the Top 5 on the U.S. album charts. Escape didn't come close to matching these achievements. With the release of their eponymously titled fifth album, though, Blur has effectively put an end to the speculation and doubt which has dogged them for the last two years.

In order to fully appreciate Blur (Virgin), one must take a look at Blur's body of recorded work. Their 1990 debut, Leisure, echoed the sounds of the then–burgeoning Manchester scene and featured the hit, "There's No Other Way." However, Leisure and its follow–up, Modern Life Is Rubbish, failed to ignite the band's fortunes on either side of the Atlantic. 1994's Parklife, though, changed all of that. Virtually defining all that is Britpop, Parklife was a collection of wry character studies and snide commentary reminiscent of Ray Davies' finest work with the Kinks. Musically, Blur mixed synth–pop, orchestration and post–punk stylings to create a totally unique sound during a time of musical grave–robbing. By 1995's The Great Escape, the production was even more lush and the lyrics were almost entirely inaccessible. Considering the path they seemed to be following, Blur comes as an unexpected shock.

The most startling aspect of Blur is the record's production, or lack thereof. Gone are the gloss and sheen of their last couple of albums; Blur's lo–fi values serve to compliment the band's new–found energy. The crushing wall–of–noise dynamics of "Song 2" and the punk explosiveness of "Chinese Bombs" are the most obvious departures in style, with the Twin Peaks–ish spookiness of "Theme From Retro" and the morbidly brooding "Death Of A Party" also breaking new ground. The only "Beetlebum," Bowie–esque "Look Inside America" and rollicking "M.O.R." and "On Your Own" adhere to more traditional rock conventions, while the disarmingly effective ballad "You're So Great" is minimalist to the point of sounding like it was recorded on a cassette recorder.

Although the deconstructionalist sensibility of Blur is evident throughout, it neither obscures the power of the songs nor the band members' individual performances. Singer and lyricist (and Britpop poster boy) Damon Albarn's acerbic wit is as sharp as ever and his delivery has never been this assured. The propulsive rhythm section of Alex James and Dave Rowntree compliment Blur's new sound perfectly, but the album's star is Graham Coxon. Hands–down the best guitarist in modern British rock, Coxon's work on Blur is his finest yet.

Blur is the band's most "American" sounding album yet and thus potentially their most accessible to the U.S. market. Will Blur follow Oasis and Radiohead to American success? Hopefully, because Blur is easily the best thing released so far this year.

Suede return with new album

By Martin J. Keane
Collegian Correspondent

COMING UP
THE LONDON SUEDE
Columbia

With Oasis dominating the music headlines coming out of England recently, other groups in the Britpop genre have suffered greatly. The Stone Roses, for example, followed up an amazing debut album with a subpar sophomore effort and broke up last October in the face of endless ridicule from the notoriously judgmental British music press. The London Suede, pioneers of the Britpop sound, seemed destined for a similar fate, especially considering the departure of chief songwriter and lead guitarist Bernard Butler in 1994 and the hiring of unknown 17–year–old Richard Oakes to replace him.

Much to the chagrin of their critics, The London Suede have returned in triumphant form, and their new album, Coming Up (Columbia) is the group's most compelling effort to date. The album features an eclectic blend of tart, gripping pop songs and dreamy, soaring ballads that serve as a masterful articulation of the world which lead singer Brett Anderson lives in. Already a triple–platinum smash throughout Europe, Coming Up has finally arrived here in the U.S. and comes with a bonus multimedia disc that contains audio live performances and video clips that can be viewed on any CD–ROM drive.

The new recruits (Oakes and keyboardist Neil Codling) bring much to the table and bolster an already solid line–up of Anderson, Simon Gilbert and Mat Osman. Oakes, while not the virtuoso that Butler was, creates the perfect guitar accompaniments to Anderson's musings in his glam influenced riffs and also displays some fine songwriting skills. Codling also articulates himself well in his debut outing; his keyboard playing helps to give the new album a much fuller sound than in previous recordings which helps to bring out the inherent richness in the songs themselves. Instead of repeating the depressing undertones that plagued 1994's Dog Man Star, a more positive and upbeat mood prevails on Coming Up. This ebullience and buoyant nature comes through on several tracks. "Starcrazy," "Trash" and "Filmstar" each utilize crisp wah–wah guitar riffs that bring back memories of Mott The Hoople, or even Ziggy Stardust– era David Bowie. "Beautiful Ones" is a witty and poignant commentary on rave culture in which Anderson voices his discontent with the current state of England's social scene. His frustration with the techno movement is obvious as he rails on those who are "psycho for drum machine."

It is unfortunate that the energy of those songs is transposed onto some of the lackluster material which permeates the album and dilutes its overall quality. What prevents Coming Up from being considered a "great" release is the overabundance of b–side quality ballads that accentuate Anderson's feminine, nasally singing voice. "She," for example, is a particularly poor song about lost love that features Anderson singing like a whiny teenager. These songs seem to be a showcase for Anderson's more gratuitous, banal moments where he wallows in his own self–importance and slows the momentum of the album.

Taken on the whole, Coming Up is more a testament to the grimy perseverance of Anderson and Co. than anything else. Having been around the block a time or two, The London Suede speak from experience and their lyrical cynicism is what ultimately makes this album so memorable.

New Simpsons as absurd as ever

THE SIMPSONS: SONGS IN THE KEY OF SPRINGFIELD
Various Artists

As a television show, it can be said that "The Simpsons" not only gave the Fox network a fighting chance, but brought animation back to the forefront of the public's interest by breaking away from the kids–only world of Saturday morning cartoons with their prime–time slot. It seems only fitting that the success of "The Simpsons" has spawned a soundtrack.

Before you can even listen to the new compilation of "Simpsons" material, you notice that the disc itself looks like one of the beloved donuts of the Simpson patriarch, Homer. Funny and cute, isn't it? Better yet, you remove the disc from the holder and notice that the "donut" has left a greasy stain on the CD liner underneath. Downright clever, as is the case with nearly everything that comes from "Simpsons" creator Matt Groening and company.

CAIRO, Egypt — With titles including Searching for Peace with Sex and The Hookers' War: Jewish Women and Arab Politicians, a paperback genre is filling a shadowy niche in the Egyptian psyche.

The books, their covers sometimes illustrated with the Jewish star of David and sultry women in lingerie, are a hot item in Cairo book shops and at stalls on the city's crowded streets.

Their theme: Israel uses its women to corrupt Muslim youth, recruit spies, control Arab politicians or somehow get an edge in the Mideast peace process. They exploit an Egyptian fondness for conspiracy theories, a widespread hatred of Israel and a fascination with Israelis' more liberated sex lives.

"Sex is more dangerous than nuclear weapons. ...Israel has been using this weapon to confront us for some time. However, recently it has reached a provocative level," wrote Amr Nassef, author of Normalization with Sex.

The rhetoric persists nearly 18 years after Egypt became the first Arab country to make peace with Israel. But Israelis always have complained that Egypt maintains a "cold peace," limiting contacts and making it difficult for Egyptians to visit Israel.

The peace has become even chillier since the election of right–wing Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu last May added snags to Israel's peace talks with Palestinians, Syria and Lebanon.

Columnist Mohammed Wagdi Qandil wrote in the Akhbar Al–Youm newspaper "Egyptian youth go to work in Israel and then they fall in the spider webs by temptation with money and sex. ...It is very obvious that the (Israeli intelligence agency) Mossad uses sex in recruiting spies."

In February 1997, the sex–spy link slipped over into reality when Egypt announced it would try an Israeli living in Israel, Azam Azam, as a spy. It alleged he used Israeli women to recruit an Egyptian and gave the man women's underwear soaked in invisible ink to help send messages back to Israel.

Israel called for Azam's release, saying he has no links to Israeli intelligence. Egypt refused to free him, but has set no trial date.

While Mohammed el–Ghiti said his book, The Hookers' War, was distributed in neighboring countries, it and others of the same ilk did not seem to be available elsewhere in the Arab world — at least in major bookstores.

Lior Ben–Dor, cultural attache of the Israeli Embassy in Cairo, said it saddened him to see the books being peddled.

"I'm not going to waste my time in reading books about tramps and sex, and I deny everything in them," he said.

Sociologist Mediha el–Safty at the American University in Cairo says these books have credibility with many Egyptians because of the reservoir of hatred from the three wars fought by Egypt and Israel.

"It emphasizes Israel's sabotage in the past. So it is a natural reaction that there are more anti–normalization feelings among Egyptians and a tendency to accuse Israel of everything," said el–Safty.

Sex is another appeal in Egypt's prudish Muslim society, where women are expected to be virgins at marriage, and young men are told it's a sin to look at — let alone talk to — strange women.

Not all of Israel's Egyptian foes approve of the books' message. Novelist Youssef el–Qaid, a staunch opponent of normalizing relations with Israel, said he dislikes the presentation of Israel as a kind of paradise of uninhibited sex.

"I'm against giving Israel this illusionary victory," he said. "Besides, our struggle with Israel is political and cultural. It's not in our interest to transform it into a sexual invasion."

How hard is jazz supposed to rock?

Does alternative–sounding distortion guitar belong in jazz? Well, that sounds like a fine question to begin this latest edition of J/B Weekly. The answer is yes, and even further than that, yes, anything will belong in jazz, and most instruments from the violin (played most well–known by Stephane Grappelli) to the ancient Brazilian instrument, the berimbau (employed often by jazz/world–fusion percussionist Airto Moreira) have had their place on great jazz albums. Heck, the distorted, dirty, heavy guitar is not new to the jazz world — it goes way back to the late '60s with a man named John McLaughlin, but we won't get into that.

We will however, take a quick look at the second Grammavision/Rykodisc release from trumpeter Ron Miles, who brings along guest Todd Ayers to add crunching guitar to a few tracks on the new album Woman's Day that may sound just as much at home on a Nirvana album as it does as a visitor to Woman's Day. A member of Bill Frisell's Quartet, Miles naturally asked his guitar–playing boss to record with his main trumpeter, once again a band leader.

Woman's Day shows a man obsessed with melody lines instead of just be–bopping the night away. Indeed Miles was very much into the Beatles while putting the songs on Woman's Day together. Songs like "Dew," and "You Taste..." present sustained melody lines by Miles and Frisell (using a clean, echoing tone that is all his style) over the pool of Ayers' distortion guitar. Without Ayers there, as is the way most tracks on this disc go, he still presents dense trumpet and guitar over subdued beats (by Artie Moore on bass and the style–chameleon Rudy Royston on drums for most tunes). Songs like "Born Liar" and "Bath" well illustrate this general sound design. There's even a tribute called "Cobain" which justly goes through many mood swings in its nine and a half minutes.

Speaking of unusual setups, the New York label ECM is the crown–keeper in that field. Their latest issue is a 12–part duo suite by Norwegian pianist Ketil Bjornstad and American cellist David Darling called The River. You can almost feel relaxed just reading about that, eh?

Well, you're not too far off. The River is a relaxing song cycle, but in the right dreamy mood (ECM is also the king of dreamy, moody jazz), you can truly hear the feeling of quiet ponderings as Bjornstad plays arpeggios and revolving themes on piano and Darling brushes by with a low, guttural cello moan that's like a wind flowing downstream with the water (you see what ECM gets me writing like?).

COURTESY RICHARD PETERSON

Pioneering jazz trumpeter Ron Miles

The River certainly has its merits, in terms of composition, despite the fact that if you're thinking of jazz as finger– snapping, 4/4 time with saxes blowing rapidly, you will feign to even think of this in that genre. Jazz, my friends, works in mysterious ways.

Not that jazz does not often hop right into that be–bop influenced stereotype. Be–bop revival is actually the hot thing these days, which can be very repetitive and very unfortunate.

The cast of Hip Bop/Silva Screen's Jackie's Blues Bag: A Tribute To Jackie McLean were able to emit some of the gospelly soul of the classic alto sax–slinging personality of the old '50s hard–bop world, but they didn't do much to bring him into the future. Then again, the man is actually not dead, so he can go ahead of them himself.

Jackie's Blues Bag does feature quite an all–star cast (and guess what — they even call themselves The Essence All– Stars), with veterans Branford Marsalis and Joe Lovano joining forces with "young lions" like Craig Handy, Javon Jackson, Justin Robinson and many others providing horn tribute on various tracks. Idris Muhammad on drums, LaMont Johnson on piano (a regular member of McLean's Quartet from 1964–68) and Rodney Whitaker on bass provide rhythm on all tracks, and they actually end up the real stars.

Marsalis is rather lazy on "Bluesnik" on tenor, but provides fine, loping soprano sax on "Dr. Jackle." Handy, who had just finished Grand Central's tribute to Hank Mobley shortly before, puts one of the finest horn parts in on "Blue Fable," but Lovano takes the reed cake home with his wild, full sax sounds on "Blues Inn." The MVP of this disc, though, goes to the man who actually got to play McLean's soulful music originally, Johnson. His piano runs make this disc a fine listen.

Well, to end off this week, let's take a trip down memory lane to 1953–54 in California. Sure, I was born 21 years after West Coast Jazz (Pacific Jazz/Blue Note) was originally recorded by Chet Baker and Stan Getz with Baker's band of Larry Bunker (drums) and Carson Smith (bass) for 1953, and Russ Freeman (piano), Smith and Shelley Manne (drums) for 1954, providing backup in two different L.A. clubs. However, I'm here 21 years after I was born for the tapes from those performances to finally surface.

West Coast Live is a two–disc set of standards and other songs (no originals by either Baker or Getz) performed with such wonderful chemistry and interweaving tones by the two leaders. Surprisingly, they didn't really get along. You could swear they were on the same wavelength and jazz philosophies on such songs as "Winter Wonderland" (yes, the Christmas carol), Denzil Best's "Move" and the two versions from the two performances of Rodgers and Hammerstein's "All The Things You Are," one quick and compact (1953), and the other with a fine, loose jam (1954).

The Simpsons: Songs in the Key of Springfield is a must have for any "Simpsons" fanatic. In addition to the main title theme from Danny Elfman and the show's ubiquitous "Itchy and Scratchy" main title theme, the disc includes many of the musical numbers that have made entire episodes great. For example, "Who Needs The Kwik–E–Mart?" is a sly satire on the classic musical, while "We Do (The Stonecutters Song)" is a seemingly typical drinking–song about a mysterious illuminati who "keeps the metric system down..."

One of the more impressive aspects of the disc is it's magnitude. With 39 tracks reaching almost an hour, you get more for your proverbial buck than one might expect from an anthology from a cartoon.

In addition to the musical numbers, the disc offers clips of dialogue that surround the music. For example, after a musical number, Homer says, "Hey, he lied to us through song. I hate when people do that!" These will no doubt be put to good use on phone answering machines everywhere.

Although "Simpsons" fans will find this collection indispensable, the rest of the viewing public might not deem the disc necessary for their collection, nevermind a tad tedious — like you're watching the same repeats, over and over and over...

walk, followed by two singles by Muchie Dagliere and Clark. Two batters later, Samela popped his second homerun of the game to put UMass up 11–6.

Jeff Puleri did the job Stone needed him to do and shut the Owls down for seven straight innings. He wasn't stopped until the ninth, when Rick Marinez sent a solo homerun over the left field fence. In total, Puleri gave up 7 hits, 1 run, 2 walks and 3 K's.

"I felt I just needed to come in and keep us in the game," Puleri said. "I was getting a lot of hitters out with my breaking ball, and spotting my fastball pretty well."

This win was just what the Minutemen needed, taking its first three game A–10 series of the season.

"The pitching stepped it up this weekend," Samela said.

The doubleheader on Saturday featured a complete game performance by Jason Bennett (5–1), earning him his fifth win of the season (21–4 career) and making him the all–time wins leader in UMass history.

"It was very important to come out here and throw well," Bennett said. "Get the monkey off my back. It was something that was in the back of my head. I wanted to get it over with."

The hitting for UMass made it that much easier for Bennett and Bill Cooke (3–2) to pitch, posting 25 runs in the doubleheader.

"It's a whole different ballgame," Bennett said. "You just have to go out there, relax, and pitch your ballgame."

"It's a lot easier when you're getting defense too," Cooke pitched a complete game for his third win of the season said.

This weekend's hitting charge was led, once again, by sophomore captain and last week's A–10 Athlete of the Week, Doug Clark. He went 7–for–9, with 10 RBI and two homeruns, which included his second career grand slam.

"All week we concentrated on execution," Clark said. "[Saturday] we did it perfectly. We've got talent, speed, we've got power and pitching. If you have that, you can be a good team, no matter who you play."

With Brad Gorrie's six stolen bases this weekend, he is just three bases behind Ryan Jette's stolen base record of 83. Gorrie has a perfect mark of 25 stolen bases on 25 attempts this season. He also went 6–12 at the plate this weekend, with 3 RBI.

■ Bennett

Massachusetts as a reliever and occasional weekday starter going 10–0 in his first two seasons. His sophomore season was one to remember, as he went 8–0, with a 2.63 ERA in 51 innings, walking only 14 and striking out 45. Massachusetts coach Mike Stone put Bennett in the weekend rotation last season, and he responded by going 6–3, and finishing six of his nine starts.

According to Stone, it's Bennett's consistency and ability to keep hitters off–balance that have made him so successful.

"He's got three or four pitches, and he can throw a slider and a curve, and he can throw them for strikes," Stone said. "He competes, he makes big pitches when he has to. He gets people out, and he wins."

Durability has been Bennett's strong point. He's finished 9 of the 21 games he's started in his career, and according to Stone, consistency has helped Bennett become successful.

"He's been consistent, [and has the ability] to step up and pitch according to the competition, and get those people out," Stone said.

At this point in the season, Bennett has been the stopper for the Minutemen, who have struggled at times to get quality innings from the bullpen. But UMass's team ERA of 5.81 going into the weekend is much lower than their opponents. UMass hitting — .353 as a team — has roughed up opposing pitching to the tune of an 8.20 ERA. The Minutemen have already surpassed last season's home run total of 31 in the first game on Saturday, and sophomore Doug Clark drove in 21 RBI over the week. But despite the fireworks, Saturday belonged to Bennett.

"I never thought about [the record]," Bennett said. "I knew I could be successful, I knew if I did the things I had to do, mixing up pitches, keeping hitters off balance, pitching my game. I knew I could be competitive at this level, but I never thought I'd do this well."

Pittsburgh's Super Mario bids farewell to Boston fans

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON — Mario Lemieux was in a very strange situation. One of hockey's greatest players felt lost on the ice.

As video highlights of his brilliant career flashed on the scoreboard, as Frank Sinatra's "My Way" played, as hats and cheers poured down for five minutes, Lemieux rested his right elbow on the boards in front of the Pittsburgh Penguins bench and took it all in yesterday.

"That was pretty neat," he said. "I didn't know exactly what to do. I waved a couple of times, and the fans just kept going." There was still 3:07 left in his last regular-season game, a 7-3 loss to the Boston Bruins in which Lemieux had two assists, when the multimedia tribute took place during a timeout.

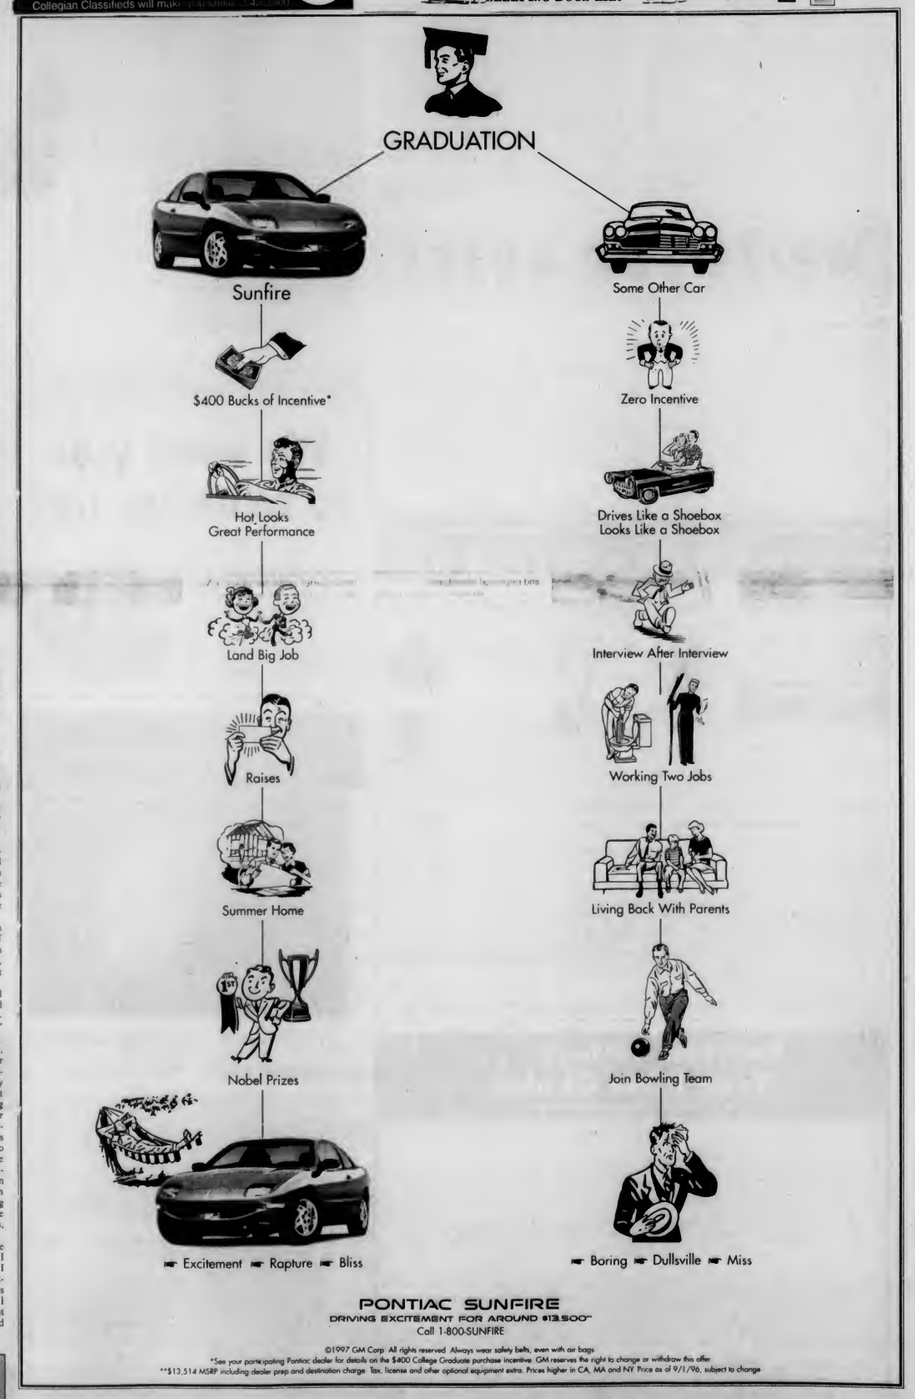
It didn't end there. Wins were few for the Bruins this season — they had the NHL's worst record — but their fans were rooting for Lemieux. They wanted to see him score in the city where he got his first NHL goal on his first shot on Oct. 11, 1984.

"That's the way it's been since I announced that I was retiring," Lemieux said with a grin. "Seems like maybe I should have done that my first year in the league."

There were signs all over the FleetCenter: "NHL won't forget 66," "A Votre Sante Mario," "Sad to See You Go Super Mario." With 42 seconds left in yesterday's game, the chant began — "Mario, Mario."

With 31 seconds left, he jumped off the bench for his last shift.

With seven seconds left, he had the puck in the slot, 20 feet in front of goalie Jim Carey. He shot. The fans hoped.



"I felt I had a chance at the end but didn't put anything on the puck," Lemieux said. "I was kind of pressured there." Carey made a routine save and, when the game was over, all the Bruins left their bench to shake Lemieux's hand.

So ended his last regular-season appearance in a city where he got the first of his 613 goals, seventh in league history, and 1,494 points, the sixth most.

Minutewomen scored twice in the fourth, with Mareina scoring on a wild pitch, and Kim Gutridge being brought home on a single by Faessler.

Senior Stephanie Mareina had an RBI in the bottom of the fifth to bring in Katie Kenderski for another run. La Salle would make an attempt to come back in the sixth inning, scoring off of Biddle's second RBI of the game. But Sortino put Henderson in to pitch for Liz Wagner, and she struck out four of the five batters she faced, collecting her third save of the season.

On Sunday the Minutewomen took on a Virginia Tech team that didn't seem to quite have it together. The Hokies are usually very strong offensively, but got off just two hits in the first game. Henderson dominated the game, striking out every player at least once, with the exception of Michelle Meadows.

"I think they were intimidated by Henderson," Sortino said. "She had them scared."

Virginia Tech's defense was severely lacking in the first game, chalking up a total of seven errors. They had a lot of holes, and UMass found every one of them. The Minutewomen scored eight times in the game, off nine hits, including two RBI's from senior Sam Cardenas.

The mercy rule was invoked in the fifth inning to give UMass the 8–0 win.

In the second game of the twin bill, UMass got off to a hot start, scoring three runs in the first inning, with RBIs from Gutridge, Kelly Buckley and Faessler. They would continue the scoring spree into the fourth, when they scored twice more, and would add another run in the fifth. The Hokies remained scoreless until the top of the fifth. Sara Rowley had an RBI, and Sarah Wolf stole home to give Virginia Tech their only runs of the game.

The softball team is now unbeaten in their last 13 games. Last Thursday they traveled to Cambridge for a doubleheader against Harvard. The Minutewomen won the first game 2–1. Junior Liz Wagner pitched six shutout innings for UMass, but was pulled out in the seventh after giving up two hits. Henderson finished up the game allowing only one run, and getting her second save of the season.

The second game saw yet more spectacular pitching from Henderson, with 11 strikeouts and only three hits. Harvard's Tasha Cupp also pitched well, with 10 strikeouts and four hits. Both teams remained scoreless through eight innings of play, when the game was finally called due to darkness.

The Minutewomen now stand at 19–15–1. They will be back in action on the seventeenth when they head to Rhode Island for another doubleheader.

the second set. With some defensive adjustments, the Greyhounds successfully remedied the problems posed in what was one of UMass' best first–half performances.

The Loyola longsticks completely shut out the Minutemen in the second half, a remarkable deed considering the play of Brendan Glass early in the game. Glass tallied a hat trick, scoring the Minutemen's second, fifth and seventh goals, taking a breather for a couple of minutes in the first quarter when he left the game with a hand injury.

"First half we came ready to play," Massachusetts coach Greg Cannella said. "We hit on our shots, we played good defense. Things were going our way in the first half. Our shots fell, people stepped up.

"[Glass] played well against Duke, New Hampshire and today it was nice to see him get in there early in the first half with a couple of big goals."

The Greyhound defense did not shut down the man–on– man matchups in the second half to beat the Minutemen. Instead they threw UMass a curve they were not expecting.

"They threw a zone at us in the second half and a new goalie, and he was a left handed goalie," Glass said. "I didn't realize he was a new goalie until late in the third quarter after I had taken about 10 shots on cage."

"[The Loyola coaches] did a great job, they adjusted and played a lot of zone in the second half," Cannella said. "I take responsibility, I didn't think they'd play us with a zone.

"We knew they were a group of good finishers. I feel we played good defense, we've got to give them a lot of credit they played very well."

To credit the Minutemen's offense, it was able to tally eight goals in one half against a team that typically allows opponents just over 10 goals per game. Chris Grande resumed his position as the team's leading scorer, notching a hat trick to update his total at 19 goals on the season. Jim Kennedy supplied one goal and one assist and Ken Sussi assisted on two goals.

The Minutemen return to action on Wednesday, April 16 at Harvard University in Cambridge.

first half.

"Great second half, and that was the team of new," McClellan said. "The team of old showed up in the first half, and it's frustrating for the players and the coaches to be going through this inconsistency, though it is part of a developing program.

"I'd rather have one good half than no good halves, but it's frustrating. I'm frustrated right now because this is not something I can control, and it has to be the players' responsibility to show up and be ready to play."

The first half can truthfully be judged as one that every person involved with the team would like to forget. Any confidence built up from the game against Dartmouth was unseen, and it seemed that UMass was letting the physical play of Rutgers get to them. The difference in the scoring was that the Minutewomen just could not capitalize on their offensive zone possession, and they had their share of shots on goalie Paula Charnoun, outshooting the Lady Knights by a 25–16 margin for the game.

A 6-0 halftime score appeared to be daunting, but UMass took the comeback initiative. After Anderson's goal, sophomore attacker Laura Korutz beautifully fed freshman defender Lynne Young from behind the net to make the game 9–4 at the 26:32 mark. Seniors Michele Warrington and Stephanie Walsh kept the run intact a 1:17 later, with Korutz completing the comeback bid with a score less than a minute afterwards.

"Rutgers is strong, and I knew they were going to be that way," McClellan said. "But, I thought we would compete a little bit better. We beat ourselves today."

Minutewomen Notes: With her two goals against Rutgers, Walsh is one goal shy of the 100 goals scored mark in a career. She will be able to remedy that situation this Wednesday when UMass will take on the Flying Dutchwomen of Hofstra at Totman Field (4:00 pm)... Korutz continues to statistically lead the offense, with her goal and a assist on Saturday now giving her 16 points (9 goals, 7 assists).

Enter Sean Gaiser, a senior who looked to be the Greyhounds top netminder two seasons ago. Gaiser earned the right to take a stab at the Minutemen and responded immediately.

In his 30 minutes of action Gaiser came up with nine stops and zero goals allowed.

"Jimmy Brown had been our starter and had an unbelievable year last year. Sean Gaiser was who we thought was going to be our starter two years ago," Cottle said. "Sean has been practicing great, I made a decision I was unhappy with our team's practice Thursday, and I told them that I thought Sean Gaiser deserved a chance to play and I was going to play him today. But I didn't know when.

"The way it was in the first half I thought we needed a boost and Sean really played great in the second half."

While the goalie change certainly bolstered the Loyola defense, it was the switch to a zone defense which stymied the Minuteman offense.

"We went back and looked at their tapes last year and looked at their tapes this year, nobody had zoned them," Cottle said. "They're an invert team, a one–on–one team, and you can't run a zone offense with short sticks behind the goal. So we went into this game wanting to zone them."

Zone 'em they did. The Greyhounds were able to get a pair of tallies in the third quarter, while the closest UMass got to the Loyola net was fleeting looks inside the zone.

"They did a great job," UMass coach Greg Cannella said of the Greyhounds. "They adjusted, played a lot of zone in the second half, played a little zone in the first half."

As the second quarter aided UMass' goal–scoring cause, the fourth quarter was the Greyhounds' shining time.

With five unanswered goals in the fourth period, including Mark Frye's fourth of the day, Loyola was able to shut– down UMass.

"I didn't think they had good shots," Cottle said. "They had a lot of shots that hit the scoreboard. So even if they would have scored we were going to stay with the zone because of the kind of shots they were getting."

With this learning experience at his back, Cannella knows UMass will probably see more zone defenses in the future.

"I'm sure we will [see other zones]," Cannella said. "It depends on each team, if a team is ready to play zone, they'll play zone against us."

Woods plays 'A-game,' masters Augusta course

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Tiger Woods found himself in a rare position yesterday. He had already played two shots on No. 8, a par 5 measuring 535 yards, and he still couldn't see the hole.

Just as surprising was that the pin was still in the cup. Woods, who won the Masters by shooting a record 18-under 270 for an unprecedented 12-stroke victory, could have won the tournament on the par 5s alone.

He played them in 13 under for the week. On all but three of the 16 par 5s, he was either putting or chipping from just off the green for an eagle.

This is why Jack Nicklaus said Woods was capable of winning at least 10 green jackets, why Jesper Parnevik suggested that Masters officials set up "Tiger tees" some 50 yards back to keep him from winning 20 of them.

But Woods didn't annihilate Augusta National on length alone. When he turned the Masters into a runaway with a 7-under 65 on Saturday, he missed only one fairway and one green.

"In order to get to some of these pins, you've got to be on certain sides of the fairway," Woods had said two days before the tournament began.

He also shared another element that was even more telling about his chances of becoming the youngest Masters champion.

"It does help to have local knowledge of a golf course," he said. "But when a guy gets his A-game and still has his A-game, he's probably going to win."

When his accuracy did falter, Woods had so many other shots in his bag to carry him along.

After bogeys on two of the previous three holes yesterday, Woods hooked his approach on No. 8 into the woods, the ball settling on a bed of pine needles with a head-high mound blocking his view of the flagstick.

Colin Montgomerie, who melted under Woods' A-game in the third round, was in the same spot on Saturday and took a bogey.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20
Start small even if your plans are big. Plan for the future and lay the groundwork for what is to come. Friends and relatives can offer advice and guidance, but you have to realize that the final decision is yours. Be aware of health and diet considerations.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
Watch your wallet—a bargain could turn out to be costly in the long run. Watch prices and study anything before signing it. Dangers can lurk in the fine print. Do more listening than talking; don't commit yourself, your time or your money. An important person in your life could be challenging, but it will pass.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
Now is the time to be close-mouthed. You'll learn workplace and personal secrets, but keep them to yourself. That stronger will and self-discipline you've been working on will help you prevent situations to prevent small problems from getting bigger. Take time for yourself and make time for some favorite activities.

CANCER
June 22–July 22
Take care of urgent business and don't allow yourself to worry too much about things that really aren't that important. Don't become so out of the way—get together with friends and family to relax. Taking a low key approach now is the best way to get others on your side.

LEO
July 23–August 23
You can take on bigger and better projects and tasks if you make a choice now to see things through. You'll overcome discouragement and move toward your goal. You'll have the chance to use something you recently learned. Other people, including a loved one, are ready and willing to help you if ask.

Greyhounds out–run UM lacrosse

By Jeremy R. Adams
Collegian Staff

The No. 12 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's NCAA tournament hopes may be in jeopardy, courtesy of a disappointing second half in which they were shut–out 7–0 en route to an 11–8 loss to No. 9 Loyola College.

The loss drops the Minutemen to 5–4 with four crucial games remaining against Northern opponents. Loyola improves to 5–2, also with four remaining games on its docket.

"It's tough to explain. You come out, work real hard for 30 minutes and then we just slow up in the second half," senior co–captain Brendan Glass said. "You've got to hand it to Loyola. They came out in the second half and made some adjustments that really worked."

Trailing 8–3 with three minutes to go in the second quarter, Mark Frye notched the second of four goals to cut the Minutemen's lead to four. UMass would hustle and scrap through the second half, but Loyola was as strong as their finely–aged lacrosse tradition would dictate.

One minute into the second half, Matt Shearer hit net off a quick feed from Gewas Schindler. Shearer found a seam and made a cut to the crease, where he waited unmarked for the dish from Schindler to bring the Greyhounds within three goals.

From there it was just a matter of time, as Loyola's offense worked for shot after shot, and hit on enough to climb out of the five goal deficit and eventually take the lead.

"In the first half we gave it our all," sophomore defender Harold Drumm said. "In the second half it just seemed like their shots were falling when in the first half they weren't.

"We knew they had 6 good sticks, any of them could dodge or shoot or feed at any time so it was a big challenge for us. I don't know if we met the challenge, but we gave it our all."

Loyola's offense played a large part of its second half renaissance, but its defensive unit was equally as solid in

They did not expect it and it showed. They adjusted, but the damage was done.

When Loyola switched to a zone defense in the second half of Saturday's game against the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, the Minutemen suffered and ultimately fell 11–8.

With the Greyhounds playing a man–to–man defense in the first half, UMass took charge. Led by two goals from Chris Grande, the Minutemen staked a 4–3 first quarter lead.

The second quarter only aided UMass' cause. Brendan Glass added to his first quarter tally with two more in the second period. Grande pocketed another goal. Casey Costello, who assisted Jim Kennedy's first quarter tally, put one in the net himself.

But that was it for the Minutemen. An eight–goal first half and a four–goal lead at halftime was negated in the second half when Loyola switched goalies and switched defenses.

"UMass totally took the play to us in the first half. I thought they were beating us to the ball," Greyhound coach Dave Cottle said. "We made some adjustments at the half that came back and helped us."

One of the adjustments was putting a new goaltender in front of the Loyola cage. Sophomore goalie Jim Brown, who saw the first 30 minutes of action for the Greyhounds, made seven saves and allowed eight goals.

Hixon to end UM career for National team

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon will leave the school to become the coach of the U.S. National team on a full–time basis, the Athletic Department announced Friday.

Hixon, who has coached the Minutewomen for 17 years, has served as the National team coach since 1994. She took the reigns of the UMass field hockey program in 1978 following her playing days at Springfield College and as a member of the U.S. team.

As the Minutewomen's coach, Hixon led UMass to 17 winning seasons, 17 trips to the postseason and four final fours. Five of her players have played on Olympic teams, and 27 have received All–America honors. Hixon has also coached one National Player of the Year (Judy Strong in 1981) and one Broderick Award winner (Megan Donnelly in 1986).

Hixon's UMass resume also includes eight years as women's lacrosse coach (1979–87). She led the women's lax team to an NCAA title in 1982 — UMass' only national championship — and two other final four appearances.

She leaves the school as the winningest field hockey coach (272–75–18) and winningest women's lacrosse coach (91–30–2).

"Obviously, we hate to lose someone with the ability and enthusiasm of coach Hixon," said Athletic Director Bob Marcum. "But I think it shows a lot about the caliber of the coaching staff we have at the University of Massachusetts that the United States Field Hockey Association would choose her to lead the national team."

Hixon earned Coach of the Year honors after leading the Minutewomen to the first NCAA championship game in 1981. She has also been named the Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year five times, and was chair of the NCAA Division I field hockey committee in 1995. A member of the Springfield College Hall of Fame, Hixon has also been a member of the U.S. National coaching staff at six Olympic Festivals.

"It was a difficult decision to leave UMass," Hixon said. "I've had many great years and many great memories. But I am very excited about the U.S. [team] in that it will give me the opportunity to build on the success of the National team over the past two years, and to compete for a medal at the Sydney Olympic Games."

UM baseball sweeps three–game series

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team (15–6, 6–3 Atlantic 10), playing some of its best baseball yet, swept the Temple Owls (6–21, 1–8 A–10) in a three game series this weekend.

It would have seemed, after the Massachusetts baseball team pummeled the Owls 11–1 and 14–4 in the doubleheader on Saturday, that Sunday's third game, would have been a walk in the park. However, the Owls had other plans, and decided to give UMass a run for its money.

After jumping out to an early 6–3 lead, the Temple pitching staff collapsed and UMass' dominating lineup, with the help of great pitching from Jeff Puleri, won the game 11–7.

"It was a struggle at first," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We hung in there, maintained our poise, and did a good job at coming back."

In the first inning of the game, Temple third baseman Joe Kerrigan got on with a single, and after two outs Mike Peltz took a fastball from Scott Barnsby, sending it high over the fences of Earl E. Lorden Field.

The Minutemen quickly answered back with a couple runs of their own. Doug Clark racked in a double, driving in Brad Gorrie, and two batters later, Brian Samela sent a single into the outfield which brought Clark all the way around to score.

In the second inning, Temple continued to knock Barnsby's pitches around the field and scored four more runs. The attack by the Owls was made on three singles and one double, a fielder's choice and two walks. Barnsby was falling behind in most of his counts, and after throwing 42 pitches in the first two innings, Stone brought in Jeff Puleri (2–1), who got Wenzel Walker to pop up and end the inning.

The Minutemen scored one more run in the third and at the end of three, UMass trailed 6–3.

It wasn't until the sixth inning, when Samela and Aaron Braunstein knocked back–to–back homeruns over the fence, that the Minutemen started to open it up on Temple's Peter Moore. UMass tallied three in the sixth to tie the ball game, 6–6.

"They left their pitcher out to dry," Samela said. "But I guess they had nobody else."

In the next inning, the Minutemen accumulated the go–ahead run when Braunstein whacked his second homerun (8) in as many at–bats and sent this one 435 feet to the trees out in dead center.

The eighth inning featured efforts from the entire lineup. Adam Correa got on base with a

Bennett sneaks his way into UM record books

By Luke Meredith

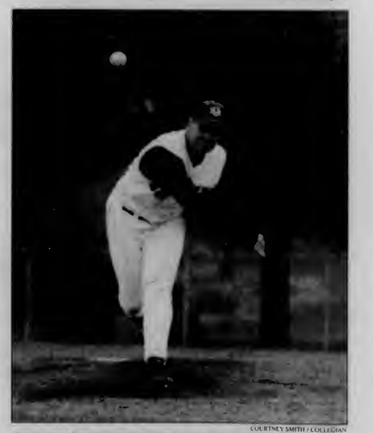
Jason Bennett broke the all–time UMass record for wins in a career the same way he pitches.

He just kind of snuck up on it.



Massachusetts senior pitcher Jason Bennett's complete game 11–1 win over Temple in the first game of a doubleheader on Saturday gave him 21 career wins in a UMass uniform, breaking the record held by four different players. Bennett is now 5–1 on the year, tops on the team, and improved his career mark to 21–4.

"[The record] means a lot," Bennett said. "There's been a lot of great pitchers [at UMass], a lot of great tradition on the mound here, and to be regarded with them is an honor."

Saturday's performance was vintage Bennett. He scattered three hits over seven innings, (doubleheader games at the college level are only seven innings), keeping Temple off–balance, inducing mostly ground ball outs and getting strikeouts when he had to.

The benchmark of Bennett's career has been sneaking up on people. In high school he went 16–5 for New Bedford High, leading the Whalers to the state championship in 1993. Bennett started his career at

It was a big weekend for the Massachusetts softball team.

They pulled out four wins in doubleheaders against LaSalle on Saturday and Virginia Tech on Sunday. Saturday's first game was a nail–biter, going into extra innings. Both teams locked each other up and remained scoreless for eight innings of play.

Finally in the top of the ninth, freshman Nicole Faessler coolly stepped up for the Minutewomen. Pinch hitting for Tracey Osier, and with the bases loaded, Faessler hit a single up the middle to bring in Mandy Galas and the game winning run.

"Niki has a tough mind–set, that's why I put her in," said UMass coach Elaine Sortino. "I knew she would be able to handle it. She's a great hitter."

"I was just trying to breathe and relax and concentrate," Faessler said. "I'm happy I was able to get something done."

Also in the first game, Danielle Henderson put in one of two record breaking performances of the weekend. She struck out an amazing 17 Explorers, breaking an 11–year–old record for the most strikeouts in a game. In the first game against Virginia Tech on Sunday, Henderson set a new record for most strikeouts in a five inning game with 12.

"She's in a league all her own," Sortino said. "She's the creme de la creme, the top of the top. I think that by next year, she'll be one of the best pitchers in the country."

The scoring increased slightly in UMass' second game against La Salle, but it was still tight, with the Minutewomen winning 3–2. The Explorers would get on the board first, with an RBI from Kristen Biddle in the second inning. The

Women's lacrosse falls to Rutgers at Totman

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

For most people, seven is a lucky number. You pick it for your daily lottery numbers; it's almost always the first number taken on a sports team; and hey, the seventh day of the week is Sunday — enough said.

However, for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, seven has been their unlucky number as of late. In the seventh game of the season for the Minutewomen (2–5), a 7– 0 run by Rutgers to start the game gave them a lead they would not relinquish. The Minutewomen's 11–6 defeat to the Lady Knights last Saturday afternoon at Totman Field mirrored their last game against No. 10 Dartmouth, where another 7–0 run culminated a 13–8 loss to the Big Green.

Yet, the two games this week for UMass could not have been more different. Battling sub–freezing temperatures last Wednesday in Hanover, N.H., the Minutewomen came out with their best effort of the season against the Big Green, playing a full 60 minutes against one of the nation's best. In Saturday's game, though, the team let Rutgers control the game out of the gate.

In the second half, UMass came up with a similar effort as in their contest against Dartmouth, outscoring the Lady Knights by 6–5, but to no avail. A goal by sophomore midfielder Melissa Anderson at the 23:20 mark sparked an exciting 4–0 run, eventually making the game 9–6 with 3:18 left on the clock. But senior midfielder Brandi Bailey (4 goals in the game) stuck the nail in the coffin at the 27:51 mark for the Lady Knights, with another Rutgers' goal with seconds left in the game finishing the 11–6 final.

For UMass coach Francesca McClellan, she liked her team in the second half, but not so much in the West Bank settlers give Israeli soldiers trouble

JERUSALEM (AP) — Jewish settlers turned on Israeli soldiers yesterday, pelting them with stones, eggs and tomatoes then soaking them with a water hose while Palestinians in the West Bank town of Hebron watched in wonder.

After nearly a month of stone–throwing riots by Palestinians, the soldiers were stringing chicken wire above a gate outside the Beit Hadassah settler compound to block stones. Angry settlers said more fencing at the tightly guarded compound made it feel a ghetto.

One settler tried to stab a policeman, but was overpowered. Police spokeswoman Linda Menuhin said two settlers were arrested.

"This is good for us," said a bystander, Ahmed Abu Sneineh. "Now the police will see the settlers as provocateurs, too." Israel–Palestinian relations essentially collapsed last month over an Israeli housing project in disputed east Jerusalem, which the Palestinians claim as a future capital.

The resentment has played out in near–daily Palestinian rioting in Hebron, where about 500 Jews live. About 130,000 Palestinians live in the Hebron area. But in recent days, there have been signs of mending.

Clinton associate gets three–year sentence

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — A federal judge yesterday sentenced James McDougal to three years in prison for 18 felonies, after Whitewater prosecutors said that President and Mrs. Clinton's former business partner has "truthfully and substantially aided" their investigation.

McDougal, who had faced a maximum of 84 years in prison, also backed away from his statement a year ago that he expected the Clintons to be absolved from wrongdoing in the wide–ranging investigation of their finances.

"I wouldn't go to the bank on that," McDougal said during an impromptu news conference after his sentencing. He declined to be more specific.

Whitewater independent counsel Kenneth Starr said McDougal had "led us to documents and led us to witnesses" and brought to light information that "was previously unknown to us." He declined to say whether the information dealt with the Clintons. U.S. District Judge George Howard also ordered McDougal to pay a $10,000 fine, pay $4.27 million in restitution to the federal government and serve three years of probation, including one–year of house arrest.

UM police respond to disturbances; arrest two students at Asian Night

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts students, Anh H. Nguyen, 23, and Hai V. Nguyen, 18, were arrested for assault and battery and fighting at Asian Night held in the Campus Center on Friday, April 11.

The fight, which broke out at 11:20 p.m., began next to a police officer who was responding to a report of another fight. The officer arrested both men and according to Chief of Police John Luippold, "one of the two men was resisting arrest and the police officer was having a problem so he had to use O.C."

O.C. stands for Oleoresin Capsicum, the active ingredient in pepper spray.

Luippold also commented that at no time did the officer use extreme force or were any of the fights believed to be gang related.

"There was also a concern that friends were trying to help the individual avoid arrest too," he said.

In addition, another student was stabbed and immediately brought to University Health Services where officers responded to the incident and completed an interview with the victim.

According to the UMass Police Log for Sunday April 11, the victim reported, "while attempting to intervene in a disturbance on the first floor of the Campus Center, he was punched in the back. He was unaware of who hit him, but realized that he had been stabbed.

"His friends immediately took him to Health Services for treatment and he was then transported to the [Cooley Dickinson] hospital by the Amherst Fire Department Ambulance. The victim, a non–student, age 19, received stitches for a wound in his lower back and [was] then released."

Luippold has not confirmed that the stabbing was related to the activities at Asian Night and the Asian American Student Association refused to comment on either of the incidents that evening.

Police have no suspects or leads to the crime and are investigating the incident. Anyone who has information should call the Community Disorders Unit at 545–0893. All information will be kept confidential.

Student hurt in Campus Pond; incident under investigation

A medical emergency which occurred at the Campus Pond early Sunday morning is currently being investigated by University of Massachusetts police.

Police responded at 2:18 a.m. to a report of an individual lying face down in the Campus Pond. When police arrived at the scene, friends had already pulled him out of the water and officers assisted in the medical care according to UMass Chief of Police John Luippold.

The Amherst Fire Department ambulance transported the unconscious individual, who was showing signs of paralysis, to Bay State Medical Center in Springfield.

At the scene, medical personnel believed that the victim's neck was broken but this was not yet confirmed by medical staff at Bay State, Luippold said.

Luippold also said that the investigation is ongoing, but he believes that a group of students "jumped into the pond on a dare."

Other individuals involved were escorted to University Health Services, where they received tetnus shots.

If anyone has any information about the incident, police encourage individuals to call 545–2121. All information will remain confidential.

Thefts plague UM dorms

University of Massachusetts Police are investigating over 20 cases of vending machine vandalism which occurred last weekend in three of the five residential living areas on campus.

Among the buildings in which the vending machines were vandalized are Washington and John Quincy Adams Residence Halls in the Southwest Residence Area; Johnson and Mary Lyon Residence Halls in the Northeast Residence Area and Field and Grayson Residence Halls in the Orchard Hill Residence Area.

Chief of Police John Luippold said that police suspect the cases are related on the east side of campus because only money was stolen and no food was touched.

"Some person or persons were involved in a majority of the cases for the intent of stealing the money and leaving the food," Luippold said. "All the cases on the east side of the campus occurred in the early morning hours."

The machines that were broken into in Southwest have not been confirmed as related cases.

In addition to the vending machines, police are also cooperating with Sylvan Residential Area Staff in investigating the disappearance of two televisions out of study lounges in Cashin and Brown Residence Halls.

The televisions which were locked with cable cords were stolen early Friday evening and the wires were cut through.

UMass police are investigating the rash of break–ins and looking for any students who may have information.

Provost candidate commits to students

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

Provost candidate Dario Cortes spoke to University of Massachusetts students last night and stressed the significance of student involvement in University affairs.

"I am very committed to the idea of a student–centered institution," Cortes said. "Students are very important to the culture of a university."

Cortes, who is currently Chief Operating Officer of Fairleigh Dickinson University, met with a small group of five students in an open forum in the Campus Center.

Before answering the students' questions, Cortes spoke briefly on his views of student participation in the workings of universities.

"I think this is a good opportunity for me to talk to students. Many times at this level, there is a perception that the administration does not have contact with students," Cortes said. "In many cases, the role of student involvement is not understood or fully valued."

Cortes said that he felt it was important for students to participate in campus committees because of their unique viewpoints.

"I would like to have students on committees," Cortes said. "You bring a totally different perspective."

Junior Soviet and East European studies major Ashavan Doyon, a member of the Provost Search Committee, asked Cortes who, as provost, he would meet with.

"There has to be a tone or perception that the provost is available, that he is willing to listen," Cortes replied. "I make sure that I respond to people."

Cortes then elaborated on his view of the role of a provost.

"You are, in my eyes, one of the two constituents that I work for," Cortes said. "One is faculty and the other is students."

Cortes promised that as provost, he would maintain an "open door" policy so that any faculty member or student could bring his or her concerns to him.

"You have to hear people, listen, and make decisions," Cortes said. "You have to make sure that you are accountable for those decisions."

In response to a student's question, Cortes explained his feelings on student activism. He said that he had experience with student protests both as a student and as an administrator at the University of Pennsylvania, and that if students truly feel strongly about an issue, they should not "feel guilty" about their activism.

"If nothing else, it shows you are passionate about your issues," Cortes said. "Sometimes you have to do something because it is important."

Continuing Education student Jennifer Ressle inquired how Cortes felt about access for disabled students and what he would do if a faculty member denied disabled students access to a class.

"First of all, the faculty member is probably unaware of the law. He should be made aware," Cortes answered. "I will have the faculty member, their chair, and their dean in my office. In the future, he or she should support the student."

Cindy Gargano, a sophomore psychology major and member of the Provost Search Committee, asked Cortes for his view on undergraduate advising.

"The formula is very simple: students plus faculty equals success," Cortes said. "It is very important from the beginning to have someone you can trust to advise you and be supportive."

Cortes was the fifth provost candidate to interview at UMass. Patricia Crosson, the interim provost, has dropped out of the applicant pool. The next candidate scheduled for interview is Risa Palm, who will speak with students Thursday at 6 p.m. in Campus Center 174–67.

Volunteers give town time; go "Into Amherst" for day

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

In a collective contribution to the town of Amherst, students and town residents will be volunteering on April 26 in the fifth annual "Into Amherst" Day, a day where participants give back to the community by beautifying the town for the spring.

This annual community service day will run from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the surrounding areas of Amherst.

University of Massachusetts students, who spend more than 40,000 hours in volunteer work each year, find that Into Amherst is one of their most rewarding endeavors.

"Into Amherst is a great event that brings students and townspeople together, contributing to a cleaner environment and building stronger community ties," said Kreg Espinola, a student employee of the Community Service Program at UMass.

Typical projects volunteers should expect to encounter include painting buildings and swimming pools, cleaning up parks and nature trails, repairing school playgrounds, planting flowers and shrubs and preparing the town cemeteries for the upcoming Memorial Day holiday.

Ester Ralson, an employee at Amherst Leisure Services found success with student volunteers in the past.

"Into Amherst is a great help in preparing town pools and parks for the summer. They [students] are willing to do any job, big or small. I couldn't open my outdoor pools without them," Ralston said.

"Students who participate in Into Amherst have proven to be enthusiastic and a tremendous help," Ralston said.

In addition to the town of Amherst, two new sites have been added this year, thus expanding the project perimeters to accommodate Holyoke and Leeds.

The Holyoke project will take place at the Skinner Community House. Additionally, volunteers will be planting trees and flowers and repairing the playground at a multifamily housing site in the Holyoke area.

Camp Hodgkins, a special needs camp that serves students in the Hampshire County School District will also be prepared next Saturday for the upcoming summer season.

Local businesses are also planning to contribute to the day's activities, either through food or monetary donations. Once again, the Black Sheep Cafe will provide pastries and coffee for participants at 9 a.m. in Sweetner Park, located directly across the street from the Amherst police station on Main Street.

Hampshire County Jail, Bertucci's, Antonio's, College Pizza, Carnone's and Domino's will also be contributing food for the volunteers throughout the day.

Any UMass students interested in volunteering should contact Kreg Espinoka or Karen Elam at the UMass Community Service Program at 545–3327. Town residents are encouraged to contact John Clobridge at the Bangs Community Center at 256–4057.

AIPAC addresses peace in Israel

Students make presence felt at Washington conference

By Sarah J. Kimmel

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The 38th annual American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) Policy Conference met in Washington D.C. last week to discuss relations between the two countries. Two thousand delegates, half of whom were college students representing 50 states and 270 universities, gathered at the Washington Hilton to discuss the advancement of the peace process, American Foreign Aid to Israel and the stability of Jerusalem.

The goals of AIPAC are to educate the public of the issues that affect the future of Israel as well as to lobby Congress to help Israel morally and financially in their constituencies and their ballots.

Featured politicians such as Vice President Al Gore, Prime Minister of Israel Benjamin Netanyahu and Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich spoke of these issues to the delegates of the AIPAC convention.

The Peace Process

The Middle East peace process is one of the top priorities of Unites States foreign policy. At the AIPAC convention, Vice President Al Gore spoke of the peace process and how the United States will stand by Israel until peace is achieved.

"We will never permit anyone to drive a wedge between The United States and Israel," Gore said.

Gore listed three resolutions of the United States that will be kept throughout the peace process.

The three resolutions say that the issues in pretention cannot and will not be resolved in violence; that the issues must be resolved in direct give and take relations with the parties involved and that outside pressures will only be counterproductive; only the countries themselves can determine the outcome.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu also spoke of the Middle East peace process.

"We can't fight the battle for peace unless we fight the battle for truth and you are our ambassadors of truth," Netanyahu said.

Foreign Aid

American Foreign Aid to Israel is an issue that AIPAC considers not only as assisting Israel financially, but also as a major moral backbone in the peace process. AIPAC feels that foreign aid

UM Color Guard hosts showcase event

By Frank Campailla
Collegian Staff

Curry Hicks cage was the site of the 11th annual "Color in the Cage" show Sunday afternoon at the University of Massachusetts.

The non-competitive event was hosted by the UMass Minuteman Marching Band Color Guard. The event showcased performers from UMass, the University of Delaware, Rutgers University and several secondary schools.

"It's a chance for the color guard and high schools to show what they are about and what they can do," said Becky Baldwin, the Vice President of Service for Tau Beta Sigma, which helped sponsor the event. "It's also a chance for the UMass Color Guard to do solo work which they don't normally get a chance to do."

The Color Guard gave two performances. The first was by the tech class comprised of color guard members, band members and other UMass students. The performance was based on the song "Pinball Wizard" from the play Tommy.

Dave Hautanen, coordinator of the Color Guard and the show, was pleased with the performance.

"They did a great job," Hautanen said. "You're always happy when you see the students performing for a couple months, but look as if they have been performing for a long time."

Sheilla Martinez, captain of the color guard, and Michele Horhota, a performer, both agreed.

"It was very, very good," Martinez, a junior exercise science major, said. "It made me really happy that it came together in such a short time."

"It's the first time in front of an audience and we did well," Michele Horhota, a sophomore biochemistry major, said.

The second performance was by the multibands ensemble made up of guard members from the fall color guard. This performance was done at the Multibands Concert last fall. "Performing for the crowds who are so appreciative and to know we can go out and entertain them is a thrill," said Robin Steidinger, who also gave a solo performance.

The guards not only were happy with the job they did, but also to be part of the color guard. Erin Angelopolus, a sociology major, put it best when asked what is her favorite reason to be with the team.

"Working with a really awesome bunch of chicks," Angelopolus said.

Other collegiate performances included the University of Delaware Performance Ensemble, UMass Team Brick House, UMass Twirlers Tech Class and the UMass Twirlers, who will be competing in the Northeastern United States Regional Baton Twirling Championships for the first time on April 26.

Some of the secondary performances came from South Hadley Middle and High School, West Springefield High School, Bellingham High School, Masquerade David Prouty High School, Maynard High School and Douglas High School.

There were also a number of solo performances including Rebecca Nyahay, the 1996 and 1997 New Jersey State twirling champion from Rutgers University, Meredith Yetsko, the 1997 collegiate Miss Majorette of Massachusetts from UMass and Sanford Jones also from UMass.

Group performers were given participation plaques and individuals were given medals.

sends a message that America stands with Israel.

Featured speaker and Executive Director of AIPAC Edward Kohr, said that "It is up to us to make sure that Israel remains strong... to achieve the peace." Kohr, as well as Gore, Netanyahu and many other AIPAC supporters, shares the feeling that "America must stand solidly with her ally Israel."

It is the belief of AIPAC that foreign aid promotes vital American economic, political and security interests abroad as well as providing thousands of jobs in America.

Gore said that it is his "unshakable belief that this... relation [between the U.S. and Israel] is good for the United States of America."

Netanyahu is thankful for this undying support of his country by the United States. "You give your heart and mind to the State of Israel and for this I thank you with all my heart," Netanyahu said to AIPAC.

Jerusalem

For 19 years (1948 - 1967) Jerusalem was divided by Jordanian occupation of the eastern parts of the city. Jews were not permitted access to that section of the city. It is a fear of some that this separation will be reinstated, dividing the Israeli population from the Palestinian population.

Netanyahu insisted in his AIPAC conference speech that "We certainly, under no circumstances, will ever redivide Jerusalem... Jerusalem is one city... it shall stay united."

The Prime Minister also touched on Israel's current relations with Jordan. "We know the people of Jordan, the army of Jordan and the King of Jordan will do everything in their power to prevent terrorism," he said.

Several of the speakers gave their views on the terrorist activities that have occurred in the Middle East. Gore spoke directly to the terrorists in part of his speech. "We will find you, we will hunt you down to the ends of the Earth, you shall have no rest," Gore said.

Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich is also angered by the recent terrorist attacks. "It is clear that Arafat is not willing to keep the peace he made three years ago. Over 230 Israelis have been killed in bombings and terrorist attacks over these three years," Gingrich said.

Gingrich said that the only way to cease the terror is to, "say that no... terrorism will go unpunished on this planet."

"Nothing justifies terrorism... the attempt to excuse it is the attempt to justify war crimes. Terrorism is a war crime," Netanyahu said.

Yet the Prime Minister is optimistic that the terrorism can be halted. "Terrorism must be stopped and I believe it's within our capacities," he said.

Netanyahu addressed the issue of the settlements he had made in Jerusalem. He described it as, "not an area in Arab East Jerusalem, it's mostly private land 70 percent owned by Jews... It's a neighborhood designed to alleviate the housing problem in Jerusalem."

Netanyahu continued by saying that he was planning to build 10 similar settlements for entirely Arab housing. "There will be... more for Arab citizens... [Israel] takes care of it's residents whether Jewish or Arab," Netanyahu said.

This year's AIPAC conference focused on a bill celebrating the 30th anniversary of Jerusalem's reunification. The bill states, "On many occasions Congress has affirmed its commitment that Jerusalem remain an undivided city in which the rights of every religious and ethnic group are protected." This bill is a resolution commending the people of Jerusalem for this achievement.

Later in the conference, the delegates were bused to Capitol Hill to lobby their Senators and Congressmen. It is this effort to pass pro-Israeli bills in the legislature that prompts these words from the Prime Minister of Israel, "You represent our best hopes for the future and the present," Netanyahu said.

Racial tensions erupt in the City of Brotherly Love

By Dinah Wisenberg Brin
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — White residents came out onto their front steps yesterday and turned their backs on about 500 blacks who marched through the working-class neighborhood in a protest against racial violence.

Hundreds of police kept watch on the mostly white Grays Ferry section, where racial tensions have been running high since the beating of a black family by a mob of whites and the killing of a white teen-ager during a robbery.

Angry words flew between some of the marchers and the onlookers, but there was no violence, and there were no arrests.

"They're turning their backs on the reality that Philadelphia has to become a city of brotherly love," said Rasheeda Ali, who marched through the narrow streets of the rowhouse neighborhood with a baby in her arms. "They're turning their backs on brotherly love."

"Grays Ferry Residents Marching in Unity," one banner proclaimed. Many marchers carried the red, green and black flag representing black nationalism. Others held signs that read "Bring good to the hood."

"They walk by here, they stroll, they want to start trouble," said white resident Michael McBride.

For a good time call...

Hey everybody, it's that time of year again.

No, I'm not talking about the return of baseball, the income tax deadline or even the onset of spring fever; what I have in mind is something we all, as UMass students, have the pleasure of dealing with in the middle of each April and in November.

Let me give you a clue.

"Please enter a two digit action code."

Or how about, "I'm sorry, the action you requested could not be processed. Please enter a two digit action code."

Pre-reg is back and this time it's taking no prisoners.

Now before I ruffle any feathers, I feel compelled to say that the system we have working for us isn't that bad, considering that I've heard tales of students in the Midwest huddled inside tents in sub-zero temperatures for three days prior to their registrar's registration day doors opening celebration just to get a crack at the good courses like "Cow Milking 101" or "The Sociology of Intra-familial Relationships."

Mark McGrath

Could you picture what Whitmore would look like if the students of this campus had to pre-register in person? You think the place is a poorly-organized oversized file cabinet as it is. Therefore, as far as convenience is concerned, the system is of value to our campus.

I do, however, have a number of problems with the pre- registration system as it now stands. First of all, there's the time thing. As we have already established, it is now April. We will not find out which courses, if any, we have actually gotten into until some time in August. As a student who will be graduating a year from now, and who also needs a certain number of specific courses to graduate, I do not like the idea of waiting for four long months to know whether or not I will be lucky enough to get into those classes.

I have nightmares about opening my course schedule only to find out that each and every class I have selected has been "oversubscribed."

Knowing that the number of classes in my major has been shrinking drastically, I have become all too aware of the frustrations of not being able to get necessary classes.

Personally, I have been exceedingly lucky in getting what I want, but have friends who haven't been able to get anything. Is it only a matter of time? I guess I'll have to wait until August to see. You'd think with the computers running the system, that the verdict would be able to come through earlier.

The first of these thoughts inevitably involves my personal ID number (PIN). Specifically, where the hell is it? Seven times now, they've sent me my special invitation to pre- register, and seven times, I've managed to lose the damn thing. They've even printed it on bright yellow paper as a way of aiding my plight, but even that has not helped. This semester, I put it in a special place for the specific purpose of not being able to lose it, and my place was so good that I haven't yet been able to locate it.

Luckily, the good souls at the Registrar's Office have done the campus the favor of changing the system so that a student can retain his or her PIN the same over his or her college career. In my excitement at hearing the good news, I immediately had the number tattooed on the back of my hand. Problem solved.

Then there's the problem of actually getting through to the system. Trying at any point on the first day is at best challenging and at worst futile. (You thought getting U2 tickets was a task.) If you want to get into Professor Oates' Civil War class you'll find out what real "Desire" is.

And then there's that woman. You know, the one on the other end of the line. Soft, sweet mellow voice. "You have requested English...three...fifty...four." All too often, I find myself wondering who she is, what she's doing back there in that computer, what she's wearing... but we'll leave that one for another day.

Pre-registration, while it may have its tie-ups, is as good a system as we're going to ever have at this University, so we'll just have to get our fingers ready.

And remember... for a good time call 546-9000.

Letters to the Editor

Nationalism on campus

To the Editor:

After I read Philip Milson's letter in the Collegian (April 9) I asked myself why did we need an American flag in every residential area? Maybe the flags were intended to remind us that we were living in America, this "great land of opportunity and dream" and not in Mexico, Dominican Republic, Asia, Africa and so forth.

Well, we do not need the flag to do that for us; our experience as people of color, as workers and as poor of this "great nation" is doing what the American flag intends to do. We know we live in America and we do not need the flag. Mr. Milson's flag-waving fever is like pouring salt on a wound. Please, give us a break, and save us all some money, too.

But why did the bill to put up more flags on the campus come up in SGA meeting? No one can answer the question better than Milson himself. He says [in] his letter that the bill "promotes patriotism and recognizes symbolically all the opportunities available through a university such as UMass." Thus, what the bill suggested was that some anti-American elements were behind the student movement, and the student protesters should admire the UMass administration and shut up. In other words, the bill was a declaration of war against the current student movement and their demands for child care and access.

To put up the American flag at the time when many students including those from ALANA have mounted a movement to diversify the student body of UMass is nothing but a shameful attack against the students of color and the anti-racist movement at this University.

Moreover, presenting the bill is a devious attempt to raise a new agenda such as patriotism vs. anti-Americanism in order to divide and divert the student body and this community. The bill is a right-wing political maneuver to fire up and bolster the sentiment of patriotism, which is the American version of nationalism.

In the last few decades, if Americanism defined itself by fighting the "evil empire," it now reflects itself in fighting the "alien invasion" of America and the people of color as a whole.

Mr. Milson's nationalism reminds me of National Socialist Party in Germany, the genocide and the ethnic cleansing in the former Yugoslavia, LePen in France and Zyranovsky in Russia.

Nationalism means war and destruction. It's the massacre of children and elderly. It signifies the raping of women. It is the burning of town and villages to the ground. I am not comparing Mr. Milson to war criminals. However, I am simply trying to say that there is a very thin line between nationalism and fascism.

Nationalism and national pride is a truly inhumane and shameful sentiment. It is a disgrace for human society. Nationalism is a dangerous illusion that subjugates the worker to the capitalist, the poor to the rich, the ruled to the ruler. Mr. Milson, we are human beings and that is how we need to define ourselves.

Your rhetoric about patriotism and anti-Americanism cuts human beings from their common human and universal character. Mr. Milson's nationalist agenda is dangerous, and it should be categorically rejected.

At the end, I would like to commend and congratulate all those SGA senators who defeated the bill. For whatever reason they voted down that ugly bill, they have done the right thing. Many students in this campus actively support their courageous action. This campus without people like them cannot change for the better. We are proud of those senators who opposed the bill, and I want to thank them all for being there.

The truth about the IRA

To the Editor:

Whatever one might think of the new Brad Pitt film, The Devil's Own, it does at least do one thing that Simon Burke's letter does not: it attempts to contextualize the conflict, and more importantly, it points the finger at the British occupation of Northern Ireland as being the root cause of the conflict.

Out concern however is not with the film but Mr. Burke's one-sided characterization of the conflict. Terrorism is one of the most emotive words in the English language. It is also one of the most problematic.

By Mr. Burke's criteria, the likes of Nelson Mandela and other noted anti-imperialists who used 'physical force' would be tarred with the same brush as the Oklahoma bombers. Perhaps George Washington's attack on sleeping British soldiers on Christmas Eve would merit inclusion in Mr. Burke's typology — an event that is often condoned and even celebrated here. Mr. Burke also fails to mention that while (his heroes) Daniel O'Connell and Charles Parnell fought the parliamentary fight, it was the militant agitation that coincided with these movements which caught the attention of the Establishment.

It is curious for Mr. Burke to describe Ireland as 'one country' up until the 1920s — I doubt if the Irish would have described it like that then. Ireland was a colonial possession, the Irish were a subject people and the British has to be heaved out of the majority of the territory by the Irish people and particularly an entity called the Irish Republican Army. The rump that was created by the British after partition called Northern Ireland was a place hideously inhospitable to the Catholic minority population. Everyday life for them was a mixture of intimidation and terror. In jobs, housing and schools, they faced almost penal discrimination. Mr. Burke is conspicuously silent about this terror.

He is also silent about the fact that the original civil rights associations that rose in the 1960s to combat these inequalities were pacific, politically modest and modeled themselves enormously after the likes Mr. Burke's political heroes.

What happened? They were smashed off the streets and burned out of their houses, by the combination of thugs from the local Protestant supremacist Orange Order and the Protestant-dominated Northern Irish Police force. When these Catholic districts were routed, the IRA was nicknamed "I Ran Away" — a reference to what a sleepy, spent organization it had become. It was as a response to political terror that nurtured the rise of the new, militarily formidable paramilitary organization — the Provisional IRA.

One may be repelled by many of the actions they have committed, but to label them as "terrorists" in the way Mr. Burke does only compounds the problem. It is simply ridiculous to equate the violence with the Oklahoma bombings.

Mr. Burke is right to point out that Sinn Fein has negligible presence in the Irish Republic, but it is an organization that has between 40-50 percent of the support of the Catholic population in the epicenter of the present conflict.

Sinn Fein or the IRA are not going to be scared away by Mr. Burke's 'terrorist' taunt. Mr. Burke mentions nothing of the current British government's intransigence or the atrocities committed by the British Army of Protestant paramilitary organization.

For sure, there might be a degree of romanticism and ignorance in the Irish-American representation of the contemporary IRA, but there isn't silence about the British culpability that was so evident in Mr. Burke's letter.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Why we print what we print

Editor's note: On May 8, the Collegian will celebrate its 30th anniversary as a daily paper. To mark the occasion, the Collegian is reprinting an editorial from each of the last 30 years. Today, we feature an editorial originally printed on September 3, 1980.

It is the will of the Universe that different opinions be held by different people. By communicating their views among themselves, individuals come to more erudite conclusions, which helps them to act more intelligently, which betters the prospects for humankind's success.

In much the same way, drivers, by allowing their eyes to wander occasionally from their cars' hood ornaments, manage to get out of serious traffic jams with only minor collision occurring.

The Collegian editorial staff is not a group to contest omniscient forces. So we have made a few ground rules to provide an editorial section for a productive exchange of personal biases. This we term an "editorial policy."

First, and most obviously, material submitted to the editorial pages that is substantially libelous will not be printed. This includes all letters, columns and editorials implying commission of a crime, tending to injure a person in his profession or job, inciting public ridicule or contempt and so on, which the writer does not know to be true. Of course, this goes for news articles too.

Second, the Collegian does not uphold the right of the intolerant to act intolerably. This means we will not publish contributors to the editorial pages who express the opinion that their perceived enemies should be silenced (censored, sealed in their dorms, cast forth into the desert or otherwise denied their Constitutional freedoms). The reason for this is simple: Such severe views block the process of information exchange by stifling individuals who should feel free to offer their views, uninhibited by intimidation. The existence of freedom of communication (which is the duty of the media to provide an essential purpose of our government to protect) requires that all opinions be tolerated, up to the point where one excludes another's right to be expressed.

An extreme example would be a letter the Collegian received last semester from a student, who, in response to a column criticizing the nuclear industry, said that all anti- nuclear activists should be put on boats and sailed out to sea where they would then be sunk by a "made to look accidental" attack of F-111 fighter-bombers. He was serious. The decision not to print this letter was effortless, but the matter is not always so clear. We are bound to make mistakes, to be too lenient or restrictive in some cases, because we are new at this. We will make a sincere effort to explain our errors.

Third, the editorial pages will not carry material which is blatantly sexist, racist or in some other way approximates an uncritical exhibition of its writer's malicious prejudices. This policy is consistent with the second (stated above) since prejudice is a form of intolerance. But, more importantly, this policy respects the glaring need at this University for our prejudices to be examined, rather than established. So while the neuter "he" will continue to be an acceptable reference to a proper noun, feminine or masculine, Nazi propaganda, Ku Klux Klan ethos and P.J. O'Rourke-style National Lampoon editorials will not be printed.

The existence of freedom of communication (which is the duty of the media to provide an essential purpose of our government to protect) requires that all opinions be tolerated, up to the point where one excludes another's right to be expressed.

This leaves a tremendous gray area between extremes: plenty of room for espousing capitalist patriarchy or socialist democracy or your favorite form of social and political organization — as long as it's not Nazism, etc.

A normal newspaper (one that is privately owned) earns its reputation as either "leftist" or "liberal" or "moderate" or "conservative" or "rightist" by handling this area in a particular way, in keeping with its publisher's policy of news selection. In the past, the Collegian, a publicly owned and run newspaper, has published letters, columns and editorials, expressing differing views along the full gamut of the contributors' political spectrum, in reasonable proportion to the volume of each received. This has always seemed appropriate given that the Collegian owes its existence to the effort of volunteer student contributors — all of them, from left field to right.

But we are going to share a secret with you which isn't really a secret at all. It is, instead, something critics of public newspapers' editorial policies seem conspired to ignore: In journalism, as in real life, some opinions are better than others. What distinguishes a good opinion from a bad one is research. A good opinion is an informed opinion; it is also articulately stated. Columnists and commentators will be required to show evidence of having put a great deal of thought and effort into the material they submit (this doesn't affect letter selection much, however. We try to print as many letters as possible).

We feel our power to decide what bent the Collegian will take is derived democratically. This view is upheld by observing another occurrence in real life. A democracy is who participates in it. Democracy fails by this definition, when people are systematically excluded by entrenched participants from participating. For example, American democracy has become more undemocratic thanks to the effort of our nation's leaders to make the citizen's vote ineffectual and difficult to cast (due in greater part to the electoral college and voter registration systems).

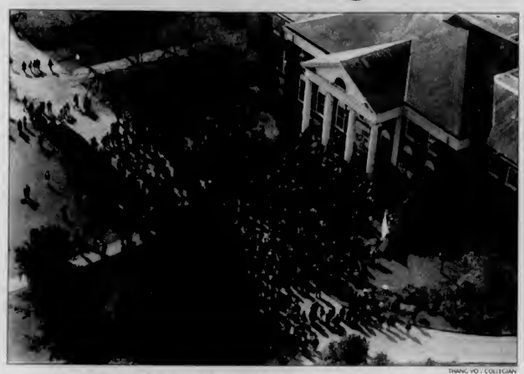
Has the Collegian developed exclusionary practices? No. At least not intentionally. There are things inherent in the way the paper functions which tend to keep certain kinds of people from wanting to contribute.

For one thing, newspaper work, like politics, is show biz. Newspaper people love to entertain and impress — with what they exclusively know. Journalists are essentially egotists and a six-piece collection of Collegian columnists' egos would fit tightly and convulsively into Boyden Gym. This is not to imply their egotism is detrimental to their work — it is as respectable a motivation for effort as any — but its concentration here in the office can be a real turn-off to the timid and altruistic.

Another characteristic of the paper discourages the socially insecure: Collegian staffers, of which there are roughly 200 at any given point in a semester, often gain each other's friendship during their tenure. This isn't always the case, but we try to get along. The staffers on the upper end of the division of labor — the editors— tend toward greater chumminess because we work more closely together and have known each other for at least one semester. When one editor writes a staff editorial, he or she uses the first person plural "we" to indicate thoughts and actions referred to are a consensus of the group, for which the group takes responsibility. This is because we must make decisions as a team. Newspaper editing is a team sport.

We don't all sleep together or hire our outside friends to high-paying positions (there aren't any), but we do out for a drink now and then, joke about our academic terrors and have a thousand laughs. So we are good friends. Some people feel uncomfortable walking into this; as people will feel nervous upon entering a party to which they are invited but where they know no one. But maybe they like the band, so they stay.

Perhaps by far the most important factor restraining wider participation is the casually held view that the Collegian is not a "good paper." We maintain that it has been neither a "great paper" nor a "bad paper." It is a newspaper which, with some repairs, has the potential to be a rewarding paper, both for its contributors and its readers.



Think of this: Let's say you own a car. You rely on your car, to some degree, to run properly but it is not running well at all. It stalls in intersections and accelerates sporadically, often at the wrong times. There is a group of people known as mechanics who have certified themselves competent to repair your car. They have not, by the evidence, been doing a very good job. You might continue using the car back to the mechanics, hoping they've either improved with experience or hired new personnel. Or you could learn to do some auto repairs yourself. Maybe you're too busy, are preoccupied with other things more crucial to you or prefer not to be associated with a group of incompetents. The mechanics shrug energetically at your complaints.

Goodell lives; negotiations stalled by administration

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of protestors stand outside of the Goodell Building during the second day of the student occupation as seen from a top floor of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library.

Editor's note: The following is a update written by the student negotiating committe on their current negotiations with the administration.

After student protesters left the building, they initiated further talks with the administration to set a timeline to fulfill the agreements of The Living Document.

The Problem: The administration has not been forthcoming with any of the information students have requested, leading the student negotiators to the conclusion that the administration as a whole, has no more intention of keeping its word now than it did in 1992.

The Evidence: Since the occupation ended, negotiators of the Document have met with Deputy Chancellor Marcellette Williams and Vice Chancellors Royster Hedepeth, Ken Burnham and Tom Robinson on three separate occasions. At each of these meetings requests were made for certain documents as well as letters of amnesty for faculty and staff, and each time these requests were denied. When students tried to get enrollment statistics and other vital information pertaining to the ALANA Agreements, some faculty and staff were reluctant to help them for fear of retaliation from the administration. We asked that a general letter of reassurance be issued to those who supported the students stating that their jobs were in no danger because of their political or ethical beliefs. The administration refused to comply with this gesture of good faith, listing various excuses, namely that such a gesture would make them "look guilty." They also said their employees didn't state any such fears. Students pointed out that if any staff or faculty felt threatened, it would hardly be in their best interests to admit it.

Another obstacle came in the form of necessary, public information, i.e. the budget requests for the upcoming year. Deputy Chancellor Williams managed to rearrange her personal budget in order to gain funding for the Native American Student Advising Center that will be formed in the wake of Goodell. Since no other administrative official offered such assistance, the only other way to get the funds for the other programs and positions promised in The Living Document is to request it from the legislature. While the student negotiators understand that requesting money from the state does not actually guarantee receiving that money, they need evidence that the Vice Chancellors in charge of Student Activities and Financial Aid have at least prioritized the items requested. Despite assurances that The Living Document and all it entailed is "top priority," to these administrators, they have not even included the relatively modest request for $40,000 to establish an advising position for UALRC. The Director of UALRC, Lucy Nguyen, has been documenting her need for another counselor for four years now, and point nine of The Living Document states that her request will be granted immediately. When the administration has not been forthcoming on just one point of The Living Document, how can the students negotiating with them establish any sort of faith?

During this last meeting, held last Tuesday, a number of students expressed their frustration with the administrators' tactics, which appeared to everyone in the room to consist of vague assurances, overly-emphatic denials and "bureau-bonics." Many expressed our ongoing dedication to the issues and pointed out that we were prepared to struggle as long as we had to in order to keep the administration in check and to assure ourselves and each other that this time they uphold their end of the bargain.

In response to these avowals, Chancellor David K. Scott, who has refused to be a part of these negotiations, issued a letter to all students on campus condemning conduct he never witnessed, and canceled all further administrative negotiations until students agreed to the demands forwarded by the administration. These demands are:

- A list of 15 students to carry out further negotiations of The Living Document.
- A facilitator to mediate these discussions.

What Scott and the other administrators would like the rest of the student body to forget is that they already have a list of the students who were elected to negotiate with administrators during the occupation. Since the administrative representatives have been unwilling to meet at a time convenient for the majority of those negotiators — who are, after all, students with busy schedules — they have not seen the familiar faces they were once accustomed to, and seem to desire. And although these students have been empowered to speak by the groups they represent, these issues are the concerns of all students and the meetings are open to the public.

When student negotiators were inside Goodell, they asked for a neutral facilitator to mediate their discussions, but the administration saw this as unnecessary. We are grateful that Scott and the others have finally seen the need we anticipated a month ago, and once again we propose the same facilitator suggested inside Goodell — a representative of the Department of Justice who mediated the 1992 ALANA Agreements and is already familiar with the issues. He offered his services again in March, for this very reason; due to the time constraints and complicated nature of some points in the document, the negotiators and the groups they represent on campus feel that he would be the best person for the job. Get informed! Don't let them manipulate the truth! If you are curious about the progress of negotiations, come to the next meeting on April 18, 7:30-9:30 p.m. in the New Africa House Library, located on the second floor.

Student negotiator speaks out

Deepika Marya

It is a commonly held perception on this campus, with an element of truth in it, that to have our needs heard, students of color must take over a building. One wishes it was an exaggeration, but takeovers have become an often occurring event at UMass Amherst for students of color.

- In 1988, students of color took over the New Africa House which then led to the restoration of the New Africa House as a cultural center for ALANA students.
- In 1992, students of color took over Memorial Hall in protest of a campus riddled with racial tensions, such as the mauling of an African American Resident Assistant and racial graffiti. This takeover led to the 1992 ALANA Agreements which include several agreements concerning greater access for students of color.
- In 1997, students of color took over the Goodell Building, once again, to address ALANA issues and issues of access.

Students of color are therefore stereotyped as "rowdy, rabble-rousing miscreants" who incessantly make demands on the administration, which according to administration, have always looked out for these students. "The student's mouths never shut," the administration would complain, "no matter what food we are putting into them."

The filling of the mouth is an interesting metaphor because it could mean, 1) filling it with food and nourishment, or 2) filling it with the idea that food is on the way. Both sides are ignoring the alternative interpretation of this figure of speech. Students think of example one and the administration thinks of example two and both wonder where they are going wrong.

Is the situation hopeless? Do we really not know how to communicate and make sense of what the other is saying? The problem is not with semantics or multiple meanings but with dodging the issues. It lies in intention and what is being said, in the desire for clarity which brings blurred, uncommitted statements from the administration to light.

Let me start by saying that we left Goodell with a document signed by the top brass on the campus. This Living Document is a list of commitments the administration signed off on as an initial gesture to give priority to issues related to students of color. There was an agreement made to have ongoing discussions on those demands which did not make it to the list of the final 21 commitments, that have been agreed upon by the administration. A commitment, by common knowledge, is a firm agreement honored by both sides. Of the 21 "commitments" the administration made, many have yet to be confirmed. What this means to us is that we have a commitment which was never meant to be honored.

Are students of color out of line by asking for timeliness? What good is your word if you can't tell us when a commitment will see the light of day? How seriously can we take a "commitment" when the administration doesn't want to commit to assuring us when a particular need will begin to be fulfilled?

The Kafkaesque situation breeds disenchantment, despair and utter outrage at the blatant insensitivity of our administrators who have claimed, at almost all public gatherings their commitment is to multiculturalism and diversity. Students of color have become a cause, and "a worthy one" for administrators and many white students. "Morally" and "ethically," how could one do better than wanting to help "a poor minority" student? I am now and always have been grateful for that, Chancellor Scott. So then, why this disgust with the negotiations? It is because we are tired of commitments and priorities. What do priorities mean to an administration that cannot see and hear when students have brought evidence to their existing problems? What does a priority mean when it is on the bottom of a list? The rhetoric never ends.

While it is exciting to watch the absurd play with words at negotiation meetings, it is alarming to realize the extent of racism prevalent at the highest level of the administration. Do we have to continue taking over buildings to let the administration know that matters are in dire straits? Playing with words like "priority" and "commitment" is disgusting because those words are our hope. They demonstrate our need and the "good faith" in which we have continued to negotiate — hoping to come to a better understanding and resolve some issues we put down as demands. The administration cannot claim to have reciprocated our "good faith" and trust in negotiations.

We have met four times since we left Goodell and we are still trying to get confirmed timeliness and a confirmed plan of action on what has already been agreed upon. And the nightmare continues. Agreements without a plan that is agreed upon, is no agreement at all! Every session ends with rhetoric inflated with nothingness. Soft words, understanding nods, pretence of genuine concern does not help retention of ALANA students, or of ALANA students being able to secure jobs on campus as white students do.

If the administrators along with the faculty share any responsibility in their role as educators on this campus, the impact of this run-around on the students has been completely negative. What are you teaching them about keeping a commitment? What about the is the importance of having the moral courage to be forthright in one's dealings? What is the significance of clarity in discussions? What does the administration imagine the impact will be in the lessons we are being taught by them of mistrust?

As far as the students are concerned, the general understanding is that negotiations have yet to begin because we are still clarifying and qualifying the so called commitments. We negotiate when an issue will be brought to the table. No new issues outside the 21 commitments have been discussed at any of the negotiations. This is an outrage, does it take so long to confirm commitments? But I guess for the administration it does, when it comes to the needs of ALANA students. Only an institution that has lost credibility could treat its students as shoddily as students of color have been treated on this campus.

Where do we go from here? We plan to continue meeting the administration and clarifying what has been "committed" to and hope we get to discuss and negotiate on those demands which did not receive a friendly nod from our administrators. We want to make this campus as multicultural as the administration proclaims it to be. We want to see students integrated and not pitted against each other along color lines as the administration wants it to be. Perhaps there could be a more effective way of achieving our common goals rather than stalling, dodging and insensitivity. The administration has always expressed how much students of color mean to them at public forums, so a healthy resolution to our demands should not be far.

Mr. Chancellor, having sat in task forces and committee meetings run by your administrators for years, we know what we need to get this task done: clarity, respect for students of color and truth. If this campus is not to become a breeding ground for self-promoting administrators and racist ideologies, let students of color see they are an important constituency on this campus. We throw this as an open challenge to you and the administration.

Palestinian women speak out on oppression

A Statement by the General Union of Palestinian Women, Jerusalem, Palestine, March 1997

Palestinian women express their grave concern over the deteriorating situation in Palestine caused by the continued denial of Palestinian national rights and the flagrant violations of their human rights by the Israeli government.

The great sacrifice the Palestinians offered when they launched their Peace Initiative in 1988, accepting to negotiate while their country remained occupied, was in good faith and in recognition of the solidarity shown to their cause by the international community. Their initiative aimed at sparing future generations the horrors of war and securing a just peace for their people. However, when they went to Madrid in 1991, they did not do so to capitulate or to forfeit their legitimate rights. The framework for the peace process was clearly declared — UN Resolutions 242 and 338 which unequivocally proclaim the inadmissibility of acquisition of land by war.

To our dismay, however, the process is gradually being reduced to negotiations between two unequal partners — an occupying power with all the arsenal and tools of subjugation and a defenseless people restricted in ghettos and generally held hostage to the whims of the occupiers.

Israel continues its illegal actions and measures on all fronts foremost amongst which is the confiscation of land and the building and expansion of settlements (especially in and around Jerusalem) which are already illegal by international law and under the terms of 242. Moreover, Israel continues to muster support by its lip service to peace while waging a relentless war against our people in every sphere. We are extremely distressed at the position of the American government which continuously offers its unwavering support to Israel even as it flagrantly violates human rights and defies the will of the international community. The American Government, which took upon itself the task of replacing the international community and sponsoring the Peace Process, is certainly expected to be impartial and uninfluenced by political considerations and vested interests in its actions and policies.

As women whose concern for the future of mankind and the sanctity of human life, we cannot witness indifferently the pains and tribulations of our people as they are being dispossessed, subjugated and pushed in a corner under gun- point and forced to give more and more concessions that contravene human law and all international conventions.

Real and permanent peace can only be achieved when rights are restored and injustices redressed. It can never be attained by depriving a defenseless people of their rights, their freedom, their livelihood, their memories and their human dignity.

We call upon the International community to stand by our just demands that are the only guarantee for peace in our region which can be expressed by the following principles:

1. The reaffirmation of all UN resolutions regarding the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.
2. The recognition of Palestinian rights of self- determination, return, territorial integrity and the establishment of their independent states, Jerusalem as capital.
3. Illegality of all settlements.
4. Jerusalem is the heartland of Palestine. No peace can be attained without practicing our rights in Jerusalem.

In order to enable the Palestinians to attain these goals, we demand the following steps be taken immediately:

1. An end to the confiscation of land, the building and expension of settlements and the immediate withdrawal from all occupied territories including the existing settlements, thereby ensuring the territorial unity and integrity of the Palestinian State.
2. The restoration of Palestinian rights in Jerusalem and an end to measures that will jeopardize these rights.
3. The release of all Palestinian political prisoners.
4. An end to travel restrictions and closures of areas.
5. An end to the Israeli oppressive measures which include random killings, detention, the demolishing of homes and destruction of crops.

It is high time for Palestinian women to realize their aspirations and dreams of justice, freedom and security for themselves, their people and their children. We urge you to stand by us in our struggle so that together we may forge a peaceful world for all.

— Samantha S. Khalil, President of the General Union of Palestinian Women, Interior section.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

This week's web news

You'll Never Guess What I Just Heard... That is the catch phrase of just about every kid in middle and high school when they are about to spread a vicious rumor that is undoubtedly untrue. How many times here at UMass have you heard those tales, rich in detail and imagination yet sadly untrue? Yes, we all have. Here is a tale that everybody in my classes has been talking about, which involves technology. One even said that they really had an attack of the Good Times virus. Yeah, OK buddy.

Patrick Shanley

The Good Times Virus

This rumor is the biggest farce of them all. No one is sure when this e-mail prank began, but it is still haunting the likes of a lot of newbie users. Shame on the seasoned net heads for scaring the newcomers.

About two years ago, a user on AOL sent a phony e-mail to a random assortment of people on the net. The subject of the mail was "INTERNET VIRUS WARNING," and contained within was a phony report by the FCC. It warned about a highly destructive new virus that spread via e-mail. The virus, which caused your hard drive to be deleted, was contained in e-mails that had the subject heading of "Good Times."

Supposedly, when you opened the mail containing that subject heading, a data-destroying virus jumped into your hard drive and began its dance macabre. Obviously, we all watch a little bit too much television because it would be impossible for something like this to happen. Mr. Gates himself has no idea how to do that.

So watch out for that eerie Good Times virus because this myth is still out there and is frightening a lot of people. Don't be fooled too.

Ah Yes! It's All Coming Back To Me Now...

The free wheelin' Bobby Dylan will play Smith tonight

By Justin Beland
Collegian Staff

It has been 35 years since a young rambler from Hibbing, Minn. named Robert Allen Zimmerman began putting out brilliant albums under the name Bob Dylan. His creative force and vision took over the world and quite simply changed the face of music, from the way it was played to the way it was recorded.

Thirty-five years, and we still flock to see him. To gaze at this man, this myth, who has altered himself, his past, his music and his ideals to suit his whims. Thirty-five years, and we know little more about him now then we did back then. We know of motorcycle accidents and failed marriages, we know of found and then lost spirituality, we know of up- and-coming offspring, but we know little else. But still we go to him. Ages 15 to 65, in black sunglasses and top hats or jeans and t-shirts. In Volvos, VW Buses or Triumph Motorcycles, with license plates reading MYBKPGS or DYLNFREK.

It doesn't matter what identity he's going by on any particular evening. Whether he's Uncle Bobby, Zimmy, Maestro, Mr. Zim, St. Dylan, Lucky, the Jester, the Boxer, Alias, the Song-and-Dance Man, Renaldo, Jim Nasium, Blind Boy Grunt or just plain Bob—there is, has been and always will be, only one Bob Dylan.

There are those who say that he has lost it, that he should have quit while he was ahead. Then there are those that have actually seen him play recently. The past four years have seen Dylan achieve a musical intensity unparalleled since his Rolling Thunder Revue of the late '70s. He rips through songs he has played literally thousands of times as if it were the first time he had ever played them. His acoustic performances show that his voice, despite years of abuse through cigarettes, alcohol and top-of-his-lungs singing almost every night can still sing with the rock-solid Midwestern drawl that caught so many ears in the early '60s.

Bob Dylan will play John M. Greene Hall at Smith College tonight for what is certain to be an unforgettable evening.

Although he has been pulling out some surprises in recent shows, it's still relatively easy to predict what songs you're going to hear. Yet, almost his entire collection of songs that he will play live (over 300) have been retooled over the years. He'll open with "Crash on the Levee (Down in the Flood)," turning it from the slow, happy sing-along of 1975's The Basement Tapes to a rollicking blues-rifled mindblower that immediately lets the doubtful know that, despite what they were expecting, Bobby's back! The perennial song number three has been "All Along the Watchtower" for almost eight years. Dylan does the song more like Jimi Hendrix's version than his own 1968 original from John Wesley Harding, which was acoustic, and considerably more mellow. Song number six is "Silvio," from 1988's underrated Down in the Groove. Dylan turns the short, snappy number (co-written with Grateful Dead lyricist Robert Hunter) to a seven to 10 minute jam tailored to his own desires, leaving out or rearranging verses, depending on how much he's enjoying playing the song. This is part of Dylan's incomparable live spontaneity, for which he is rarely given enough credit.

Songs seven through 10 are the first acoustic set Dylan does. As of late, song seven has been a beautiful rendition of the Dead's "Friend of the Devil," with guitarist Larry Campbell (new to Dylan's band on this tour) playing fiddle behind Dylan's acoustic guitar. Songs 10-12 are where the real surprises lie, with Dylan playing songs as well known as "Highway 61 Revisited," "Maggie's Farm" and "Leopard- Skin Pillbox Hat" to lesser known, but no less intense songs like "Seeing the Real You At Last," "Lenny Bruce" and "I & I."

The encores start with the crowd-pleasing "Like a Rolling Stone" and end with the house lights coming up for a rowdy version of "Rainy Day Women #12 & 35," with the crowd belting out the famous "Everybody must get stoned" chorus right along with Bob.

Though the songs have gotten easier to predict, seeing a 55-year-old (56 next month) Dylan rip through his updated versions with more energy than his Wallflower son Jakob, is truly something to behold. The John Greene Hall crowd should expect an amazing performance from one of the most important musical minds in history.

Bob Dylan plays John M. Greene Hall on the campus of Smith College tonight at 8:00 pm. The show is sold out.

all around."

Along with Durant, the Minutewomen need the freshman Ola Gerasimova step it up as well.

"Another thing we're looking at is for Ola [Gerasimova] to establish herself as the team leader, and as our No. 1 player," Lowry said. "It's gotten to the point now where she can't hide behind the other team members anymore and needs to step up as our No. 1 player and as our team leader."

This week and these two matches will be important for UMass to come out with intensity and emotion and translate that into the matches. The competition is only becoming tougher, and this is where it all begins.

"We need to get the "match" that justifies our hard work as coaches and players," Lowry said. "We need a match that sort of justifies our position and gives us an indication of how good we are and how ready we are."

Orlando Pace ready for NFL Draft

By Rusty Miller
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Pro scouts aren't the only ones who marvel at Ohio State's oak of an offensive lineman, Orlando Pace. Thinking back to the pudgy kid with the voracious appetite, his mother shakes her head and says with a laugh, "I still try to figure out where this kid came from."

Now Pace is poised to become the No. 1 pick in the NFL draft. Scouts describe him as a ballerina in a 6-foot-6 1/2-inch shell, or "Twister" tipping the scales at 330 pounds.

But this is a tale of two Paces, the dominating blocker and the kid from Sandusky with a smile for everybody and an easygoing manner — off the field, anyway. He said he doesn't care which team picks him Saturday.

"I'm just ready to go out and play football for whoever that may be," the soft-spoken Pace said. "The anxiety is building up every day."

Just like his reputation.

Pace's legacy includes the "pancake" body count at Ohio State — a particularly vicious block that "flattens a defender."

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz described Pace last fall as "one of the best tackles in football today. And I didn't say college football, I said football."

An opposing defensive lineman, Wisconsin's Tarek Saleh, wasn't just worried about being blocked. "For that split second after he gets his hands on you, if he gets his legs underneath him, then he's going to body-slam you. And then you're done."

Nonetheless, the football star is a kind, gentle soul off the field. Apparently there is room for two people in that frame. His voice is so quiet it seems to come from a child. He is good-natured and friendly, as pleasant socially as he is imposing physically. Kids gravitate to him, a massive Beanie Baby with two Lombardi Awards.

He started life at 8 pounds, 4 ounces, but that was the last time he was average.

"I kept him in sports to keep him out of trouble," said his mother, Joyce Caffey, who along with her father and brother helped raise her family. "I tried to keep him busy because he didn't have a father figure."

The hardest part was feeding a growing boy. His mother worked the night shift at a crayon factory, so every morning she cooked a full breakfast — eggs, bacon, toast, grits — for Orlando and his sister.

Pace was an anomaly from the outset: quick feet on a huge body, sure hands with such girth. And in rabid Buckeye country, he loved Michigan.

"He ran the floor like a guard," Michigan coach Lloyd Carr said, remembering trips to scout Pace playing basketball during the winter.

But after visiting Ohio State, Pace knew he fit in. He never missed a practice or game in his three years, and the Buckeyes went 31-7.

"I'd hear about him going to Michigan or Miami or Southern Cal or wherever," Buckeye coach John Cooper said, "but every Sunday night he would call me and tell me he was still coming to Ohio State."

Pace's Sandusky High School basketball coach, John Schiessman, said he saw Pace lose his temper only once in three years as a starter, when a player confronted him.

"The next thing you know, Orlando pushed him and the kid slid across the floor and out of bounds. He almost went through a bass drum that was just off the court," Schiessman said.

By the time Pace was a high school senior, football coach Larry Cook worried that the big kid might hurt a teammate in a pileup. "I never saw him in a foul mood," Cook said. "But once he was on a football field, he didn't smile and he didn't say a whole lot. He just would light you up."

Pace capped a storied college career when the Buckeyes beat Arizona State in the final seconds of the Rose Bowl to finish No. 2 in the polls. After much deliberation, he decided to give up his last year of college and turn pro.

Pace's mother is already fretting that her youngest might end up going to the Oakland Raiders with the No. 2 pick. (The Jets have the top pick). She missed a day of work last week, fretting over the prospect of her son being three time zones away.

But Pace said there's no need to worry, no matter how far away he is, how much money he has or how many people are trying to knock him down to get to his quarterback.

"I'll pretty much stay the same," he said. "I don't see myself ever doing too many out-of-the-ordinary type of things." Except, of course, on the field.

fastballs on the team, but lately it just haven't been enough. His ERA has fallen to 8.40 since his last two starts. What coach Mike Stone needs to do is get Barnsby back on the mound as soon as possible to get his confidence back up.

The key to good pitching is constant performance, and freshman prospect Travis Veracka (1–1) has seen much time this year. In the last two weeks, Veracka has only pitched in one game, which was for his first loss against Dayton. His current ERA is 3.86, and he has recorded six strikeouts.

Closing the Book:

All in all, the baseball team has put its pieces together. Only a few players are in slumps right now, and that's great for a national contender. UMass faces the University of Maine in a mid-week doubleheader on Wednesday, starting at 1:30 at Earl E. Lorden Field, behind the Mullins Center.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20
You've been able to relax lately, but today it's back to the grind. Extreme changes in some area of your life could have you feeling ambivalent. Try to retreat to a place of peace and quiet to restore your equilibrium. Call a faraway friend for a pick-me-up; they will have good news to share.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
The quest for romance could carry you far this week. Listen to your head as well as your heart and you'll do just fine. This is a good week to change your life for the better—if you've been thinking about ending a bad habit, now is the time.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
A sudden windfall could be in the offing. Prudence should dictate its use. Although you may be tempted to live high on the hog, you would do well to plan ahead for a rainy day. An old friend offers some inspiring news.

CANCER
June 22–July 22
This is a good week to give your contemplative energies a free rein. You'll see a startling insight. Put it to use to shaping your future plans. Your hard-working attitude could make a big impression on someone near you, so keep up the good work!

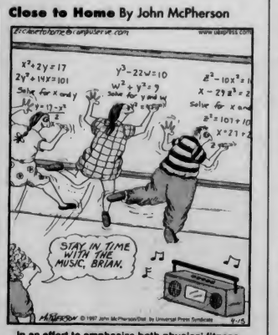
LEO
July 23–August 23
Don't fight things this week—instead, go with the flow. Look for an answer to be forthcoming on a difficult question. A friend's confidence could be the source of comfort for you, but try to maintain silence in the long run. you'll be glad you did.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22
Your practical nature and sense of humor are in rare form this week. Go ahead—let yourself giggle. This is a good time to take stock of the progress you've made over the last year or so. If you're better off, great. If not, what can you do differently?

LIBRA
September 23–October 23
You're successful beyond your understanding this week. Give credit where it's due, or you could make yet another enemy. That's something you really don't need. When conflict looms, see if you can defuse the issue before entering into an argument.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22
Finish your chores before indulging in something decadent. Don't look for understanding in a book this week. You're better off serving the bull by the horns and looking for insight in the real world. Give a family member a little extra TLC this weekend.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21
A hot-tempered person has a major impact on your peace of mind. This is a good week to ask someone for advice, but not for following it blindly. If you're in doubt, get a second opinion. Although you may want a commitment, now is not the time.



CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20
A complicated love life could be due to factors beyond your control. If you're not ready to answer a question, don't allow yourself to be bullied. Avoid being drawn into a pointless argument. If there's nothing to be gained, then you're better occupied elsewhere.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18
Take a strong stance with someone who's been putting you off. The outcome could be better than you expect. Don't worry about one who seems ungrateful. Your kindness has not gone unnoticed.

PISCES
February 19–March 20
Your first impulse might not be the right one to follow this week. Be sure to allow yourself a cooling-off time if a major decision looms. Focus on finding a career challenge, especially if you're feeling bored. Don't spend more than you can afford this weekend.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

Leold (leold@javanet.com)
by Roger and Salem Salloom ©1996

When my girlfriend and I go out to get pizza, I pay for it. If I didn't we couldn't go out very much. I make more money than she does.

Sometimes she says I pay for everything so that I can kiss her at the end of the night. But that's not why I do it. Some guys think that way but I don't.

When I kiss her something takes over my body. She has neat lips.

I don't know why I make more money than she does. She's as smart as me... even smarter in some ways.

It's all confusing.

All I really do know is that since last February 1st she owes me $123.48 for pizzas and drinks.

UM men's track sweeps Holy Cross, PC, Iona

By Matthew Perrault
Collegian Staff

As the weather begins to heat up, so does the mens track and field team. The Minutemen are gearing up for what should be an exciting postseason run by destroying everything in their current path.

Their latest victims were Holy Cross, Iona College and Providence College this past Saturday afternoon at Llewelyn Derby Track. The closest competitor finished 59 points behind.

UMass, fresh off their thrashing of Boston College last weekend, was ready to tackle the competition in their final home meet of the season. It turned out to be another huge victory for the Minutemen.

Sophomore Tom Toye was again outstanding on the track. He was a double winner, taking the 100 sprint (11.0) and 110 hurdles (15.8). Toye was also the opening leg of the 4x100 team which ran a school record time of 41.5.

The 4x100 team's time broke the mark that was set in 1971. Running for UMass along with Toye were senior Christian Abbott, sophomore Neil Concepcion and junior Scott Price.

"We are pretty excited about the school record. We knew it was coming, we just didn't expect it this soon. But we are not done yet and the year is not over yet. We are going for the New England Championship, and we should be in the hunt," said Toye.

On the field events, freshmen Victor Morency captured both the javelin and discus. It was second consecutive week that the freshman had a double win meet. His Discus throw of 167'6 qualified him for the New Englands and IC4As and is second on the all-time UMass list behind Dennis Boisvert.

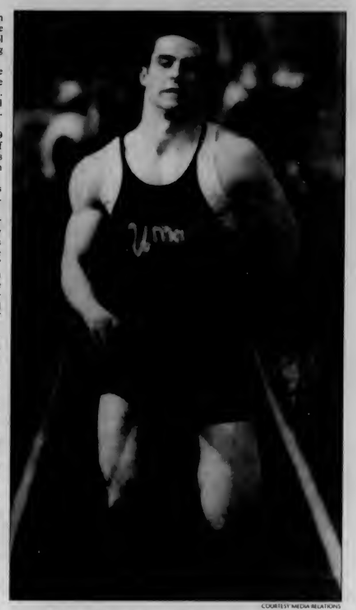
Boisvert's record discus throw of 182' was made when he was a senior at the University. He would go on the win IC4A title that year. This bodes well for the youngsters, who should have three more years to try and break the mark.

Also winning for UMass were sophomore Jan Stevens, placing first in shot put (51.6 1/4) and second in the Hammer (141.6) and sophomore Albie Vasquez who broke the school record for pole vault with his winning height of 14-7.

"We were very good that day. We knew that Holy Cross and Providence wouldn't be that tough and after B.C. last week, we are gelling together. I thought the 4x100 was really impressive" said Vasquez.

Overall, UMass won 15 of the 19 first place finishes and scored total of 111 to Holy Cross's 52, Providence's 22, and Iona's 18. The Minutemen improve to 3-0 on the season.

Head Coach Ken O'Brien was extremely pleased with his team's performance.



"We did very well this week. Our team has been solid and we are now well balanced. We have some kids who have been together for a while now, indoors and out, and it shows," O'Brien said. "We haven't been known for our depth but some blue chip kids are starting to make their way to the front of their event and that is what you need to score a lot of points and win championships."

UMass seems poised to make a good run in the postseason. They are coming together at just the right time and realize that there is a lot more work to be done. Overconfidence should not be a problem for this team. The runners have the experience together to understand what needs to be done.

Most of the 4x100 team has been together since the indoor season and with the addition of sophomore Neil Concepcion and the improvement of senior Christian Abbott, the team is running on all cylinders.

"Christian Abbott has made some big improvements. He has worked hard all four years here and it's paying off. He wants to go out with a bang" said Toye. "This team, with the exception of Abbott, ran together all indoor season. We train together and are pretty close. We're hungry."

Next up for the Minutemen is a meet at Northeastern against the host, URI and Dartmouth next weekend at 12 noon and then it's on to the Penn Relays and the A-10 Championships.

Tiger conquers Augusta; transcends golfing world

He's part Asian-American, but everyone describes him as black. He's too young, and doesn't have the experience to win the big ones. Right?

(Well, that's what I've heard.)

He walks modestly to the 18th green shining his sparkling white teeth to the gallery of fans, who, by this point, have gone berserk, cheering and applauding his accomplishments. His attire is an island of hope in a sea of tacky khakis. All of his clothes exhibit the familiar swoosh that represents his No. 1 endorser.

Tiger Woods, the man, not the myth, destroyed the playing field this weekend and won the Masters Championship.

"He's the greatest golfer in the world," Paul Azinger said.

That could be an understatement. The list of what Tiger did this weekend is long and distinguished. He not only went against all odds and earned his first of what could be many green jackets, but achieved the lowest score ever to be written on a Masters' scorecard — 18 under par.

JOHNATHAN M. PLACE

Is it finally time to admit he is the greatest golfer ever to step foot on to a course?

I think it is.

I'm not going to get into it with you on what he did this weekend. If you're reading this, you definitely know what he has done by now.

But let's think about it for a moment. Close your eyes and picture yourself at 21 years and four months of age. While most of you are thinking about putting back a cold one, are there any of you envisioning winning a national title?

I consider myself an average golfer for 19, but in two years let's just hope I'll be able to score in the low 80s, let alone win the Masters.

The most compelling moment of the day was watching Tiger coming off the 18th green to embrace his father, Earl Woods, who had just undergone heart surgery six weeks ago. They clutched for a good 30 seconds, while the tears rolled down their faces. It was not only Tiger's moment, but a moment for the entire Woods family, and maybe for every young athlete as well.

Ever since Woods was three years old, he knew his destiny. Every night before he went to sleep, he saw a list of Jack Nicklaus' accomplishments that was tacked on the headboard of his bed.

Tiger had only one goal this weekend, and that was to win the Masters. He masterfully broke all kinds of records, but more importantly, he changed golf as we know it. Rightfully so, Tiger acknowledged Lee Elmer and Old Tom Morris, two black men who came before him and paved the way for Tiger to be able to compete today.

Elmer was the first African-American golfer to play in the Masters back in 1975. Under constant guard and supervision, Elmer survived the weekend. In the Butler Cabin while excepting the green jacket, Woods declared how he is forever in their debt, and that he thought of them during the entire tournament.

Place him with Henry David Thoreau. Sit him down with Michael Jordan. Put him next to Jackie Robinson. Tiger is the transcendentalist of golf.

While watching the final round outside of the Collegian in the basement of the Campus Center, I sat next to five other people. Two of them were black, one was a white, and the other two were young kids, around the ages of nine or 10. We all were in awe of Tiger, and couldn't believe what he has done for the sport. We even talked about how if it were five years ago, most of them wouldn't even be watching golf and I would have been the only one sitting there watching the tournament. (Just because I'm golf junkie.) These young kids were actually watching golf, and were not losing interest.

Tiger has made golf cool. Remember when everyone wanted "to be like Mike"? Now, everyone is Tiger Woods.

If you're the longest hitter on tour, that's something to talk about. If you're the youngest golfer ever to win the Masters, that'll stick out. If you're a successful Asian- African-American golfer, that's something to discuss. Now put them all together, and you have what could possibly be the greatest golfer ever to play the sport.

UMass baseball heats up with the weather

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

What the Massachusetts baseball team is doing now is playing consistent, hard nose ball and coming up with great results. Since this weekend's defeathering of Temple's Owls, the UMass ballclub is batting a combined .357, while the pitching staff carries a 5.55 ERA.

BASEBALL NOTEBOOK

Who's Hot at the Plate

Doug Clark has been on fire for the last two weeks. Last week, he was named the Atlantic 10 Athlete of the Week, but that was before he went 7-for-10 against Temple, improving his batting average to .434. He had two home runs against the Owls including a grand slam. Clark is leading the team with 37 RBI and is tied with Aaron Braunstein with eight home runs.

Brad Gorrie continues to dominate on the basepads. This weekend he stole six bases, which improved his mark to 25- for-25. He currently stands three shy of Ryan Jette's mark of 83. He also leads the team in walks (20).

Brian Samela has taken the sixth spot in the lineup by storm. He is currently batting .421, which is second for everyday starters. The catcher hit a hot streak this weekend, batting .545 and knocking two out of the park. At .825, Samela has the highest slugging percentage of any UMass starter. Along with his hitting performance, Samela has a perfect fielding percentage.

Muchie Dagliere is continuing right where he left off last year. Last year's All-American Candidate is batting .415, with eight doubles, three home runs, and 25 RBI.

On the Mound

Jason Bennett (5-1) is the number one pitcher in UMass' rotation. The senior tri-captain captured the 21st victory of his career on Saturday, making him the winningest pitcher in Minuteman history. His ERA has dropped back down to 4.72 after giving up 1 earned runs to Virginia Tech two weeks ago. He's pitched in 40 innings, with two complete games, 22 K's and is only giving up a batting average of .293.

Bill Cooke (3-2) earned his third win this weekend against the Owls. He leads the rotation with three complete games while posting 5.40 ERA, below the team average. In 35 innings, he has only given up four walks, the lowest among regular starters.

Ryan Cameron (1-0) has the lowest ERA on the team at 3.09. In six appearances, he has only given up 11 hits, and six runs while giving up the second lowest batting average — .214. Unfortunately, the starting pitchers excelled this weekend and Cameron saw no time out of the bullpen.

Adam Robinson (1-0) picked up his first win of the season last week against Central Connecticut State. His ERA (3.86) is currently tied for second on the pitching staff, while in the seven innings he has pitched he has only given up five hits.

Coming up big for the Minutemen over this weekend was Jeff Puleri (2-1). He gave UMass 7.1 innings on Sunday while only surrendering one run and striking out three. His ERA has come down to 5.40.

Who's Not at the Plate:

David Giglio started out on fire, but over this past weekend he only recorded one hit in ten at bats against the Owls. He is still batting .306 in the ninth spot. For the lineup UMass has, everyone is allowed a slump here and there.

Jason Kudrikow was batting .407 before this weekend, but after going hitless against Temple, he has dropped to .333.

On the Mound:

Scott Barnsby (2-0) has one of the hardest

Women's tennis destroys Rhode Island

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's tennis team is continuing to play flawless tennis, with their latest victory coming this past Thursday in a 7-0 blanking of Rhode Island in Kingston, to improve to 11-3 on the season, 6-1 this Spring.

They go right back at it this afternoon as they are taking on No. 6 ranked Williams at the Upper Boyden tennis courts in a match that begins at 3:30 p.m.

"Williams is Division III, but they are sixth in the country, so I think this is a good opportunity for the team to prove to themselves that they are as good as we have been telling them they are," UMass assistant coach Tom Lowry said.

This match will be one of two very important matches for the Minutewomen this week as they have no time to relax. Tomorrow they take to the road to take on nationally ranked and Division I Boston University. This week will be key for UMass, as they get ready for the Atlantic 10 tournament.

The win on Thursday was a match that the Minutewomen were favored to win. They certainly didn't disappoint, playing up to their potential, in the kind of match that was necessary for them to dominate.

"It was a really tough match because it was extremely windy, and it was on the coast," Lowry said. "The hard part about the match was just to get through it and not to let it break our concentration, because our focus since spring break was on this week coming up here. We had to shut them out."

Once again, UMass wasted little time in pulling away for the victory, as they spend more time traveling on the road than they did on the courts, in blasting the Rams for their sixth win in seven matches this spring.

The Minutewomen did not allow any of the Rams to rack up any more than two points in a singles match, and every one of the players for UMass cruised to straight set victories.

Freshman Ola Gerasimova at No. 1 singles was once again rolling right along with a 6-0, 6-1 win over Jill Estes of URI. Back in the lineup at No. 2 singles, junior Marie-Christine Caron came away with two 6-1 victories to keep up the pace.

Sophomore Jackie Braunstein at No. 3 came away with her team leading 15th singles win, 6-0, 6-1 and senior Liz Durant at No. 4 singles came away an easy winner as well with two 6-1 wins. Junior Caroline Steele at No. 5 won 6- 2, 6-1, and junior Lana Gorodetskaya playing at No. 6 had a 6-0 shutout and a 6-1 win.

The doubles competition was the same type of situation, as the No. 1 doubles team of Gerasimova and Steele came away with an 8-5 win over the No. 1 team of URI of Estes and Jen Baccari. Both the doubles and singles win were Gerasimova's 10th of the season. The No. 2 and No. 3 teams allowed only two points combined on the way to capturing the doubles point.

For today's match Lowry believes that the Minutewomen have the stronger team, but that they have to be ready mentally and continue to play strong tennis.

"It's just a matter of being mentally efficient," Lowry said. "We worked on that down in Rhode Island, and we worked on concentration."

Lowry says they are looking for two things this week to happen along with the sweep of the matches.

"We're looking for a really strong finish for Liz [Durant], and she has to concentrate a lot of leaving something behind and showing what it means to be a senior and finish strong, and what kind of reputation or legacy she is going to leave behind," Lowry said. "We try not to put too much focus on her, but we looking for her to have a good week.

U.N.: no criticism for China on human rights

GENEVA (AP) — After an intense lobbying campaign marked both by threats and tantalizing promises, China succeeded once again yesterday in blocking U.N. criticism of its human rights record. It was the seventh straight year that the world's most populous nation avoided rebuke by the 53-nation Human Rights Commission, the United Nations' top human rights watchdog.

The commission also voted yesterday to condemn human rights violations in Nigeria and put the country under special scrutiny. In a procedure reserved for the worst violators. It denounced human rights violations in Sudan, Iran, Zaire and Bosnia, and Israel's occupation of southern Lebanon.

To cheers from Beijing's Asian and African supporters, the commission voted 27-17 to uphold a Chinese procedural motion stating that the body should take no action on a mildly worded resolution expressing concern about its human rights record. Nine members abstained.

The vote blocked the resolution, presented by Denmark, which cited "continuing reports of violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms."

FBI's takes their turn to admit incompetence

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI crime lab agents produced flawed scientific work or inaccurate testimony in major cases such as the Oklahoma City bombing, the Justice Department inspector general said yesterday. He recommended discipline for five agents and transfer of the original whistle-blower.

But Inspector General Michael Bromwich concluded in his report that agents of the world-renowned crime lab did not commit perjury or fabricate evidence.

Attorney General Janet Reno said the damaging findings already have been raised by defense attorneys in 13 court cases and "there has been no change in the outcome of the case." Hundreds of prosecutions that used lab evidence remain under review.

Despite "significant instances of testimonial errors, substandard analytical work and deficient practices," the lab is still "capable of performing its mission," Reno said.

Bromwich also criticized lab management and the qualifications of agents in its explosives unit, where he recommended that only scientists be employed. He emphatically endorsed the FBI's current effort to get the lab accredited by outside experts for the first time.

In a typical criticism of work on high-profile cases, Bromwich blasted lab supervisor David Williams' 1993 testimony that a 1,200-pound urea nitrate bomb damaged New York's World Trade Center.

Ture: a never ending fight for freedom

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT \ COLLEGIAN

Kwame Ture, the former Stokely Carmichael, brought the revolution to the Campus Center Auditorium Monday night.

By Humphrey brown III
Collegian Staff

On Monday night in the Campus Center Auditorium, Pan- Africanist, freedom fighter and revolutionary, Kwame Ture (formerly Stokely Carmichael), spoke to a standing room only audience of over 300 — most of whom gathered to pay tribute to one of the most influential figures in the Civil Rights and black liberation movements.

Monday's tribute marked one of Ture's last public appearances in the United States before his return to Guinea, his adopted homeland.

Chairman of the W.E.B. Du Bois Department of African American Studies, Esther Terry, began the night's program by calling for a welcome of applause to be extended to Ture from the entire UMass community. In agreement, nearly everyone stood up to honor Ture for speaking at UMass.

There were a number of contributors that helped in bringing Ture to UMass. Chief organizer and one of the night's panelist, Ekwueme Michael Thelwell, expressed his appreciation for the dedication and sense of unity that was exuded when the idea of bringing Ture to UMass was proposed.

"This is a very special night for me," Thelwell said, "as we worked to put this thing together, it became clear why many of us had stayed at this institution for so long. There really is, despite efforts to divide us and confuse us, a real community of spirit and commitment here."

Some of those contributors included Dr. Ruth Simmons of Smith College, the Black Student Union, Distinguished Visitors Program, New World Theater, the entire W.E.B. Du Bois Afro-American Studies Program and a host of other RSO's and organizations throughout UMass and the surrounding Five-College area.

Thelwell, who was a student activist with Ture at Howard University, also summarized the reason and purpose for the night's gathering.

"Shakespeare had one of his characters, Mark Anthony say, 'We've come to bury Caesar, not to praise him'," Thelwell noted. "As you can see, Kwame Ture is very much still with us, so we have come not to do anything else, but to praise him."

The Panelists

The first panel speaker, other than Thelwell — who doubled as panelist and host of the event, was Regional Chairman of the Rainbow Coalition and faculty member of the Du Bois Department of Afro-American Studies, Bill Strickland.

Strickland spoke on the political contribution and example that Ture made in every city, state and country that he ever inhabited.

"There is a book, which I think is out of print, called Stokely Speaks," Strickland said, "If you read Stokely Speaks, that is if you go to the library and pick it up, it is as on time today as it was when many of the speeches in Havana, in Berkeley and elsewhere were written."

The focus of Strickland's speech centered around the consistency of Ture's principals and power that he had to move people to organize and seek out revolution.

"The revolution was in the air. People may scoff about it now, but the revolution was in the air and even Southern Texas presidents would go before the Congress of the United States and talk about the Black Revolution," Strickland explained. "It was the age of revolution and Stokely\Kwame was there saying intemperate things... intemperate things.

"What is it that radicalized Garvey? What is it that radicalized Du Bois, because it was the same thing that radicalized Stokely\Kwame and that radicalized many of us. We didn't come into this world as radicals," Strickland concluded. "America radicalized us and radicalizes us, still."

Stop the Clock rally set to educate people about violence against women

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow night, hundreds of students and area community members will take to the streets of Northampton as part of the "Stop the Clock" march and rally in an attempt to educate people about violence against women and to empower women themselves.

The event, which until this year was known as the "Take Back the Night," has undergone a change in name because of some of the racism associated with the title and its origins in the predominantly black neighborhood of Harlem.

"I feel the name change is very significant, and a way to get away from the stereotype of when and where rape occurs and who the typical rapist is," said Heather Foran, of the Everywomen's Center, and coordinator of "Stop the Clock."

According to Noelle Rey, a senior government and sociology major at Smith College, the renaming of the event has been difficult to get used to, but is worth the trouble.

"I think the name change is confusing, but I definitely support the idea," Rey said. "I love the new name, but I think it's hard for people to understand the transition."

The name "Stop the Clock" is a title designed to play on statistics that show a woman is raped every 1.3 minutes and beaten every nine seconds in the United States.

The planning committee has been working since February in preparation for the event, and is made up of students from throughout the Five College area. In addition, they have received an added boost of support from area high school students this year.

"I'm really excited that Amherst High School is participating," Foran said. "There are three Amherst women on the committee."

One of those students, Demma Rodriguez, will actually be giving a talk at the rally. In her speech she will focus on dating violence in the Latino community.

Events are planned for the entire evening, and are designed to provide something for everyone.

At approximately 6 p.m., participants will meet at the Unitarian Church in Northampton, where they will take part in the first of two rallies scheduled for the night. Following will be a candlelight

Haigis Hoopla returns to UMass

Record number of teams set to play in this year's tourney

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Sports Management Department will again be sponsoring the largest three-on- three basketball tournament in Western Massachusetts as Haigis Hoopla returns for its seventh year on campus.

Haigis Hoopla, which was born in the spring of 1991, brings together basketball players of all ages and abilities to put their best ball forward in an attempt to take home New Balance sneakers and bids for next years' tournament.

Event organizers are expecting a record number of participating teams this year, when the cap will be upped to 450 teams and over 1500 players. Since its inception, Haigis Hoopla has grown from 91 teams and 350 players to where it now stands.

According to Damien McDowell, the Director of Media Relations for the event, the Hoopla has grown in more ways than the number of participants will indicate. Players now come from all over the northeast to take part, as evidenced by the presence of teams from Maine, New York City and New Jersey.

McDowell explained that 80 percent of the participants used to be UMass students, and now 55 percent are not from the University.

Also, the number and prestige of event sponsors has seen a marked increase. This year, in addition to New Balance, such large corporations as Pepsi, Gatorade and Champion will have their presence felt. Local establishments such as Bueno y Sano and The Massachusetts Daily Collegian are also sponsoring the tournament.

"We're looking forward to making it the biggest and best yet," McDowell said.

The Haigis Hoopla staff consists of 17 undergraduate and nine graduate students who were selected through an application and interview process to take part in a class specially designed around the project. Their jobs cover the entire range of operations, from hospitality to volunteer management.

"It's fantastic," McDowell said. "It's practical experience in what we learn in the classroom."

Also included is a group of students from Amherst Regional High School, who are helping organizers attract high school and junior high aged players for their respective divisions.

The event is in no way limited to the tournament, as there will be many other attractions, which are expected to draw over 11,000 spectators for the weekend.

Included are stations for children, a mini dunk contest an appearance by the New England Blizzard and daily chances for students to hit a long shot for a Volkswagen Jetta JLX.

In the UMass legends' game, revered hoopsters from years gone by will have the opportunity to prove they haven't lost a step. Slated to play are Jim McCoy and Will Herndon, who led the Minuteman basketball program back into prominence, and a number of unconfirmed players.

"There's going to be a heap of stuff," McDowell said.

Haigis Hoopla is a non-profit event which will benefit a number of community funds and agencies, including two scholarships in memory of Erik K. Kjellson, a founder of the Sports Management program; the Greg Menton Memorial Water Polo Tournament; the Amateur Athletic Association (AAU) of Western Massachusetts; the Sigma Alpha Mu Pediatric AIDS Fund and the Big Brothers Big Sisters program.

Interested players can register a team in Haigis Hoopla until Friday at 5 p.m. at the Curry Hicks Cage. The entry fee is $18 per person.

Fire tears apart Saudi tent city; over 300 pilgrims feared dead

MINA, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Fires driven by high winds tore through a sprawling, overcrowded tent city yesterday, trapping and killing pilgrims gathered for an Islamic ritual. The official death toll was 181, but witnesses said at least 300 died.

Saudi Arabia said more than 800 pilgrims were injured in the fire, which witnesses blamed on exploding canisters of cooking gas. Most of the dead were Indians, Pakistanis and Bangladeshis, many of them elderly, witnesses told The Associated Press. Some were trampled to death as pilgrims fled the fire on the plain outside the holy city of Mecca.

"Men panicked and ran in every direction," said an Indian pilgrim who spoke to The Associated Press by telephone and identified himself only as Irfan. Helicopters dropped water from above while civil defense workers used firetrucks' hoses on the flames.

Hundreds of thousands of pilgrims were stranded after the fire destroyed an estimated 70,000 tents, which the pilgrims use for shelter in the final days of the Hajj. Civil defense forces from Mecca and nearby Jiddah and Taif rushed to the scene, handing out tents and supplies.

The fire erupted shortly before noon as Muslims gathered for the Hajj, or pilgrimage, were beginning to move to Mount Arafat, where the Prophet Mohammed delivered his final sermon in the seventh century.

There, two million Muslims will stand together in prayer today in the climax of the pilgrimage to the Muslim holy sites.

The Hajj has been the scene of several recent tragedies, including the deaths of 1,426 people in a 1990 stampede.

Strickland joked about Ture being banned in 25 countries being only 6 feet 2 inches tall, but it wasn't Ture's height that those countries were afraid of, and Strickland touched on what he considered the greatest thing about Ture.

"The greatest compliment that we can make him is not one that we can remake," Strickland said. "It was the reckless, almost unimaginable fear that he cast into the heart of the enemy.

"What were they afraid of? They were afraid of that audacious spirit that told much more truth than certain societies could stand," Strickland said, who concluded by wishing Ture, "many more days to be audacious and to be bold and to speak truth to the people."

Executive-producer of the prize-winning documentary Malcolm X: Make it Plain, Judy Richardson, with whom both Thelwell and Ture joked about having a crush on during their time with the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), was the next panelist to speak.

"With all the joking and all the good humor, what's wonderful... is to see [Ture] as radiant and wonderful as he's looking," began Richardson, as the audience clapped in agreement.

Richardson spoke of the more funny, humorous and warm side of Ture.

"What was amazing to me, and it's been amazing throughout my life, that Stokely showed us, that you could be infinitely political and at the same time be infinitely human, infinitely caring, infinitely funny and charming," Richardson said.

She talked about fond memories of Ture doing a dance called "the Uncle Willy" and having a good sense of fellowship and brother hood with everyone.

Richardson focused a lot on the leadership of Ture in the context of SNCC and the kind of people involved with SNCC at that time.

"SNCC changed how I thought about myself. It changed how I thought about the world. I ultimately changed my world view," said Richardson, who spent the duration of her speech speaking of those people in SNCC, particularly the women, and the bond they had with Ture.

She spoke of the women who helped form SNCC and went above and beyond the call of duty; the women who showed strength, wisdom and inspired Ture.

"These are the women who helped to form us," Richardson stated. "And it's one of the major reasons why Stokely\Kwame could be as supportive of us as women as he could, because he saw all of the women who were role models to him.

"I felt, because of Stokely\Kwame and Thelwell and all the other brothers who were around me, and the sisters, that I could do anything and that they would support me in whatever I did," Richardson said.

Richardson concluded, by speaking on the life lesson she learned, from Ture, on getting a sense of and grasping the human spirit to bring people through times of severe adversity and trials.

"You realize that survival is day to day. And you start to realize and grasp the depth of the human spirit. You start to understand your own ability to cope, no matter what," Richardson concluded. "In a lot of ways, that's what a lot of us are learning from Stokely\Kwame."

After a series of stories and anecdotes, told by Thelwell, Kwame Ture was introduced to a standing ovation.

Ture Speaks

"Once you sacrifice for the people, the people will sacrifice for you," said a very gracious Kwame Ture, who took the podium and immediately began thanking everyone that had anything to do with the organization of the tribute and those in attendance that night.

After the thank-you's, Ture began his speech by commenting about the cancer he was diagnosed with in 1996 and its origins.

"I tell you this, it sounds crazy, but I promise you, even before I die, depending on how long I live it might come to light, but even after I'm dead, I'm sure it'll come to light. The FBI gave me cancer," Ture said. "And if you study some German chemical warfare and what this country is doing... you might be surprised what they're doing to you."

Ture also expressed that the name change from Stokely Carmichael to Kwame Ture and the years passed since that change, has little if anything to do with the level of his radicalism.

"Shakespeare said that a rose by any name still smells the same, and Kwame Ture is just as revolutionary as Stokely Carmichael would be in 1997," Ture said.

Ture spoke a lot about the problems surrounding education in America and the relay of knowledge to its people, particularly college students.

"You must go to primary sources if you want to understand things," Ture explained. "Do not let anybody think for you. You're college students. You can read just like anybody else can read. You need the primary sources."

Ture also focused much of his discussion around the act of revolution.

"Revolution is made on the basis of truth, not lies," Ture said. "America is more ripe for revolution in 1997 than it was in 1968."

"I'm tired of hearing people telling] me, 'Oh I wish I was in the '60s. You were so organized'," Ture said. "We were not organized, we were mobilized. Mobilization is for temporary purposes over, usually, singular issues. Organization is permanent and deals with, all issues."

Ture cited the Rodney King riots as being a perfect example of mobilization that could have gone off better if there had been organization.

"Can you imagine what it going to happen when these Africans organize a rebellion in Los Angeles?" Ture asked.

Another distinction Ture made was the destinction between tactics and principles. To clarify this destinction, he used the issue of non-violent protest and the way it was used in the struggle by Martin Luther King, Jr and SNCC.

"For Dr. King, there was no middle ground between violence and non-violence, once he took it as a principle. At SNCC it wasn't a principle, it was a tactic," Ture explained. "Dr. King never compromised his principles, because he was honest, but for us it was a tactic. If it's working, fine. If it ain't working, I'm chucklin' a hand grenade, 'cause I'm gonna be free."

Ture closed, emphasizing the responsibility that is being placed on college students.

"You as students have a really important responsibility," Ture said. "You must be shining examples of what students really are... lovers of knowledge and alleviators of [the] sufferings of humanity. That's what students are.

"Knowledge is to help the people. If you help the people, they will always help you. If you sacrifice for the people, they will sacrifice for you. It you serve the people, they will let nobody harm you," Ture said.

"You must come to show that you have the ability to change the world and the only way you can change it is by serving humanity, by advancing progress, by fighting against all forms of injustice. And the first form you have to fight against, as a student, is limiting of knowledge to a small group in this society."

After a brief question answer session, Ture left with one last piece of advice for students and humanity in general.

"One thing you must know now," Ture said. "You must never get tired of doing good."

march through Northampton to Smith College's Dewey Hall, where the second rally will take place. After that, the Northampton Center for the Arts will be hosting a coffeehouse, to which participants are encouraged to bring musical talent and poetry for an open mic forum.

According to Foran, one of the major changes this year will be the inclusion of a number of speakers from different backgrounds and experiences.

Among the speakers are Yoko Kato, who has spoken at four previous rallies. She lost a daughter and grandson to domestic violence, and will share her experiences with those in attendance.

Janey Gordon, from the Clothesline Project, will be talking about Patty Hennessy of the Framingham Eight, a group of women who were all imprisoned for killing their batterer husbands, and once in prison banded together for support and who tried to have each other released. Hennessy is the last of the eight to remain in prison.

Valley Women's Martial Arts will also be giving a demonstration on self defense. Other speakers will include Carrie Richard, a University of Massachusetts student and poet; Brenda Lopez, from the Springfield Police Department Domestic Violence Bureau, who will be discussing lesbian battering; Pat White, who is the mother of a former Smith College student who was killed by her husband in Virginia; and women from Smith Safe, who will talk about incest and how it affects adult survivors.

"I think we have a good mix of personal stories and people from within the system," Foran said.

According to Foran, candles will be provided, and anyone who is interested in the issues is encouraged to attend, including men.

"We do like male participation," Foran said. "The Men's Resource Center will even have a table set up at the Coffeehouse."

"It's a very empowering march. My experience is that you get a high going to it," Rey said. "Even though you get second-hand experience of how horrible violence against women is, you also get empowerment stories."

began yesterday, security forces had thrown up a cordon around the entire plain, closing it to new arrivals to stop further overcrowding, witnesses said.

The fire was started by exploding gas cylinders, which pilgrims use for cooking in the tents, they said.

Fanned by winds of nearly 40 mph, it swept across the plain and quickly spread chaos through the camp, crammed with row after row of white tents.

"There was chaos everywhere... Panic spread through the camps as fast as the fire," said a newspaper reporter at the encampment who spoke on condition of anonymity..

The injured were carried away on stretchers and in people's arms, while others wearing white robes for the pilgrimage fled along smoke-filled alleys between the tents.

Witnesses said they had seen hundreds of bodies. Saudi newspaper reporters who visited the site said at least 300 had died, most of them trampled underfoot in the pandemonium.

Three hundred fire engines helped battle the blaze, and helicopters dropped water on the blaze, witnesses said.

After about three hours, it was brought under control.

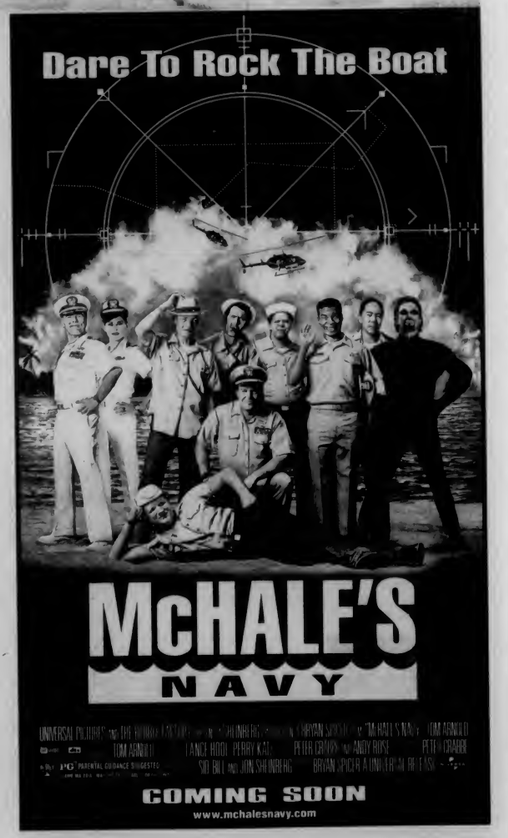
Hours after the fire was put out, a cloud of smoke still hung over the encampment, and was visible miles away.

By yesterday afternoon, as temperatures soared to 104 degrees, the desert plain was a scene of devastation.

Pilgrims wandered amid the smoldering remains of tents. Many appeared lost as they searched for relatives or friends, witnesses said.

Clean-up operations were launched quickly, with workers sweeping away the charred remains of hundreds of air conditioners, mattresses and burned pages of the Koran, Islam's holy book. Some tents are reinforced with wood and equipped with such amenities as air conditioners and stoves.

The Pakistan government set up a 24-hour emergency number to field calls from relatives. India planned to send a senior official from New Delhi to make sure Indians received assistance, United News of India said.



Every Muslim who can afford it must perform the pilgrimage once in a lifetime. Every year, the Hajj brings together one of the largest groups of people in a single place anywhere the world. Saudi Arabia has spent billions of dollars in upgrading Hajj facilities to ensure the comfort and safety of the pilgrims. It takes deep pride in its ability to maintain order during the huge gathering and has created a special cabinet portfolio for running Hajj affairs.

Ronald Reagan likes war. He wants to build new missiles to keep up with the Russians. He wants to strongly oppose America's enemies. He wants a strong America. He even liked the Vietnam War.

Vietnam was a "just cause," Reagan has said. The tens of thousands of Americans who died there did not die in vain, he said, and our only regret should be that we didn't win.

Apparently not everyone has learned the lessons of the '60s and '70s. Apparently the tragedy of a worthless war wasn't enough. Apparently the violence here at home that divided the nation did not make an impact.

The new conservative movement in this country points to the need for a stronger nation. It's not enough to have [the missile power] to wipe out 95 percent of "the enemy," we must be capable of wiping out 100 percent. Nobody should kick the U.S.A. around, because the U.S.A. won't stand for it.

And the "new right" has chosen Ronald Reagan to be their leader. And as their torchbearer, Reagan has done an admirable job preaching the philosophy of war, of unlearned mistakes, of self-destruction. If the facts do not support the conservative position, he invents new ones in an attempt to confuse everyone. His followers believe him, or are too dumb to recognize his follies. Like lemmings to the sea they follow, carrying their torches and wearing their white hoods.

> If America is as truly great as Reagan and the rest of the hate freaks of the new right say it is, then it deserves something better than a leader built on hate.
> 1981

The politics of hate has always been successful. Everyone loves to hate somebody and will listen to anyone who offers them someone or something to hate. The politics of hate has made leaders; leaders like Adolf Hitler, Richard Nixon, Joseph McCarthy or Mohammed Reza Pahlevi. Hate breeds more hate, which breeds despair, death and destruction.

Likening anyone to Adolph Hitler or the Shah is not fair. But while the motives and ends may be different between the two and Reagan, the method is the same. And like a snowball, or the ever-popular "domino theory," the real hate will grow, until it manifests itself into something real and tangible; something dangerous and deadly.

If America is as truly great as Reagan and the rest of the hate freaks of the new right say it is, then it deserves something better than a leader built on hate. It needs a leader who is innovative, willing to take new avenues, willing to let bygones by bygones and trust someone else to do the same. To distrust and hate another nation will naturally lead that other nation to do the same. To be trusting, friendly and cooperative will lead to likewise results from others.

Everyone wants peace, but belligerence is no way to achieve it.

"About a Girl"

It's April now, and someday soon, (or at least this is what Michelle Michaels and the "NewsCenter 7 Weather Station" tells me), it will get warm and actually stay warm until next semester. With summer looming, I'm starting to think about my last summer romance, which was really none too romantic.

Actually, let's call it a "situation," because to call it a "romance" would be a bit of a stretch. Actually, it'd be a hell of a stretch.

It was more like a downward spiral that — almost ruined me.

But, it's warm again, and with the — apparent transfer of like (.0000 booty-shaking bottles to the Whisp–Concrete campus, I've come to one completely irrational conclusion:

What the hell, baby. Abuse me again, "Red Scare."

The story goes like this. Last summer I met a girl while working as a counselor at a camp in the Berkshires. Well, I met her the summer before, but I blew her off. (I told her I'd call her, but I didn't. It's a long story involving a girl from Georgetown and the trees behind Woody's Roadhouse. Come over some time. We'll talk).

First night out in the summer of '96, I see her (the girl I didn't call). She looks better than I remembered. Immediately, all those times I sat in my dorm room thinking I blew it with "The Red Scare," (the names have been changed to protect the not-so innocent), and how I should play this one right if I ever got another whack at it.

So after she pretends she didn't remember me at first (yeah, right baby), we start to hang out a little bit, I buy her a beer (another reason Bud Light is the worst beer in the world) and it's going well. I figure the only way to lay some groundwork for a little "summer lovin'" is to offer to take her out to dinner, as both an apology and a beginning. She finally relents, and at the end of the night, when we say goodbye...

Yup. A little smoochie–smooch action. (Sometimes they can't stop the lure of the Pimp Daddy, baby.) This sealed the deal. It was like a letter of intent that said, "Yes, Luke I wanna chill with you this summer." I was a very happy man.

> Little did I know that I had just punched in for a summer of a self-induced spiral hell.
> Luke Meredith

Little did I know that I had just punched in for a summer of a self-induced spiral hell.

I take her out that next week, drop $52 on dinner (for which I got a piece of crappy fish and a potato), we have a glorious evening and I'm convinced that not only will I have a girl all summer, I've found Mrs. Right. (I get like that sometimes).

Next night, my friends go to our bar. I stayed in and did laundry. In that time, she apparently met an attractive young man from Kansas. I'm out of the picture already, and it's not even June. I should have known then to get out. But deep in my heart, I still feel the love for "Rocky Dennis."

This is where the spiral gets ugly.

I go to a certain bar all the time, cause she might be there. We go out maybe once a week, but those dates are shady ones in which I try to cram in a relationship between a 1 a.m. curfew and nights at our favorite townie bar, watching bands with names like the "Dalton Crew." I call her way more than she calls me, I analyze our conversations, the whole nine. I say things to my friends like, "You don't know what she's like when we're alone," and "We're so much alike, man. It's scary."

My friends have conversations (when I'm not there, of course) about how stupid I am. I meet a beautiful sorority girl from the University of Nebraska, who for some reason digs me. I never call her, even though I said I would. (Yes, it's a bit of a pattern with me and the phone).

You know why?

Because I'm all about "The Red Scare." I can't help it.

I am, in fact, a mess.

The summer ends. I do not marry the "The Alabaster Fiend," but in my heart I'm convinced we had something, and that if it wasn't for the distance, we'd be together.

Eventually, I get my head out of my ass, and get on with my life. I tell myself that I will not let myself be jerked around again.

"I will have hand next time, damnit," I say. "I will be strong."

It kind of went that way for the rest of this year, except for the random bouts of stupidity that have me famous in my house. I was happy. I was in control. I counsel friends of mine who are going through their own spirals. I say, "Dude, it's rough. I've been there."

But my "anti–spiral" stance seems to have taken on a nasty side effect. I don't have any girls to worry about. I am free to watch "SportsCenter" as much as I want. I can go anywhere uptown, because I have no shady agenda.

Basically, I'm bored as hell.

Thus, I think my attempts at sanity are coming to an end. (spring in Amherst will do that for ya'). At a certain point, I think I have to resume my stupid ways. Granted, most of the time you'll end up drunk at 3 a.m. on a Saturday night listening to "You Give Love a Bad Name" and thinking, "This used to be our song." But for some people, (once again, this is what people tell me), it works out.

Yeah, I guess self–destructive relationships with girls who might be a little "psycho" is an unhealthy practice.

But hey, at least it beats being bored.

Remembering Bloody Sunday

As we mourn, in the 25th anniversary, the senseless deaths of the 14 unarmed Irish citizens who were shot dead on Bloody Sunday 1972, we must not forget Britain's devious involvement on that day and its repercussions in today's struggle for lasting peace in Ireland. During a civil rights rally in the northern city of Derry, British soldiers carried out a seemingly premeditated ambush on the unexpecting and innocent Irish crowd from the city's elevated walls.

In a time closely following the atrocious acts of violence nervously enlightened, Britain's justification of the murders was that they fired in reaction to Irish gunfire and denied that they ever had any snipers hidden in Derry's city walls. Britain, to this day, even after all the contradictory evidence against her, claims that the only soldiers were a parachute regiment on the ground and they returned fire in self–defense from supposed members of the IRA.

All Britain has ever had to do to sway worldly and British opinions of past troubles, it to mention the IRA and the majority of the world will connotate a prevention of terrorism to their actions, regardless of where the fault lies. But do not believe all that you read or hear, the prevention of communism was the major excuse fed to the American public when our country's military was involved in foreign disputes in Central America and the Middle East and the American public swallowed it hook, line and sinker.

> Like the American government's cover-up and possible involvement in the assassination of John Fitzgerald Kennedy in our homeland, Bloody Sunday also has a far greater scale of government intervention and guilt than the public is lead to believe.
> Michael J. Saunton

It has been proved, by Irish and American investigative studies done on the victims after they died, that many of the fatal bullet wounds came from high angles that coordinate to the city's surrounding walls. How then can Britain's present defense still claim that it was solely an unexpected ground attack on their part?

If we look at a similar cover–up that occurred in the United States' history, we can see how powerful governments can manipulate and lead the general public consensus by utilizing their tight control over the omnipresent media sources. Like the American government's cover–up and possible involvement in the assassination of President John Fitzgerald Kennedy in our homeland, Bloody Sunday also has a far greater scale of government intervention and guilt than the public is lead to believe.

But one huge difference, in this aspect, between the two sorrowful events is while the theories surrounding the assassination of JFK are multiple and foggy, Britain's involvement on Bloody Sunday is universally cut and dry. With such a strong case against Britain, how can she still refuse to give an apology to the victim's suffering families and to the survivors of that day. It is exactly this imperial ignorance that is perpetuating the distressful situation today. Without responsible leaders acting in an honorable fashion, we can't even dream about achieving lasting peace.

On the 20th anniversary of Bloody Sunday, 1992, the prime minister of England, John Major, publically commented on the events of that day but never did he apologize for Britain's crimes. The jagged pill made of pride and truth prevented him from repenting for his countries actions, and it's sadly discouraging that leaders from established world powers can't be strong enough to admit their fault.

It also being the 150th year of the "Great Famine," it really too much to ask for Britain to be mature and civil enough to say that they are sorry? I know it won't be bringing back those who have died but it is a motion of decency that might be a bigger step than people think. If Britain legitimately wants to establish permanent peace in Ireland, she must be big enough to display outward sympathy and take responsibility for her past actions.

Although those who had their lives taken will not be forgotten, we can only hope and strive for a future without blood shed in Ireland. But this dream will remain in the unconscious of the night, if maturity and civility aren't displayed on both sides of the struggle. Respect is a two way street.

Goodell continued

To the Editor:

The 21 point agreement, reached by the ALANA led student coalition and the University administration at the close of the Goodell Hall occupation, appoints the Faculty Senate Council on the Status of Minorities to oversee the fulfillment of its terms. Though the Council was not directly involved in these negotiations, we would like to express to the University community our commitment to implementing the agreement.

Council members are strongly supportive of both the overall spirit and the specific goals of the student protesters. We are committed to making UMass more financially accessible to low–income students and to allocating the needed resources to crucial support services. We recognize that an academic support network (including tutors, advisors and peer groups) is critical for all students, and particularly so for the retention of ALANA students.

The Council has met once with representatives of the student negotiators. We plan to continue to meet in coming weeks with both student leaders and the administration. We encourage interested persons to contact one of the Council members with your ideas.

Same old anti–IRA arguments

To the Editor:

It was with great dismay that I read Simon Burke's letter concerning the IRA in Tuesday's edition of The Collegian (April 8). He had nothing new to offer but the same tired arguments. One must be careful how they throw around the term "terrorists." George Washington was himself branded a "terrorist" by the Brits back when they thought they had a right to this country too. Many lives were lost and at times it looked as if our Revolutionary War would be lost but we can thank "our terrorists" for sticking to their dreams of a free nation. We cannot simply rely on the spin the British government puts on the IRA.

Mr. Burke states that the IRA have tried to achieve their aims through "murder, bombings and vast damage." I can assure you, having been born in Ireland into a Republican family that no one wants bloodshed. The British government has had many opportunities to return what is Irish soil back to the people of Ireland. Every time a cease fire has been called the British government have applied a tactic of stalling in order to increase surveillance operations and cause division within the ranks of the IRA. How can you expect the IRA, who in good faith lay down their arms for the sake of peace, to stand idly by as the British continue rounding up "suspects" and harassing families.

Yes Simon, you may have chanted some peace songs in Galway last year but this won't cut it in the Catholic areas of Belfast. Imagine not being spoken to or getting a job because your last name sounds Catholic. Imagine that! Back in the 1860's this country went to war with itself over a similar form of bigotry. Would you call Abraham Lincoln a "terrorist" because he held firm to his ideals? Should he have backed down and let the South continue because blood was spilled? I would answer no to both because ignorance and bigotry can be powerful forces especially in the hands of people who need to have a race of people as a lower class.

Anti–anti Americanism

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to Senator Philip Milson's comments in the Collegian (April 9) about those senators who didn't vote for the placing of American flags in every residential area. Senator Milson accused many senators, including myself, of being anti–American, which is a very strong accusation considering I have never been personally introduced to him. I feel that he should first remember my argument that I made at the SGA meeting of why I didn't vote for this motion. It's not that I am Anti–American, it is that I feel the University's money could be spent on other things. The University doesn't need to spend its depleting resourced on items that will benefit the student body as much as items such as call boxes would. I think that we should first concentrate on making the campus a safer place so that one day we will be able to walk around campus without fear, and notice that there aren't any flags in the residential areas. Thus I feel that the senator is unfounded in his statements and should be careful of accusing people of Anti–Americanism. What is this the 1950s? I didn't know McCarthyism was back. And I am actually very proud to be an American, though Senator Milson feels otherwise, and he should know that true Americanism comes from the heart and not from flagpoles.

Local poetry lives on National Poetry Month continues and it's another big week in our little Valley. Tonight April Bernard and University of Massachusetts' own James Tate and Agha Shahid Ali pay tribute to Emily Dickinson's inspiration in their work at Amherst College's Mead Art Museum at 8:00 p.m. The trio will be reading selections both new and old from their Dickinson–inspired poetry, and there will be a reception and signing following the reading. The readings continue the Mead's tribute to Dickinson, which shows the way various artists and poets alike have been inspired by the Amherst legend's work.

Justin Beland on poetry

As a side note, those of you who missed Gillian Conoley's wonderful reading at Memorial Hall last Thursday also missed James Tate's warm introduction of the poet.

Also this afternoon, legendary Slovenian poet Tomaz Salamun will hold a question–and–answer session in Herter Hall, room 227 at 4:00 p.m. Salamun will also give a reading this evening at 7:30 p.m. at the Globe Bookshop in Northampton. His latest book, Four Questions of Melancholy (White Pine Press) contains translations by Christopher Merrill, Charles Simic and others.

Unfortunately both this reading and the Dickinson tribute take place on the same evening.

Agha Shahid Ali is especially busy this week. In addition to the Dickinson tribute, the UMass professor will read selections form his new book Country Without A Post Office (Norton) on April 18 at 4:00 p.m. at Wooton's Books in downtown Amherst. UMass underreads with an interest in poetry should be pleased to know that Professor Agha will be teaching the English Department's "Contemporary Poetry" class next semester. It's a rare occasion when he teaches an undergraduate class.

At 7:30 p.m. on April 18, William Corbett will read from his Furthering My Education: A Memoir, also at Wooton's Books. This is quite an afternoon of verse — thanks to Wooton's for continuing its program of fine readers, including the MFA's "Live Lit" program which takes place every other Friday night.

In contest news, the 74th annual Kathryn Irene Glascock Intercollegiate Poetry Contest takes place at Mount Holyoke College on Friday and Saturday, April 18 & 19. Friday's events include "Life and Letters – Conversation With the Judges," with X.J. Kennedy, Tony Sanders and Grace Schulman in the Stimson Room Library at 3:00 p.m., and the contestant's reading in the Gamble Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. On Saturday is the judge's readings, in the New York Room of Mary Woolley Hall at 10:30 a.m. All these events are free and open to the public.

And it would be just plain wrong if I didn't mention Bob Dylan's NoHo appearance last night. While his lyrics may be poetic, those with more literary interests should check out his only book entitled Tarantula (Vintage). Some say it's poetry, some say it's a novel. If you're a Dylan fan, you'll notice the book reads like the bizarre liner notes of his early albums.

Krauss & co. release another acoustic classic

ALISON KRAUSS & UNION STATION
So Long, So Wrong
Rounder Records

What we have here is simple — perfection. It can't be said any easier. It's there in every song, every moment of Alison Krauss and Union Station's new collection of songs about love, loss of innocence, a longing for home and religious devotion. Truly these are typical bluegrass and country roots music themes, but So Long, So Wrong is nonetheless sincere.

Krauss is not a shy woman, as anyone who has ever read an interview with her would know. Thankfully so — she's not afraid to assert herself with her wonderful voice, ranging between soprano and tenor, all over this and her past albums, such as 1995's Now That I've Found You: A Collection, which went platinum and is the highest–selling bluegrass album ever.

Only 25 years old, Krauss has many honors to her credit. A sample list: youngest member of the Grand Ole Opry, two Grammys for Best Bluegrass Recording for two albums, The Country Music Association's Female Vocalist Of The Year Award and Rolling Stone's Country Artist Of The Year title for 1995. The rest of Union Station, each a few years older than Krauss, are no normal backup band. Banjoist Ron Block wrote two completely different songs on So Long. "There Is A Reason" and the more upbeat "The Pain Of A Troubled Life," where he takes lead vocals on the latter track.

Barry Bales, bassist and harmony vocalist, has played on albums by Vince Gill, Tony Trischka and Michelle Shocked. Mandolinist Adam Steffey, hailed as "one of bluegrass' most accomplished players," has had studio time beside AKUS with Randy Travis and even jazz guitarist Bill Frisell. Dan Tyminski's booming tenor, wavering with the lonesome howl that Bill Monroe was so well–known for, takes lead on three songs on So Long. His guitar skills are an added treasure.

Put them all together and what do you get? Placid chemistry, boiling stews of upbeat acoustic music, vibrant playing and emotionally effective lyrics and voicings of these words. Block's banjo arpeggios provide the framework for the steady opening title track with Krauss' high soprano choosing a stream of regret.

The album is well sequenced, with some heart–breaking songs interwoven with the more upbeat tunes mentioned above. "I Can Let Go Now" is the first song that hits like a hard weight. Mostly just Krauss' singing with Tyminski's acoustic and Block's National resonator guitars, it's a tune that's sung so well and just drips out of the speakers into your lost hopes, its sound lingers in the mind throughout the duration of the album. Not to say that "It Doesn't Matter," a fine ballad that could hold up in any genre, or "Looking In The Eyes Of Love" and the ironically titled "Happiness" aren't just as effective.

Most Krauss fans will probably find a new fave with "Find My Way Back To My Heart." Songwriter Mark Simos crafted a true shining piece of art here. With its mid–tempo rhythm actually thrown offbeat a bit by the band, it sticks out, especially with Krauss' "I did wrong" lyrics.

By year's end, Miss Krauss and her bandmates should have a few more statuettes, honors and compliments from the highest echelons of the music art due to the gentle, rolling composition of So Long, So Wrong. A

The Fantasticks is fantastic!

THE FANTASTICKS
The Curtain Theater
April 9–19

First week, sold out. Second week, sold out. This show definitely deserves another week running. Especially with its anxiously waiting, box office late comers hoping that maybe one ticket wasn't counted for, or a no– show came up. Folks, you don't know what you are missing if you haven't seen the Fantasticks.

"I love it... I'd see it again!" were the enthusiastic words of one student as he impatiently awaited the second half of the show. Well, I'm right there with you, my boy.

After a "wonderful" Saturday night shower by mother nature, the audience was humbly greeted by the marvelous music of Greg Silverman, whose classy–jazzy night clubbish improvs gave a nice touch, easing the crowd and removing the dreaded pre–show chitter–chatter.

With the wink of an eye, the music made a U-turn as the show began. The great warmth about the show was its personal relationship with the audience, as its untraditional set changes were done right before your eyes and the whole story–line was directed to your attention as Dave Joseph (Narrator/El Gallo) began the show with the catchy lyrics of "Follow, follow, follow..."

The costumes were spectacular. Are Mike Chiavaroli (Hucklebee) and Brad Beacom (Bellamy) actually college students? Their scruffy looking, middle–aged fatherly types were as real as could be. As for our two love birds, Keith Ruthkiewicz (Matt) and Jenn Kesting (Luisa), they were as cute as could be, strolling along in a strapping young lad college sweater and virgin–white dress. Along with the dancers' sparkling green sequin–filled tops, "The Players'" (Daniel Popowich/Ed Patterson) comical Shakespearean attire, and El Gallo's Spanish–romantic, cape wearing villain took over the stage.

The icing on the cake wasn't the costumes though, oh no. Not with performances as immaculate as these. Chiavaroli and Beacom were both sensationally humorous. They brought tears to my eyes with lines as "Son, you're an ass." But it didn't stop there, as the continuous battle between humor and drama was swept away by the rest of the cast. "The Players" were a constant tear jerker winning the older audience member's hearts with only a breath and the youthful voices of Keating and Rutkiewicz brought a delightful touch of life into the show.

The true showstopper was Dave Joseph. I really believe this man thought that he was "El Gallo." Joseph danced, leaped, juggled, back flipped, swung from a rope, fought, acted and last but definitely not least, sang with such passion and confidence as he sold the show. A true master of the stage.

Along with the playful musical accompaniment, the enchanting and mysterious shadow–puppetry of the dancers, and the surprising special effects, The Fantasticks were incredible. It's a shame the theater was so small.

"Next year. Next year... Bigger auditorium!" director Max Mount said.

Tom Cruise says no to cross–dressing

NEW YORK (AP) — Toni Cruise won't say exactly what he's doing in Stanley Kubrick's new psychological thriller Eyes Wide Shut, but he's not wearing a dress.

"I've read a lot of stuff. No one's gotten it right. They're reaching," Cruise told the New York Daily News when asked if Kubrick had him dress in women's clothing for the film.

The actor and his real-life wife, Nicole Kidman, play out a variety of sexual fantasies in the film, currently in production in England.

He admitted that "it can be grueling" working with Kubrick, the director of Dr. Strangelove and A Clockwork Orange.

"He rehearses, we work on the scene, then he rewrites again," said Cruise, nominated for an Oscar this year for Jerry Maguire. But, he said, "as an actor, you have to support the director. It's his vision."

ARLINGTON, Va. — Dan Aykroyd is finally ready for prime time.

The original member of the Not Ready for Prime Time Players on "Saturday Night Live" is starring in "Soul Man," a new sitcom that premiered last night on ABC.

Aykroyd plays a motorcycle-riding minister who lives down the street from Tim Allen of "Home Improvement."

"People usually think of me in wilder or unconventional roles," Aykroyd said in yesterday's USA Today. "It made me laugh and smile right away. I figured if I could work for me."

The show is only slated to run three weeks in May, but may return in the fall. Aykroyd will be busy this summer filming The Blues Brothers 2000, the sequel to the 1980s film. Aykroyd co-wrote the script with director John Landis, and James Belushi will replace his late brother, John.

NEW YORK — Supermodel Tyra Banks is through dating celebrities — and model groupies.

"When you date a modelizer, you get insecure because you don't want them to see you not looking like a model," Banks said in the May issue of Details magazine.

Banks, who has been paired with Seal and John Singleton, said she would much rather date a normal guy who's not famous. But what's the best way to treat a model-girlfriend?

"Don't tell her that she's beautiful when you see her at work, because then she thinks you're talking to the model," Banks said.

"Tell her when she comes out of the shower."

top three players he had ever coached," Gorrie said. "That meant something to me, and it gave me some confidence coming here. When I'm having a hard time, or have made an error, I can always look at that, and it can help me out.

"He wasn't very liked by a lot of his players," Gorrie reflected. "He would get in your face and tell you what you did wrong, but at the same time, he was fair. He had coached for a long time, and had a great knowledge of the game."

Gorrie is never one to toot his own horn and credits his team's defense as contributing to his success. For most of the season, the infield has been made up of Dave Giglio at first base, Muchie Dagliere at second, Adam Correa at third and Gorrie closing that gap at shortstop.

"Since Mazzaferro's been hurt, Adam's done a good job," Gorrie commented. "He's a talented player. He's got a tremendously strong arm. Muchie's solid. He's there day in and day out. He'll make the plays.

"Dave Giglio's been a surprise," he continued. "He's finally been given the chance to play this year, and he's done a good job. He's made a lot of good picks. I feel a lot more comfortable at short. I made a lot of errors last year, so I want to make less errors."

While Gorrie commented on his counterparts, Stone was quick to praise his speedy shortstop.

"His [Gorrie] asset is his jump, his range, his quickness to the ball," Stone said. "He's one of the guys we're counting on."

Baseball was not the only sport Gorrie grew up playing. In addition to starting at shortstop for four years on the Algoquin High baseball team, he started on the Tomahawks' basketball team as well.

"I love basketball," Gorrie said. "Baseball has grown into my favorite game, because I respect the game and have a better understanding of it. Especially after going to Regionals and seeing that kind of quality baseball. But, in the beginning, basketball was my favorite, my love."

Brad was part of last years' team that came two games from making it to the College World Series. This year, for UMass to make it again, it will take as much, if not more.

"I think we're a very talented team this year," Gorrie said. "I compare this team a lot to my freshman year. The difference is, my freshman year, we didn't go anywhere. We didn't make the regionals, we didn't win the A–10 tournament, because we really didn't gel together.

"This year, we're very talented, but we have to gel and come together, and I think we're starting to do that. If we do, then maybe we can go back. We've seen what it takes, we understand. Time will tell. It's too early in the season."

As the leadoff man, it is important for Brad to be successful at the plate. His late start this year can be directly attributed to his taking the summer off.

"I was drafted by the Yankees real late [last year] (91st round) and I expected to go a little higher," he said. It was the late selection in the draft which made Gorrie dig down deep to find himself. This last week has been a major confidence booster for him as he has improved his average to .397.

"I can almost feel my swing is coming back to me, I'll start to see better pitches, and just concentrate on getting on base and doing my role."

The Massachusetts baseball team (15–6, 6–3 Atlantic 10) is on a five game winning streak and is looking to keep the streak alive against northeast rival Maine tomorrow in a mid–week doubleheader, starting at 1:30 p.m. at Earl E. Lorden Field.

"It's a big challenge for us," Stone said. "They're always one of top teams in New England. It's important we play well, so that we can be one of the top teams In New England. It will be a real good test for us."

Look for Gorrie to surpass both Jette and Knight's records tomorrow against the Black Bears.

MSG. Too bad that all they'll be selling are second round Knicks tickets.

Western Conference

Colorado–Chicago

JK — The Dream Police, I'm going out of my head! Only a comeback attempt of Cheap Trick–ian proportions could win this series for Chicago, and they'll probably be singing "Surrender" by the time its over. The Lanche are the dream team of the NHL, and the Hawks will be going out of their head after this one. Me and Wookies like Tony Amonte got to stick together, but Chicago does not have a chance in Tattooine.

LT — Is Colorado going to win this series? His head still ringing from a certain fish hook, the great Rudinho, a closet puckhead, would probably answer in this manner: "The sun... a bear... and Howdy Doody. Does the sun rise in the east, does a bear sh in the woods and does Howdy Doody have wooden balls? The answer to all of these is yes."

Dallas–Edmonton

JK — Revive with Vivarin... help me, please. Calgon take me away! Dallas in four games.

LT — You know what would be wicked awesome, just totally bitchin' cool, like radical? If Def Leppard is invited to sing the national anthem before the first game of this series, causing the roof to collapse so we won't have to watch this. This could be the only first–round series I plan on paying absolutely no attention to what–so–ever. Dallas is a classicly–styled playoff team, right out of early '80s Islanders mold, that will have the country music fans in Big D chasin' that neon rainbow.

Detroit–St. Louis

JK — A classic Norris Division matchup that isn't a Norris Division matchup anymore. The Blues will be seeing Red, as in Wings, and not of the Buffalo kind, either. The Wings got some 'tude right now, as the Lanche found out in a Pier Six brawl a few weeks back. St. Louis will need the spiritual return of Bob and Barclay Plager to beat Detroit.

LT — This rough–and–tumble series probably won't please KC and the Sunshine Band fans. These rivals will not do a little dance, there certainly will be no love, and the only way they're getting down is if they're upended by a real good hip check. Weak defense will hurt Detroit in the long run, but the Wings will do a little dance as they shuffle into the second round. Besides, you can't dance to the Blues, but Motown...

Anaheim–Phoenix

JK — Run for the border (i.e. Phoenix wins). A complete team will beat a one–line team, and All–World players like Teemu Selanne and Paul Kariya will not bring the Ducks a second round series. Disney magic on Arrowhead Pond will be needed to pull this one out. I just have to say it... Nikolai Khabibulin. Say it three times fast, I dare you!

LT — So, I was standing on a corner in Winslow, Arizona, when such a fine sight to see, a girl, my Lord, in a flat bed Ford, slowed down to take a look at me. She was planning of taking a left onto I–15 to ride into the Valley of the Sun to see the Coyotes and Ducks battle for southwestern supremacy. Foolishly thinking the battle for southwest supremacy would mean a tower war between Kennedy and Coolidge, I accepted her invitation and unknowingly hopped aboard the Phoenix bandwagon.

Women's tennis sweeps Williams 7–0 at home

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

For the UMass women's tennis team, the preparation is now complete. After yesterday's sweep of Williams (7–0) at the upper Boyden tennis courts, the Minutewomen are now looking towards a very tough match at Boston University today and the Atlantic 10 tournament this weekend.

"Our team is really maturing at the right time, and the schedule couldn't be more perfect," coach Judy Dixon said. "At this moment, we couldn't be more ready. I think we're really prepared mentally, and the most focused that I've seen all year."

Avenging a 4–3 loss to Williams last season, the Minutewomen took no prisoners once again yesterday. They defeated the Ephs handily as everyone won their respective matches in straight sets to improve to 12–3 on the year, 7–1 in the Spring, and to cap off the last home match of the year on senior day.

Speaking of which the lone UMass senior, Liz Durant, went out in style at No. 4 singles with a 6–4, 6–0 win over Tyler Lewis of Williams. She played strong and focused tennis just like she had since day one, when she set foot on the courts. Throughout her four year career, Durant won 62 of the 92 singles matches she played in.

"She really knew what her job was and she went out and did it the way a senior should, and I was really pleased," Dixon said.

The doubles started things off, and the Minutewomen took care of all three matches, knowing how important it was to get the advantage early on. The No. 3 doubles team of junior Lana Gorodetskaya and Jackie Braunstein took the win 8–2 setting the tone, playing very solid and putting the competition away early.

Freshman Ola Gerasimova and junior Caroline Steele at No. 1 were down early, but came back with emotion and took over as the overhand shots they delivered were too powerful for Williams and they finished things off 8–6.

The No. 2 team of Durant and Marie–Christine Caron came away victorious as well, with a 8–5 win as the Minutewomen took the point to go up 1–0.

For the singles matches, the Minutewomen did not hold back. Gerasimova at No. 1 singles defeated Lindsay Morehouse 6–1, 6–3. Caron at No. 2 was successful as well, and quick to finish her tennis lesson that she delivered to Daphine King of Williams, winning 6–1, 6–0.

"She played probably the best singles match and was the most focused and most intense that I've ever seen her in a tennis match," Dixon said.

Jackie Braunstein at No. 3 is continuing to win quietly but consistently over the opposition. She pounded out the victory 6–3, 6–1 over Sarah Marks.

"She continues her possession of No. 3 were she is very calm and very focused and does the job day in and day out, and puts the "W" on the board every time.

At No. 5 singles, Steele took the win 7–5, 6–3, and at No. 6 singles it was Gorodetskaya a winner 6–4, 6–0.

"It was important to win every single match, and every match counts," Gorodetskaya said. "We've past the first step, and we need to play with the same intensity during the next step on the way to the A–10's.

Today UMass is off to Boston University for a tough match versus the nationally ranked Terriers.

"This is where we need to be," Dixon said. "We've lost to Yale and Dartmouth, nationally ranked programs, and we know have another one, and we're getting closer to that moment and our breakthrough match, and we'll see what we can do."

Men's tennis 13–1 going in to A–10's

By Sanford Appell
Collegian Correspondent

The beat goes on for the winningest Massachusetts men's tennis team in school history. With two regular season contests and two tournaments yet to come, the squad has already compiled 13–1 record for the entire year. The Minutemen re 5–1 in the spring season, with its lone loss oming from an experienced Colgate team.

Tomorrow, the battle with divisional opponent Fordham waits in the wings. This match will be he first meeting between the Minutemen and the Rams, adding a little intrigue to the matchup.

The one knock on the superb performance this ear, has been that the team has come against ub–par competition. UMass has played mostly the ower end of its Atlantic 10 counterparts. However, Fordham falls somewhere in the middle f the pack.

Coach Judy Dixon feels this a positive factor oing into tomorrow.

"This match could not have come at a better ime. We must be ready for tough competition with the A–10 tournament coming up," Dixon aid. "We have not really tested ourselves against he top level yet."

While this may be true, the team has played with such focus one can almost see the fire in their n their eyes. The success of the team can be parially attributed to excellent preparation. Dixon has prided the team in hard workouts.

"The practices have been terrific all year. Every player has given it their all, and has played with reat determination," Dixon noted.

This high level of energy and enthusiasm must ontinue now, with a rough match and travelling chedule lying ahead in the next few days. After driving down to the Bronx, N.Y. for the Fordham match, the team will head up to UMass. After eturning for the evening, they will leave for a Thursday morning flight for Virginia. They will be n the court by Thursday afternoon at Virginia Tech to begin preparing for Friday's Atlantic 10 ournament.

The team has overcome adversity all year, so this should be just another minor obstacle.

Perhaps the biggest story behind this team is its contributions from the younger players. Tomorrow's lineup against Fordham provides further proof of this theme.

Sophomore Todd Cheney will play first singles. Freshman Patrick Slyman will play second, freshman Rob Manchester slides in at third, junior Alex Aller fourth and freshman Beau Navarro rounds out the top five. It is rare that even one or two freshmen crack the first five at this critical juncture.

However, Dixon has displayed confidence in these players all season.

"I have constantly put the younger players in pressure situations, and they have constantly rewarded my confidence in them," Dixon said. "They have been fearless, assuming leadership roles so early on in their careers here."

One of these talented freshmen, Beau Navarro has been almost taken aback by the unbridled success of the team.

"At the beginning of the season, we set out to win nine or 10 matches. Once we started at 5–0, we knew it was time to set higher goals," Navarro said. "As the season moved on, the goals kept getting bigger. Right now we are peaking at the right time."

Looking ahead, the Atlantic 10 tournament and the New England Championships are weighing heavily on the minds of the team members and Dixon. These competitions will probably pose the greatest challenges for the team this year.

However, Dixon is already getting things ready for next year as well.

"Now that we have proven we can win matches, we must up the level of competition. Soon, we will incorporate Ivy League and nationally ranked teams into our schedule," Dixon said. "Perhaps then, we will see where this is program is headed, but right now the players can truly enjoy their success.

"It is a truly wonderful time for UMass tennis," Dixon said.

two teams have shared this season was in No. 10 Yale, with losses for both sides coming in each respective contest.

Yet, history could literally be made in another sense today for the Minutewomen, with senior attacker Stephanie Walsh treading on the fine line of 100 career goals (career: 99 goals, '97: 13). Walsh would only be the fifth athlete to surpass that scoring mark in UMass history, and that feat would be even more impressive against a strong keeper in Hofstra's senior Stephanie Clarke (.654 save percentage, 6.04 GAA).

Clarke only allowed nine goals against both teams' last opponent, Rutgers, but that came in a losing 9–4 effort on Monday afternoon. Seniors Rebecca Wales (21 goals, 12 assists) and Tierney Clark (18g, 9a) scored two goals each in the loss, and both are at the top of the Flying Dutchwomen's scoring charts this season.

"Their goalie is real good," McClellan said. "But their field and team players might not be as good as Rutgers.

"If we play like we did in the second half against Rutgers, we should be in great shape. Our upperclassmen really need to step up and lead this team the rest of the way."

The Minutewomen game against New Hampshire has been rescheduled to Saturday morning at 10 a.m. at Totman.

stand that they have to step up and try to — you're not going to eliminate mistakes — but try to limit the number of them."

The Minutemen will be very conscious of limiting mistakes, because Harvard has the firepower to capitalize. Junior Mike Ferrucci leads the team with 22 goals, twice the number of his nearest teammate, and 17 assists. Junior Jim Bevilacqua is the team's second leading scorer with 11 goals and 13 feeds.

Chris Grande currently leads the goal list for UMass with 19 tallies, while Brendan Glass reigns on the point list with 22 (16 goals, 6 assists).

HOROSCOPES

For The Week Of March 23–29

ARIES
March 21–April 20
Enjoy a romantic getaway this week by a refreshing snow-bunny! Pay close attention to nonverbal cues, or you could miss an important answer. Trust your intuition. Someone who seems to be friendly could be stumbling a hidden agenda. Be on guard.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
You may not be getting all the facts you need to make an important decision. Expect the unexpected, and keep your feelings to yourself. Otherwise, you may lose the advantage you've worked so your weekend plans, whether it's a boat ride or a walk in a warm tub.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
Someone who's unhealthy energizing may seem unusually nit-picky this week. Delve deeper, and you could discover some underlying troubles. A small, loving gesture could make a big difference. Don't let finances get in the way of achieving a long-term goal.

CANCER
June 22–July 22
An idea that seemed promising could be in need of a little revamping. Consult an expert, and then take it from there. Your creativity could be put to the test, but the results will be worth the effort. Cut excess fat from your budget and you'll realize financial gains in the near future.

LEO
July 23–August 23
Juggling nerves and high stress levels is more than you need a little pearl and quiet toward the weekend. Turn off the phone and ignore the doorbell. Use your common sense, rather than your emotions, to make a sound decision in the middle of the week.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22
Look to new ideas and innovations to clear up a problem that seemed impossible. Catch up on paperwork and other chores before the weekend. Be especially sensitive to another person's moods. You could ease out on a subtle clue to what the real problem is.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23
Be sure to get a second opinion before signing an agreement. Also, be sure to read the fine print. An eccentric friend has a surprising idea. Showcase your creativity in a group environment. Travel plans are favored, whether it's for a weekend getaway or next year's vacation.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22
Small gestures clear the way for big progress later this week. Call on your connections to help you get what you want. Make an investment in your future well-being. This weekend, catch up on small household chores and paperwork.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21
You may be feeling constrained this week. Instead of outright rebellion, try to find ways around the rules. You may be able to negotiate some changes. Use Watch finances closely—someone could be paying extra attention to your priorities this week.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20
Abandoning an old decision could be a positive move this week. Don't take big risks without getting all of the information first. Tighten your seat belt and hang on—big changes are in the air. A stellar opportunity is just around the corner.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18
You can avoid a lot of misunderstanding this week just by listening closely. If you're feeling really energetic, try channeling your energies into some kind of learning experience. This weekend, spend time with a new friend. Opt for a spontaneous adventure.

PISCES
February 19–March 20
The quest for perfection could cause some unpleasant fallout in the near future. When looking for answers, probe carefully to be certain you're getting the entire truth. Don't skimp on materials for a project you're embarking on. Remember, garbage in, garbage out.

Harvard no pushover for lacrosse

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Do not let the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's 18–9 all-time record against Harvard fool you. Do not be swayed by the Crimson's 19–6 loss to Princeton last weekend. Do not focus on UMass' upcoming matchup with Notre Dame.

Instead, realize what Minuteman coach Greg Cannella knows: today's game at Ohiri Field (3 p.m.) counts just as much as the rest do.

The No. 18 Crimson (5–3, 3–1 Ivy League) have not been UMass' fiercest lacrosse rival, but a look at this year's team and the record it has posted, as well as a look at last year's box score will tell you that Harvard will no doubt be up for this game.

Of the team's three losses, two have come at the hands of top three teams. A 16–5 loss to Duke and a 19–6 defeat at Princeton speak more about the strength of the opponents than the weaknesses of the Crimson.

"This past weekend they lost to Princeton 19–6," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "But that is only an indication of how good Princeton is."

The No. 11 Minutemen stand with a similar record (5–4), with all four losses coming against squads in the top 10. UMass is coming off its most recent defeat, an 11–8 contest against Loyola that introduced the Minutemen to the zone defense.

Since Saturday, Cannella has been prepping his troops in the event that they face a zone at Harvard.

"We expect [the zone] a little bit," he said. "They've only had two days to prepare too. We worked on it yesterday and today, and hopefully we'll be ready if they do throw a zone at us."

Cannella has also been talking to his players about late-game intensity. Last year the Crimson came back in the second half of the tilt in Amherst to eventually claim the win, 12–10, and it has been in the second half this year where the Minutemen have found most of their troubles.

"We changed practice to try to keep practice intense through the end," Cannella said. "We talked about it yesterday at the scout meeting. The guys have got to understand that the team has seen the top of the mountain, but can't find the right path to get there.

Women's lax hosts Dutchwomen

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

Memories... like the corners of my mind.

No, this is not Barbara Streisand's "The Way We Were", or Tom Hanks' Big, but it is a small step back into the recent history of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (2–5).

Like scattered pictures, the Flying Dutchwomen of Hofstra (6–5) will make their return to Totman Field this afternoon at 4 p.m. Almost two years ago to the day, a scenario evolved between UMass and Hofstra that encapsulates the reinstated program's history in a nutshell.

With seven seconds left in the game, the Flying Dutchwomen culminated a late game surge to score the winning goal in a 11–10 Minutewomen defeat on April 18, 1995. It can be said that UMass literally snatched defeat out of the jaws of victory, but the fact of the matter is the team has tread upon the fine line of winning, and has not crossed that line yet.

It's a tough skill to learn, and some of the best athletes in sports have never learned it — look at the recent addition of the Golden State Warriors, or any Chicago Cubs squad in the past 50 years.

The learning process is continuing for UMass, but at that time, the loss was a tough one for a young program. Today, they can make it up ten–fold, and for coach Francesca McClellan, that is what she wants her team to do.

"We really have high hopes for this game," McClellan said. "Rutgers was beatable last weekend [a 11–6 loss], at least in the second half, and we need to put two halves together. Hofstra can be a real good start for us."

One of the seniors that has felt the sting of defeat too much for her liking is tri–captain defender Erica Bryan. She concedes the fact that the team has seen the top of the mountain, but can't find the right path to get there.

"The coach has talked to us, and said that it's up to [the seniors] now," Bryan said. "It's our decision to do what we want with the season. Its weird, we sometimes feel that we can't win, but we have the ability to win — there is no doubt about that.

"The rest of our schedule has games that are win–able for us, and the coach has said that if we play like we practice, we'll be in great shape. We had two bad practices before the Rutgers game, so we want to work this thing out."

Hofstra's winning record might be a little deceptive, with none of their wins coming against ranked opponents. One of the common opponents the Playoffs kick off in NHL; Can our gurus pick 'em?

Mark this date on the calendar... we, The Collegian puckheads, are going to shut our collective yaps, and let the writing do the talking. And like The Holy Grail, in the frozen lands of the NHL, they had to eat the Collegian's minstrels, and there was much–rejoicing. Yeah! Let the playoff picks begin!

JORMA KANSANEN & LEIGH TORBIN ON THE NHL

Eastern Conference

New Jersey–Montreal

Jorma Kansanen, the Ex–Bruin Formerly Known As Jarmo Kekalainen — Got to go away from homeland homer–ism here, and pick the Devils in a sweep. It feels like an abdominal pull to say this, but the return of Finnish international Saku Koivu to the Hab lineup only means they'll compete. Joy–sey is a legit Cup contender, and visions of 1995 will be dancing around puck–heads in the Arena Formerly Known As Brendan Byrne.

Leigh Torbin, the Hockey Player Never Formerly Known As Anything — Just as the Spice Girls are silicone–enhanced clones of Abba, most NHL teams are just clones of the Devils, and just as "Dancing Queen" is a better tune than "Wanna–be," the original still rules, especially over Montreal. The Habs' new building, the Molson Centre, is nicknamed "the Keg" by the local media, and the Canadians' heads might feel like they've just done some keg–stands after Scott Stevens, Dougie Gilmour and company complete their first round task.

Buffalo–Ottawa

JK — Uh, Ottawa in the playoffs? Why don't you take out my freakin' gall bladder with a dull skate blade? Yes, the Senators have been rejoicing, but Sabre goalie Dominik Hasek will do the eating. The rubber man devours the vulcanized kind (i.e. a puck), and a solid squad, even without the services of Matthew Barnaby, will shut down any kind of pah–tay Ottawa wants to continue.

LT — I have met three bona–fide Sabre fans in my three years here. One is on the softball team, and another is a girl a buddy of mine hooked up with for a while last year. The third is my freshman year roommate's former girlfriend's roommate, which like Lone Star and Dark Helmet in Spaceballs, makes us absolutely nothing — which is what Ottawa is about to become. The Senators wear a Roman soldier on their chests and, compliments of "Sugar" Rob Ray, will go down like that silly, silly Empire did 1,500 years ago.

Philadelphia–Pittsburgh

JK — In–state rivalry... umm, chocolate. But really, it will take a Willy Wonka–esque rocket ride for the Pens to make a Cup run. They're cold, and a 7–3 loss to the Bruins in the season finale hurts. With all of their stars, Mario Lemieux will still have to carry the team, and his back ain't so good no more. Goalie Patrick Lalime has gone from rookie flash to flash in the pan. This will be a good test for the Flyers, who should've ended the season in the top spot, but injuries have literally hurt. This one might go the distance.

LT — It's just so sad that the great career of Mario Lemieux will end in the first round. Why didn't he just call it quits in 1992 when he was on top, where the game's most prolific scorer belongs? I'm all vechlempt and can say no more. Talk amongst yourselves.

Florida–New York

JK — No matter what any of you Ranger fans say, the Wayne–gers are old, and they play that way. Anyone besides defensively–oriented teams like the Panthers would give the Blueshirts a golden chance to advance, but in this case, no dice. It's all about defense at this time of year, and I give former Ranger John Vanbiesbrouck the nod in net. It's hard putting down a World Cup MVP in Mike Richter, but would he've been the starter last summer if The Beezer wasn't injured?

Gorrie to steal his way into UM history

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

Four years ago, when Brad Gorrie, then a senior at Algoquin Regional High School, was looking at colleges — he never even contemplated going to UMass. He just wasn't aware of the program. If it wasn't for a former assistant Massachusetts baseball coach who just so happened to see Gorrie play, he may never have circled the bases of Earl E. Lorden Field. Stone was introduced to Gorrie's game and the next year, he was a walk–on at UMass.

"It's just something that's happened," Gorrie said.

Now, the shortstop from Northboro is the only senior on the team who starts every game.

Not bad for a former walk–on.

"He's the kind of guy who gets on base and makes things happen," coach Mike Stone said. "He's a good leadoff hitter."

Brad Gorrie learned to play baseball when he was five years old. Like many homes, sports was the nucleus of family entertainment. Having a sport loving father, and being the middle child of two other brothers, Gorrie learned how to play competitively at a young age.

"My house is a big baseball house," Gorrie said. "My dad loves the game. My brothers always had me out playing wiffleball. We had homerun derby contests at my house all the time. [It's] a competitive family."

But that suits him just fine. Ever since playing the game as a child, Gorrie has had to deal with adversity, and make the adjustments necessary to compete.

"I love being in competitive situations," Gorrie said. "It's my nature. Coach [Stone] gave me an opportunity to play here. When I came here I wasn't expecting to play, it just fell into place."

Gorrie was a walk–on in his freshman year, but after the first two weeks of the season, he stepped into a starting role. For two years he played third base and batted ninth, batting before leadoff man Ryan Jette.

Jette currently holds UMass' all–time stolen base record (83). After successfully stealing 25 bases this year, Gorrie (80) has slid into second place all–time, and only needs four more steals to swipe the crown from Jette.

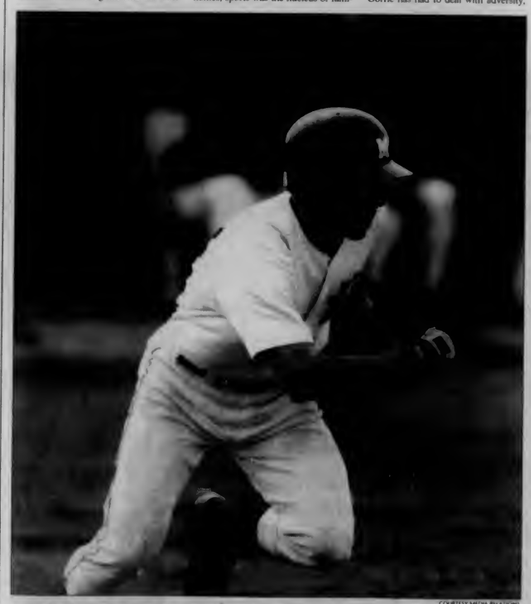
"The record is not something I've put much thought into," Gorrie said. "I've been on a roll. This is the second year that I've had the green light. [Stone] pretty much has the confidence in me to allow me to steal."

"He's pretty good at choosing when to go," Stone said.

Not only could Gorrie surpass Jette's record of steals this year, but he is also only three runs away from surpassing Bill Knights all–time record of 157, a record he secured from 1992–95. His skill at base stealing can be stemmed from his tremendous ability and quickness.

"[It takes] a good jump," Gorrie said. "But also the experience of knowing when to steal. The people batting behind me have done a good job, either letting me steal or protecting me when I do go. Either swinging through the pitch, or fake bunting, it gives me a good opportunity to steal."

Since Jette's departure, Gorrie has taken the spot as the leadoff hitter. He's started out slow this year, but lately has turned it up. Over the weekend's series against Temple, Gorrie reached base eight times, scoring every time, with six steals.



"This year, I'm the No. 1 hitter instead of the No. 2 hitter," Gorrie said. "It's just something that came about, not something I was trying to achieve."

What helps Brad find the confidence he needs is written on his glove. The name is of a man who sits very close to his heart — Arnold Baker, his former legion baseball coach, who has passed away.

It was obvious that Baker was more than a coach to Gorrie. Baker helped mold him into the player he is today. In fact, before Baker died, he gave Brad the greatest compliment he has ever received.

"He told me that I was one of the 343 dead in fire near Islam's holiest site

MECCA, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The death toll climbed to 343 yesterday from a tent city fire near Islam's holiest site, while authorities struggled to save badly burned survivors and helped anguished relatives track down the missing.

The annual Muslim hajj went forward, with 2 million pilgrims praying at Mount Arafat, in their sheer numbers, they helped explain why the annual Muslim hajj seems destined to be jolted by tragedies like Tuesday's blaze.

While the Saudi government has worked to keep up with the ever-growing influx, ensuring safety for the pilgrims is a monumental task. Each year the numbers grow, and so do the demand for security and services.

Yesterday, an Indian preacher demanded something be done so those who make the pilgrimage, or hajj, do not have to bring along small gas cooking stoves — believed to be the cause of the fire.

"The Saudi government should start community kitchens so that individual hajjis don't have to cook their own meals," Syed Ahmed Bukhari said at the main mosque in New Delhi, India.

Cigarettes companies may settle lawsuits

(AP) — Abandoning their all-out defense of cigarettes, the nation's two biggest tobacco companies now seem willing to cut their legal losses for up to $300 billion and retire Joe Camel and the Marlboro Man if the government backs off its threat to regulate nicotine.

RJR Nabisco and Philip Morris are in early talks with the attorneys general of eight states in hopes of winning blanket protection from lawsuits over smoking-related health problems, it was disclosed yesterday.

In return, the cigarettes companies would pay hundreds of billions of dollars and agree to cut back on ads, especially ones like Joe Camel that appeal to children and those that depict people, such as the Marlboro Man.

The cigarette companies' willingness to even consider such concessions marks a startling turnaround. For decades, the tobacco industry has fought a no-retreat battle on all fronts.

In the past few years, however, the industry has been barraged with lawsuits filed by 22 states and countless individuals, and the litigation is hurting stock prices and taking management attention away from the business of selling cigarettes.

Local band called racist due to depiction of black UM student

By Lisa Chiu
Collegian Staff

A flyer which has been circulating in the Pioneer Valley has brought forth accusations of racism from several members of the University of Massachusetts student community.

The flyer depicts a hand cut–out of a photograph showing an African–American student with his fist raised outside of the Goodell Building takeover last month. The original photograph appeared on the cover of one of The Advocate's March issues.

Over the cut out picture were drawn horns on the student's head as well as a caricature curly mustache. There was also a pentagram drawn on his jacket and a symbol of an S that was placed in his raised right hand.

The flyer was an advertisement for Skindog's Army, a local four–member band from Holyoke. The flyer advertised a performance on April 13 at the Springdale Turnhall in Holyoke. The S symbol is the band's logo.

The student in the picture was UMass freshman psychology major, Tony Ino Baptiste. Ino Baptiste was first presented with the flyer by a co–worker.

Baptiste wrote in an essay for class, which he later submitted to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, "On Monday, the element of death struck as one of my co–workers handed me my corpse. I can still remember his words, 'Tony I have something that's going to make you upset and I want to give it to you before you see it anywhere.'

"He handed me a flyer. Suddenly the intensity of my heartbeat made me quiver and I could feel the rush of my heated emotions were imprisoned in my motionless body... Tears of pain and anger trickled down my face as I stared at my dead body distorted from a fatal accident."

Skindog's Army speaks

Skindog's Army's lead singer, who goes by the name 'Skindog,' said he considers the group "pro–white" not "anti– black."

"We get slack for being called a neo–Nazi group. We just speak the truth; if people can't deal, that's their problem," he said. "We're not trying to dis[–respect] anybody. We just think that you should make pride universal, so no one gives in... We're not a prejudiced band, if we offend people that's their problem, not mine."

According to 'Skindog,' he is not racist because many people have told him he has more African–American friends than anyone else they know.

'Skindog' also spoke against affirmative action.

"The black race has been given the advantage through affirmative action — how come you [African–American] get to get a 96 on a cop test, and if you're white you've got to get a 102? If I were black, I would be insulted by affirmative action. It's basically saying that blacks are dumber," he said.

Skindog's Army's drummer who goes by the name 'Muerto,' or death in Spanish, disagreed.

According to 'Muerto,' the group has "plenty of black and Puerto Rican friends" and do not base their group on any ideologies of race.

'Muerto,' who works at the Springdale Turnhall is also the artist who cut out Jean Baptiste's picture from the Springfield Advocate and drew in horns, a pentagram, mustache and the S logo.

"I cut him out of the paper because I thought he was really strong looking and up front and that he had something to say, that's why I picked him. I thought he was cool looking. I've got nothing against him or anything," 'Muerto' said.

'Muerto' said he does not see himself as a racist. He also commented on 'Skindog's' statement on being pro–white, saying that he ['Skindog'] was speaking for himself and that 'Muerto' had no idea what

Five arrested after CVS found pot on photograph

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

On the afternoon of Friday, April 11, Amherst police officers responded to a call from the CVS Photo Lab in Amherst Center about some developed prints that depicted a group of five young men posing with illegal marijuana plants.

The men, all residents of 249 East Pleasant St., Amherst, were shown posing either seated or standing by the plants.

The police affidavit said the men were also seen assuming comical positions, "with their mouths open as if they're about to bite some leaves off a plant," according to an article in the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

All of the men are now facing legal incrimination for drug possession and desire to traffic a Class D substance.

Alexander Lea, a University of Massachusetts student, and one of the inhabitants of the East Pleasant Street residence, was the only one home at 5:30 p.m. on April 13 when Amherst police arrived with a search warrant.

Upon entering the quarters, five Amherst police officers discovered 10 marijuana plants, all varying in heighs from 20 to 44 inches.

According to the Gazette, officers found a multitude of scales, growing lights, "and other paraphernalia that appeared to show the drug was being cultivated for more than personal use."

Lt. Jeffrey Roy of the Amherst Police Department told the Gazette that evidence found at the house suggested they were distributing the marijuana.

The Gazette said the Amherst Police said plants were found in every room, including an area in the basement that the tenants had built by constructing a false wall. Some of the marijuana was allegedly being dried under intensive heat lamps as well.

The value of the confiscated marijuana has yet to be determined.

Roy told the Gazette that the Amherst CVS personal policy dictates they automatically turn over pictures of suspected criminal activity to the police.

According to a report in the Springfield Union News, CVS manager Michael McMahon said CVS "owns all pictures developed at the store and refuses to sell photos back that depict illegal activities."

CVS employees have since refused to comment on the matter, and have referred all questions to Fred McGrill, a CVS spokesman at the corporate headquarters. As of yet, corporate headquarters has also left phone calls unreturned.

Other photo shop managers in the Amherst region, though, tend to disagree with CVS's policy.

"By law, we're only required to submit photos depicting incidents of child pornography," said Derek Timberlake, manager of the Camera Shops in Northampton. "It's the internal decision of the employees to decide whether the film will be printed."

Sarah Lavery, an employee at Ritz Photo in Amherst center said she thought likewise.

"Generally, it's up to the printer's discretion whether they want to print photos of sexual activity. Our general rule is that if it's obscene we won't print it," Lavery said.

"It's illegal for the customer to drop off photos of pornographic nature [to the photo processing center], but not so much is done about marijuana use," Lavery said.

Lavery also said that their policy on "illegal" photos is not generally made known to the customers

MHC students hold rally to get list of demands met

By Laura Stack
Collegian Staff

Students at Mount Holyoke College are seeking support from the the Five College community in their ongoing protest against their administration and for their rally today for cultural centers, need–blind admissions and retention of the chaplaincy on campus.

Student protesters said they will hold a rally outside of the Eliana Ortega House at 9:30 a.m. today, one of the two cultural centers on campus, in preparation for the 10 a.m. meeting between the negotiating team of six students and Mount Holyoke President Joanne Creighton.

Amanda Sapir, one of the Mount Holyoke student negotiators and rally organizers, said that while problems have been rising since Creighton was hired two years ago, the situation escalated last week when the Catholic, Jewish and Protestant chaplains were fired and replaced with one Dean of the Chaplaincy.

"A group of students met Friday night, and started to talk about concerns about the chaplaincy," Sapir said. "In the process, we talked about other decisions the administration has made irrespective of what the students have asked for."

The things students have asked the administration for over the past two years have evolved into a list of 11 demands, which they presented to Creighton in meetings on Monday and Tuesday, according to Sapir. They have prioritized three as the most important on their list, though they are in no particular order of significance.

First, the students, who originally requested a fourth chaplain for students of Muslim faith, have asked for four chaplains to be hired by the spring of 1998.

Secondly, the students object to the college's decision to move from need–blind to need–sensitive admissions for 5 to 10 percent of applicants. Under the proposed changed by the administration, the college would take financial status into consideration when granting admission.

Thirdly, the students are protesting the college's denial of cultural space for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender students and Asian American students. The college currently has two cultural centers on campus — the Eliana Ortega House for Pan–African students and the Betty Shabazz House for Latina students. Additionally, the second floor of the Eliana Ortega House is the Zowie Banteahe space for Native American students.

"We are also asking for tenure track positions for Asian American professors in the Asian American Department," Sapir said. She added two were recently hired, but not in tenure track programs.

After collecting 418 signatures on a petition (Mount Holyoke student body is 1,900) and holding two meetings with administrators, students rallied on the steps of their campus center Monday to inform the campus of all the issues.

Later that night, Sapir said, "at least 150 students went in orderly fashion to Creighton's house" where for two hours they cheered, held a candlelight vigil and sang the Mount Holyoke alma mater.

Students spent yesterday educating the campus through forums and organizing today's rally.

While students are addressing specific demands which, so far, the administration have denied. Sapir said the underlying philosophy of the protest is to set an example among their private education peers.

"I think this is representative of a larger crisis in American higher education, specifically private, that when changes need to be made or when endowments need to be larger, cuts are made on the backs of students," Sapir said.

"It is time for one college in this country to say it will not follow the elitist track that higher education has been following for decades." Sapir said. "Since Mount Holyoke was the first to offer higher education to women, it is the perfect place to start."

Student senators pass 9 motions with ease in meeting last night

By Victoria Graves
Collegian Staff

There was little bickering at last night's Student Government Association (SGA) senate meeting, as nine motions were passed, five of them unanimously.

Two of the motions specifically concerned Butterfield dormitory (Central Residential Area), calling for repairs to be made to the closed stairway located on the north side of the building.

The other motion concerned approximately 30 trees that were cut down on the west side of the dormitory.

"The community was outraged at the loss of trees," Chair Stacey Shackford said.

The bill stated that the cut down trees have left "a plethora of debris for the Butterfield community to clean up... be it enacted that the University replace the missing trees as soon as the weather permits."

The bill was opposed by Sen. Paul Ferro (Southwest Area) because of a bill voted down by the senate in a previous meeting. The previous bill was concerned with flag poles being bought for each residential area.

"The only reason they are saying they couldn't put flagpoles up is because it's too expensive. Tonight they passed a motion that has the University putting up 30 trees next to one dorm... it's very hypocritical of the senate," Ferro said.

One of the reasons the flag pole motion was voted down was because many senators voiced the opinion that call boxes should take priority over other expenses.

"They are saying they want to fund call boxes over flags, now they are funding trees over call boxes," Ferro said.

Also passed last night was a motion concerning the escort services and its current practices. The bill called for increased efforts to be made to recruit more women employees so that all students requesting escort services be given the option of a male or female walking escort or van driver.

"A number of residents didn't feel comfortable getting in a van with a male... this isn't mandating anything, it's saying this is something to think about, that some people don't feel comfortable with male drivers," Sen. Brian McManus said.

Questions were raised as to the extra wait time this might cause students waiting for an escort. Sen. Emilie Codega explained that the majority of students would not be requesting a female escort, but this motion is for those who do feel uncomfortable with the current practices.

"The option would be open to get a female escort. This just gives students a choice," Codega said.

The Senate also unanimously passed a motion concerning the All Campus Card that will be introduced to the University in the fall of 1997.

It is stated in the bill that "there has been serious question as to whether the student body has been involved in this process" and calls for the "UMass CASH" balance on a student's card not to be accessed in order to pay any outstanding debts without the student's permission.

Sen. Seih Avakian (Southwest Area), the author of the bill, said that this motion is an attempt to avoid a potential problem from happening.

"This is a new way of legislating stuff in this body... by saying we're not going to allow this stuff to happen. This allows students to control their own finances," Avakian said.

The Senate also passed a lengthy motion written by Sen. Jeff Howe, of Orchard Hill Area. The motion was to not allow smoking in the lounges and common areas of the dormitories.

Howe wrote that "the dormitories are not equipped with adequate ventilation to support a large amount of smoke in the air... and that smoking be prohibited from all areas furnished by the University."

"You pay money for activities like pool tables... and those who are allergic to smoke can't use these areas. This protects the rights of non smokers," Howe said.

Avakian argued against the motion. He said he felt it disregard smokers' rights.

"I feel that I have a right to smoke in my building. The common area is the only place I can smoke," Avakian said.

Also last night, Associate Speaker Peter Kilbourne announced his candidacy for speaker of the senate for the upcoming year. This office is voted on by the senate body.

'Skindog' meant by calling the band "pro-white."

"I'm just playing music, I'm just trying to have fun. A lot of people have forgotten what music's all about... [The flyer is] not racist to us. We just cut a picture out of a paper. I was kinda pissed off because people thought we were a black band, I don't want them thinking that, because we're not," 'Muerto' said.

He also commented on the pentagram he drew on Jean Baptiste's jacket. 'Muerto' said he believes in witchcraft and Satanism and drew the symbol to show his beliefs.

The other two band members — 'Cyclops' on lead guitar and 'Rabies' on bass — could not be reached for comment.

The flyer also included an advertisement for several other bands which were to perform this past Sunday. These bands include Torque, Digression, Push Button Warfare and a local UMass band, Hallraker.

It also had an advertisement for Sike Records in Northampton. Sike Records is owned by Pedro Garcia and Scott Lee, a publicist and booking agent for the Pearl Street nightclub in Northampton.

According to Garcia, Skindog's Army is not under the Sike Records label, but Hallraker is. Garcia said that after Hallraker was informed about the flyer, they pulled out of the concert. He added that although Skindog's Army is not under the Sike Records label, he is good friends with 'Muerto' and the rest of the band.

"I don't know the story. I have no idea what's going on. My friend Rob, or 'Muerto,' is not prejudiced. He's a friend of mine, and I'm Puerto Rican. I hang out with a lot of Puerto Ricans and 'Skindog' hangs out with us too. I know they're not prejudiced," Garcia said.

Local band pulls out

According to Jim Belisle, vocalist for the four-member band Hallraker, the band did not know anything about Skindog's Army when they agreed to perform at the concert.

Belisle said one of Hallraker's bandmembers was asked by Skindog's Army if they were willing to play in the show. He said the group was always looking for a place to perform, so they agreed to play. After being shown the flyer, however, the band decided to pull out.

"Those guys who put this flyer together just saw the Ad in The Advocate and thought it'd be cool to make a flyer about it, not knowing anything about Goodell, since they don't go to school here. It was pretty moronic actually," Belisle said.

According to Belisle, Hallraker, who did not want to be portrayed in the same light as Skindog's Army, called the group to inform them they were pulling out of the show and did not want to be represented as the flyer portrayed them to be.

"It was blatantly racist, and so against what any decent person would do. That guy [Jno Baptiste] didn't deserve the grief, and I apologized to him about that," said Hallraker drummer, Chris Bevilacqua.

According to Belisle, the Skindog's Army's reaction to Hallraker pulling out was very negative. Belisle said the group told Hallraker members they had legal representation, and were willing to go to court over the fact that they [Hallraker] were pulling out.

"They thought the flyer was a joke. How can anyone do that to someone?" said Bevilacqua. "We just didn't want to be associated with that."

Belisle said he believes that Skindog's Army was upset because the members thought Hallraker was "going to come down on them, and that we had lawyers too."

"We knew that there was a misunderstanding, and they were just preparing for the worst... They really have no impact of what they did, but I want to make it clear that Hallraker or any of us [band members] as individuals do not have anything to do with that [Skindog's Army] thought."

The other band members in Hallraker include Jim Shey on bass guitar, and Jim Peon on guitar.

Editor in Chief of The Advocate, Dan Caccavaro, said Skindog's Army did not violate any copyright law in using their picture. The picture in the way it was presented is considered public domain.

"I don't want The Advocate to be associated with anything racist or demeaning to people, that's the opposite of what we're all about," said Caccavaro.

Caccavaro also added, "I can see why people can take it [the flyer] as a racist thing, but if they took a picture of a white person and did the same thing, would they have the same response? I don't know the people involved to know whether it is a racist band or not... I find this whole thing just foolish and childish."

when they drop off their film. Again, employees of the North Pleasant Street CVS refused to comment on whether or not they warn customers of their policy on "illegal" photos.

Bill Lewis, spokesman for Photo Marketing Association, told the Union News, "We like to be moral people and all, and make sure to try and stop crime, but it's not the photo finisher's job to do that."

Lewis added that, contrary to CVS policy, the customer owns the images on his or her film.

"It's the customer's property that is brought in to have converted from one form to another," Lewis said.

UM to host human rights conference

By Laura Forster
Collegian Staff

The Five College Native American Studies Curriculum Committee will hold a two-day conference entitled, "Human Genomes/Human Rights" this Friday and Saturday. Critics from around the world will gather to discuss the Human Genome Diversity Project (HGDP).

The aim of the conference, according to one individual of the planning group "is to refocus attention on how indigenous peoples might be preserved by protecting their fundamental human rights."

What is considered to be one of the most controversial scientific projects of recent time, HGDP works to provide a global map of human genetic variation. Scientists from HGDP collect raw data of indigenous peoples, from around the world, through blood, hair and tissue samples. Many of these groups are faced with displacement and extinction, thus scientists of HGDP feel the need to work quickly to collect data.

However, critics of HGDP feel that, because the data collected becomes the property of scientists and corporations, they are the ones profiting while those from whom the data is taken gain nothing and have their rights violated.

Currently the United Nations Declaration of the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, which was designed to protect indigenous peoples, is being examined globally before it is submitted to the United Nations General Assembly.

Speakers, from around the world, will be present at this weekends' conference to examine the Declaration, the HGDP's relationship with it, and speak on various topics in behalf of indigenous people.

On Friday, conferences will be held throughout the day on all the five college campuses. A lecture at 2 p.m. at Hampshire College, Franklin Patterson West Lecture Hall, by Jonathan Marks, professor of physical anthropology and genetics at Yale University, will embody his view of the racism associated with HGDP.

A panel discussion will be held at Smith College, Wright Hall Auditorium, from 3-6 p.m. with Vandana Shiva, director of the Research Foundation for Science, Technology and Natural Resource Policy in Dehra Dun, India; Deborah Harry, member of the Northern Paiute Nation of Nevada; and Steve Newcomb, member of the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma and director of the Indigenous Law Institute in Eugene, Oregon.

At the University of Massachusetts, a film will be shown every hour from 1–4 p.m. at the library entitled "Gene Hunters."

Lastly, a lecture will be held at Amherst College, Converse Hall at 4 p.m. by Birgil Kills Straight, member of the Oglala Lakota Nation and co-director of the Indigenous Law Institute; Victoria Tauli-Corpuz, executive director of the Cordillera Women's Education and Resource Center in the Philippines; and Nalani Minton, International Peoples' Tribunal in Hawaii.

Saturday will be the plenary session at UMass, Marcus Hall, Room 131 at 9 a.m. entitled, "The United Nations Declaration of the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and the Human Genomes Diversity Project." This panel will be held by faculty members within the Five College community.

Scandal becomes Netanyahu's worst political crisis

By Dan Perry
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — In a move that could bring down the Israeli government and snarl the peace process, police have recommended indicting Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu for breach of trust in an influence-trading scandal.

Although scandals in Israel are not infrequent, the recommendation police handed to state attorney Edna Arbel yesterday was the harshest ever against an Israeli government. Arbel was expected to announce by early next week whether he would indict Netanyahu.

Police recommendations are not binding or always followed. Yet this one has the potential to break apart Netanyahu's coalition — more brittle than ever since the allegations surfaced in January. An indictment would ruin chances of bringing the opposition Labor Party into the government, a plan Netanyahu has been contemplating as a way of rescuing the disintegrating Middle East peace process.

The scandal started with Netanyahu's appointment of a political crony as attorney general. Jerusalem lawyer Roni Bar-On resigned after only a day in office under criticism that he was a legal lightweight chosen for his political connections.

Days later, Israel TV claimed the appointment was part of a conspiracy by senior officials who expected Bar-On to end the corruption trial of Aryeh Deri, leader of the religious Shas Party. Deri, in turn, would ensure the two Shas Cabinet ministers gave Netanyahu the necessary backing for the Israeli troop pullback from most of the West Bank town of Hebron.

Netanyahu denied the allegations and called the inquiry. After 12 weeks and the questioning of 60 witnesses, including Netanyahu, investigators on Tuesday handed the state attorney their 995-page report.

From the circular file

C. Taylor Connor

Think of the mammoth flops of recent years. Patrick Ewing's one-point playoff performance. Al Gore attempting to clap in rhythm. Bret Easton Ellis' follow-up novel to Less Than Zero. Any Pauly Shore film.

Failure abounds, failure is real and pure and failure is an unruly bitch we might as well all embrace. My columns have appeared in the Collegian for three years now, and I'm not ashamed to say that since I've become a weekly contributor, some of my pieces have, as we say in clinical terms, sucked the dead trout.

While I won't admit to which columns in particular bit the llama's knee, I am more than happy to share the ones — none of which will ever soil Collegian pulp — that were so horrific that even my mother's father snubbed them. Might I mention he's been dead for almost 40 years.

It is as such that I will only now print these "lost" works in excerpt form, as any of these in whole might cause the average reader to take their index fingers and do the Method acting version of "Oedipus Rex." God knows I wouldn't want the burden of a mass self-inflicted eye-gouging on my hands. Accordingly, please proceed with caution.

"The second contest" (abandoned Oct. 16, 1996): Well, I have to say I'm pretty disappointed in you guys. I gave you an entire month to apply for the "C. Taylor Conner" scholarship for the perfect student, and not one person applied. I mean, how hard is it to find a scholarly virgin who doesn't masturbate and has never seen an R- rated film? For Christ's sake, I've been to the Northeast dorm area before. Geek-o-rama.

(Column interrupted as all computers at Collegian mysteriously shut down simultaneously. Screen-saver message from "geek-o-rama, inc." appears moments later, reads "Now who's having trouble getting things up, tough guy?")

"Leftover freshman blues" (abandoned March 30, 1995): Uptown, shmuptown, I say. All of us freshmen... pardon, freshpeople know that the way to go is stuffing ourselves into a dorm room to drink until nine at night, then cramming into a PVTA autobus d'amour, and capping the evening off by suffocating in an overcrowded party in either Hobart, Puffton, Brandywine or Townhouse.

"The MassPIRG experience" (abandoned Sept. 10, 1994): No doubt about it, the most important and least intrusive organization on campus is MassPIRG, and they have the flyers to prove it. All it takes is one walk through the Campus Center to find this out.

(Column idea tossed out when I took a second walk through the CC, receiving enough flyers to wallpaper the Metropolitan Museum of Art — twice over.)

"A woman at heart" (abandoned Oct. 28, 1995): I know what it's like to be a woman.

(Column sent to file purgatory when I found out the Smith student I was wooing was already pre-wooed by phallus-free individual, and thus unimpressed by sensitive-guy rhetoric — or any guy for that matter.)

"The sucker masses" (abandoned April 16, 1997): If, as the Usual Suspects suggests, the greatest trick the Devil ever pulled was convincing the world he didn't exist, the greatest trick I've ever pulled is convincing you I actually care about you, my embarrassingly loyal readers.

(Column pushed way, way back to the end of the line when I realized if there are indeed any "embarrassing loyal readers," they might actually remember that my hauntingly feminine prename is spelled much the same as "glisten" and "listen," but is pronounced like neither.)

We hold these truths

Evan Young

Isn't it true that some people are smarter than others? Fatter than others? More talented than others?

Sometimes, when I'm introduced to people I don't know, I feel like saying "Hi. I couldn't care less about you and it's not nice to meet you. In fact, you're not worth the effort it takes me to shake hands. You're ugly and you don't seem as smart as I am."

But that would be a little over-aggressive, wouldn't it? People can't handle honesty; it seems as if we are all tiptoeing around each other's egos, afraid to say what it is that we really think because once you say what you think, you are at the mercy of simple minds who are quick to categorize you into one of two convenient, personality- reducing stereotypes. So what'll it be, Liberal or Conservative? When the truth comes out, once you speak your mind, you've got to be one or the other, right?

If I were to go up to an obese man and say "Wow, you're really fat and disgusting. Why don't you do something about it?" He would get angry. What's the reason? I've simply told him the truth.

All of us have a fear of the truth. I'm beginning to think that it's a basic human thing, the outrageous ability to be deceitful about your genuine emotions and opinions in an inane attempt to pander to others. We all wear masks and take vows of silence in deference to some sort of unwritten golden rule, a rule that tells us to never get to the heart of the matter, never express your true feelings, never let people know what you really think. If you don't have something nice to say, lie your face off and hope they believe you. Lie unto others as you would have them lie unto you.

What is this phenomenon of deceit? It's almost inexplicable. We talk about others behind their backs — I do it all the time. Some people simply can't be told the truth about themselves, their looks, or their lack of abilities. In our society, there is a well-beaten path around that bush, because everyone puts on a show. Everyone has their charade for others; we keep strangers and friends alike at an arm's length away, outside of striking distance where our emotions and egos are safe from attack.

When someone hits too close to the truth, people lash out. Take, for example, the proposal for a Commonwealth College here at UMass. Why would anyone be opposed to a such a thing? It would create a challenging environment for the more intelligent, harder working and opportunistic students on our campus.

Wait a minute.. what does this mean?

Do I mean to say that some students are better than others? Get out of town! God forbid we give the smart students better facilities and better professors, because the dumber students might realize — through their fog of ineptitude — that they are being left out. Why would we give the cream of our societal crop the opportunities to learn more or grow more? Why would we put anyone in a position above ourselves?

Because America tells us that all men are created equal. It must be true; it says so right in the Letter Of All Letters, the end-all of almighty truths adherent to the entire human race, that wonderful Declaration. Isn't that the truth?

I believe that in our society, each and every one of us has the opportunity to prove their competence and ability. The beautiful thing about capitalism is that in order to succeed, you have to be better than the next guy. Yes, this means that some people will not succeed where others will. In this way, it becomes obvious that not everyone is created equal. We all have differing talents, differing intellects.

So why is this such a hard pill to swallow? Why do parents raise hell when their little Johnny isn't put into the ACE program at school, but little Billy down the street is? Why Is there a backlash at our school when it is proposed that a Commonwealth College be set up? Is it such a hard thing to admit that, indeed, you just aren't as gifted or as talented as someone with a higher GPA?

People can't handle the truth.

My girlfriend tells me that it's not necessary to be completely honest with people all the time. It's disgusting, but she is right. People need to be deadened to the truth, they need to be told that their hair looks nice, that they look thinner, that the reason that girl ignored you when you tried to hit on her at the bar was because she must have been a lesbian. The more we think that reality lies within the 20" screen sitting six feet away from your planted ass on the couch, the better.

It's a shame how apathetic we have become in our disillusionment and dishonesty. In lying to others, in catering to their easily bruised opinions, we only create a false and damaging reality for all.

Should the proof be in the picture?

Bob Dunn

Remember when taking pictures was as simple as point and shoot? Not anymore, pal. Now you better make sure nothing unseemly is in front of the Instamatic before the shutter starts clicking because you might wind up staring down the business end of a police bust.

According to articles published in The Daily Hampshire Gazette and the Springfield Union-News, a group of five men dropped off a roll of film at an unidentified photography shop in Amherst (later identified as CVS) in good faith, and instead of receiving glossy, color prints of treasured memories, they got a visit from the local police. The police then proceeded to bust the residents of the house with possession charges, based on the presence of marijuana plants in the pictures. The police also decided to get the Amherst building commissioner involved in possible code violations.

Welcome to 1997, Amherst Uber Alles.

According to the article, the pictures found their way into the claws of the Amherst P.D. when an employee of the photo store reported that a roll of film that had been developed contained photos of the men in question with marijuana plants in "various stages of cultivation."

First off, it's not CVS' or any photo lab's job to enforce the law. It's their job to develop pictures, that's it. all. It's certainly not their job to don the mantle of self-righteousness and decide, on their own, to take the law into their own hands and narc out a group of people based solely on a set of photographs.

We're not talking about pictures of child pornography here (the only kind of photos a lab is obligated to hand over to police, by the way), we're talking about some guys who took some pictures around their house and, yes, the house contained marijuana plants.

Was a crime being committed in the house? Maybe. Yes, possession with intent to distribute is illegal, but I'd hate to think that CVS is vying to become the newest branch of the Amherst P.D.'s narcotics bureau.

I contacted the CVS photo lab, and they offered no comment. They, in turn, referred me to the CVS home office (401-765-1500) who couldn't give me any further information, either. I was informed by the janitor who actually answered the phone that the person I was looking for wasn't around.

The question I wanted to ask CVS was if they informed their photo customers beforehand that the film could be used as evidence against them if there seemed to be anything unsavory going on in the developed photos. My guess is, "no," which puts this little fiasco right near the top of obscene civil rights violations.

How many people would willingly drop their film off if they knew there was a chance the photos would be handed over to the police and used as evidence to obtain a warrant?

Maybe I'm going out on a limb here, but this whole thing smacks of other "notable" law enforcement activities such as illegal wiretaps, unnecessary surveillance, police harassment and other gestapo tactics.

When people drop off film at a processing lab, they do so because they don't have the equipment, time, or know-how to process it themselves. Photo labs provide a service to those people and that's it. CVS manager Michael McMahon told the Union-News that CVS "owns all pictures developed at the store."

Excuse me?

How dare one store or chain of stores, who claim to provide an innocuous service claim that others' photos are not only their property, but that they can just simply decide to hand that "property" over to the police?

Again, we're not talking about the photographed abuse of an innocent child. We're talking about a group of adults growing plants in their house who happened to get their photos developed by a self-styled, self-righteous group of fascists who have nothing better to do than enforce their own brand of justice, and stepped way over the line of acceptable behavior in doing so.

Letters to the Editor

Student group gives official response to Chancellor's letter

To the Editor:

The administration has indeed done number 20 on the 21 point of the Living Document to far. The administration has made the series of two hour long meetings since we exlted the Goodell Building on Saturday, March 8 to the present time. In this month of post-negotiations, we have had less than 13 hours of time to have dialogue on these pressing issues, and if we follow the administration's action plan for negotiations, we will only have 10 more hours of negotiations until the end of the semester. Twenty-three hours of negotiations from March 8 to March 22, to discuss, gather information and come to logical conclusions, on issues which have been a part of this University for more than a decade (This is a really bad estimate. It is closer to 134 years). The administration is claiming good faith efforts. I am insistent upon a more committed effort, because 23 hours is not enough!

The administration says, "In each successive meeting there have been fewer of the students with whom we held discussions with (in Goodell," I must remind the administration, that when we were in Goodell, their administration negotiating team fluctuated from seven to two at various times (People who live in glass houses should not throw stones! Not to mention, students do not get paid over $100,000 to sit in meetings with you all night). With the departure of the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Tom Robinson, during the height of the negotiations and the inconsistent appearances of several administrators like Patricia H. Crosson and Paul Page, we were put in a position where we were wondering [about] the administration's commitment to students who put their academic lives and graduation at great risk because of these pressing issues. So I am sorry if the administration seems to feel interrogated and impugned at meetings, but that is what sitting in committees and ignoring these crucial issues for more than a decade will do. So please do not get enraged at us, if we ask for more than 23 hours of your time. To you, I know, it seems like a lot since you are in the habit of creating committees which only meet once a month (i.e. Chancellor's Committee on Diversity and Social Justice), but in this instance, once a month is not enough.

In response to the rest of the Administration's Executive Negotiation Team's requests, I must ask that they contact the Student Negotiating Team and request it. It would surprise me that these people, whom we pay extremely well, would do something so unwise, like, send an e-mail. We would like verification on this interesting and mind baffling letter/e-mail/memo. It would seem silly to me that the Administration would consider dialogue through e-mails, as an effective way to bring any matter to a reasonable conclusion.

The Student Negotiating Team

Another response to Scott's letter

To the Editor:

Once again it baffles the mind to seriously consider that the Chancellor of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst would display such a bad example of leadership. Surely the Chancellor must not believe that e-mail is an effective way of communication. Please, contact the Student Negotiating Team if you, indeed, did write this letter/e- mail/memo.

I will not conduct further dialogue on this issue, until we find out who is behind this disturbing letter/e-mail/memo. However, I will comment on a few of my concerns about negotiations.

1. The Chancellor has not yet sat down with the students In Goodell, formally, to state anything. Leading me to wonder, if he cares or even knows what is going on. Perhaps he [is] satisfied with his 10 minute debriefings on student issues.

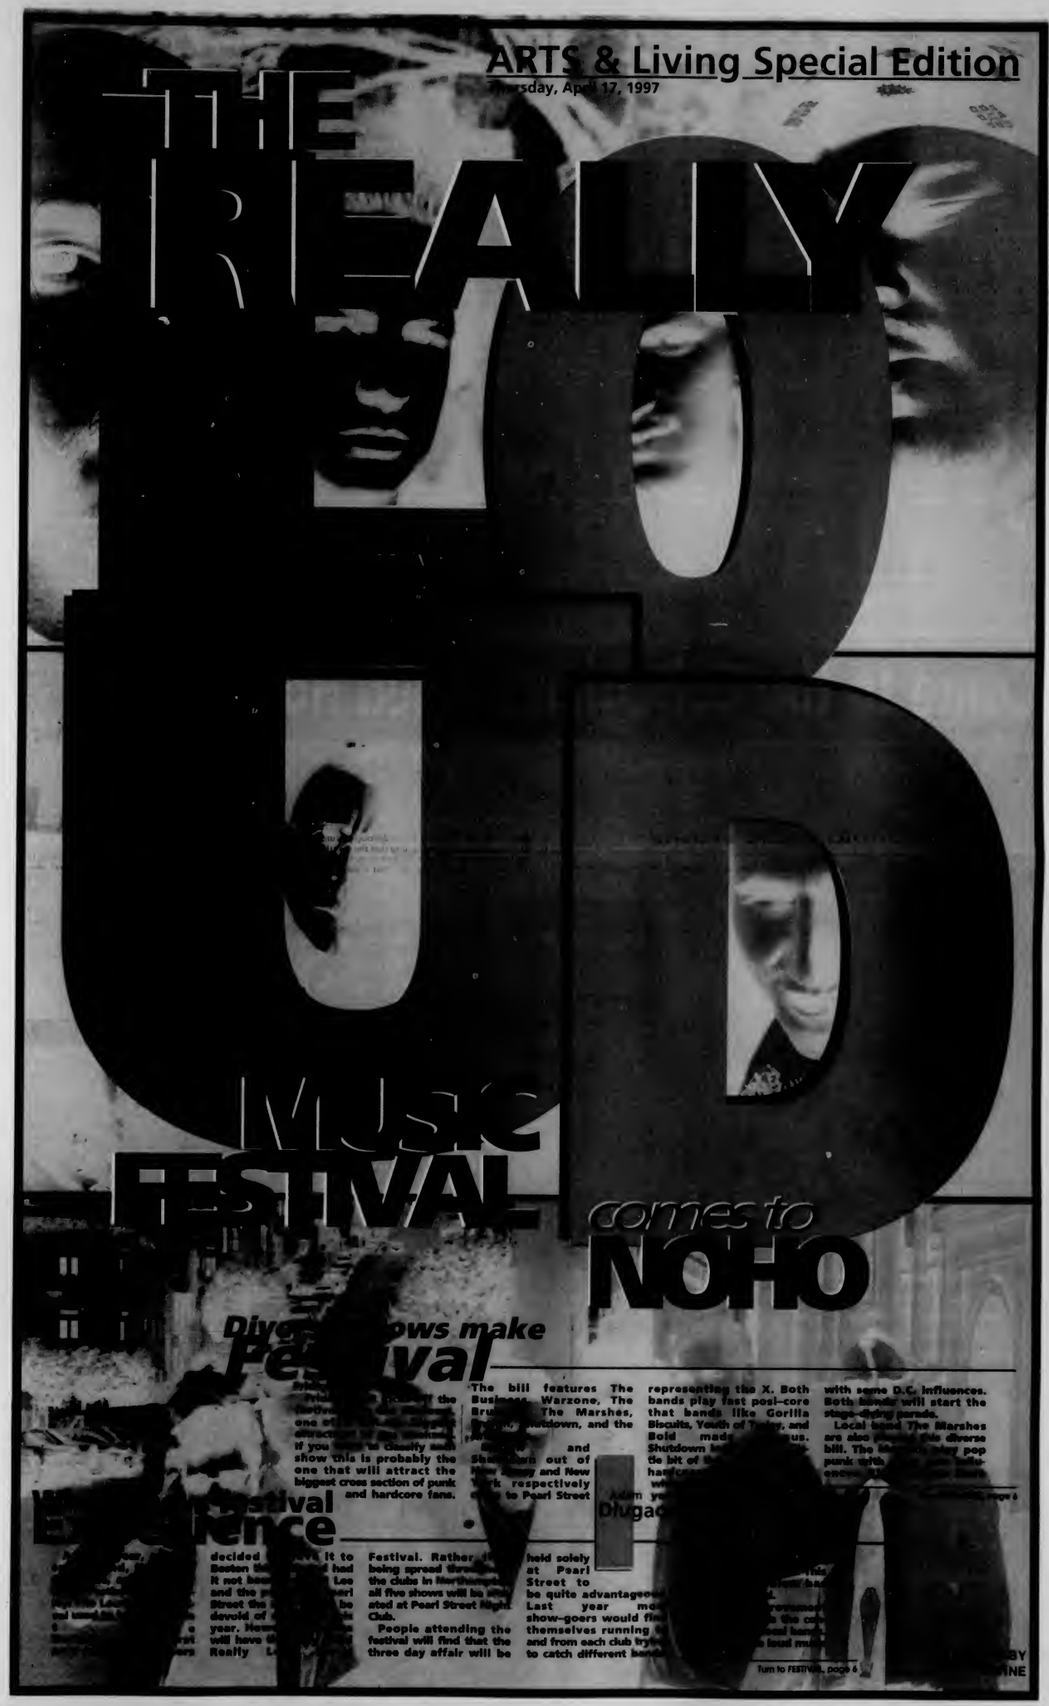
2. The Administration Executive Negotiating Team would seem, by some, to be stalling on issues (maybe this is, maybe not. That is not the point!). I would sincerely hope that they do not believe this will end at the semester's end. The Student Negotiating Team planned on Oct. 6, 1996, that they would be all willing to stay up at UMass to see this thing to the conclusion. We felt that it was our obligation to the students who gave up six days of their academic career.

3. If the administration does feel that there are fewer and fewer students who started the negotiations present at these meetings, may we propose, again, the option of Saturday meetings (This was proposed at the beginning of the month). This would ensure their desired attendance.

4. If the administration also feels that a facilitator/mediator would be useful may we propose, again, Martin Walsh (this was proposed in Goodell, on March 4).

Finally, I encourage the Chancellor and the Administrative Executive Negotiation Team to:

1) Find out who is sending these absurd e-mails.



2) Please, contact a member of the Student Negotiation Team. Instead of sending these types of messages over e- mail. I am a student, you are the administration. I should not have to tell you that e-mail is not an effective way to resolve tensions. In fact It only adds to the confusion and bad relations you have between students.

been compared to a lighter version of lawbreaker and their debut release on Grass Records proved that. These guys have a new album coming out on Dr. Strange records and are on the verge of stardom. Plus almost everyone in the valley can probably hum "Offshore."

Boston's oi, rockabilly hero's The Bruisers will be making a second appearance at the festival. Then a band who needs no introduction, Warzone, will be storming the stage. Straight out of the Lower East Side of New York, Warzone's blend of hardcore and oi music have helped spark the hardcore scene. Warzone is a band that has stayed true to their beliefs throughout their 11-year existence and are sure to be one of the festival's highlights.

All the way from England the band that carries the oi banner, the Business, will be making their first valley appearance. Classic songs like "Drinking and Driving" and "Saturday's Heroes" as well as their blue collar approach to music have made the guys famous. Combine the best aspects of punk, hardcore, and oi and you have the Business.

Saturday, noon

Saturday's show features bands from every genre of hardcore. Ranging from folk to heavy metal the line up is an eclectic one. This is the show that forced them to call it the Really Loud Music festival. Converge, Deadguy, Coalesce, Despair, Crisis, Cast Iron Hike, Hallraker, Jesuit, Ire, Unionsuit, Project Kate, Fastbreak, and Drowning Man are playing.

Drowning Man, featuring the ex-singer of The Champions, will start the day off. Next up are Connecticut youth crew champions Fastbreak. Be prepared for circle pits and mass sing-a-longs when these guys hit the stage. Project Kate will then mellow things out with their female fronted folk rock. Unionsuit, from Boston, an intense live band will bring their noisy brand of emo into the mix. Ultra political, grindcore band Ire, from Canada, will be up next. Jesuit, known for their live presence, play a very heavy, noisy, screechy, brand of metal core.

Local heroes Hallraker are up next. Already known for their intense and insane live sets, Hallraker's debut seven- inch on Ellington records has been burning up the charts. If you cross Black Flag, Swiz, and Nation of Ulysses you have Hallraker. They even cover "Supertouch" by the Bad Brains.

Cast Iron Hike who have already made a name for themselves in the valley will be playing. Cast Iron Hike play an eclectic brand of post hardcore that brings to mind bands like Quicksand or Shift. Cast Iron Hike will be putting out a full length on Victory Records.

Metal Blade's female fronted, heavy metal terrorists Crisis are up next. Lead vocalist Karen Crisis has helped this band rise to the top of the metal class. Buffalo's Despair, who feature ex-members of Slugfest, will be up next. Despair play heavy, fast-paced hardcore and fans of Integrity, Snapcase or any of the Victory bands should check them out. They are also really nice guys.

Out of Kansas is Coalesce. Coalesce's brand of ear- splitting metal have helped make them famous throughout the hardcore scene. This band had a split with Napalm Death and are known to be scary in a live setting. Just in case you have any sense of hearing left, New York's Deadguy is up next to give you tinnitus. Despite major line up changes, Deadguys cross of Neurosis, Black Flag, and Rorschach are always crowd pleasers.

Headlining this diverse bill is Converge. Converge will be making a rare school year appearance and are another band that draws kids from all over the country. Converge play a cross of intricate heavy metal and emo with some intense demented vocals. Their two CDs have proved them to be major players on the hardcore scene.

Saturday, 3 p.m.

The evening show is quite a change from the afternoon ruckus. While the earlier bands will maul you, the later bands will have you smiling and go-going in no time. Weston, Thumper, Showcase Showdown, The Hutus, Knuckle Sandwich, Howitzer, Yell Boy, Jiker, Sweet Sixteen, The Afflictions, and Pop-A-Wheelie will be playing.

Pop-A-Wheelie will be opening up. Then the valley's sexiest band, the Afflictions, will rock the stage. Despite the fact that they have no releases out, their good looks and slick stage moves have helped the Afflictions build themselves quit a following.

Coming from Springfield is the all-girl Sweet Sixteen. Sweet Sixteen brings a happier version of riot-girl punk to the table. Jiker brings a toe-tapping version of punk to the festival. Straight out of Westchester is Howitzer. Howitzer plays skate punk that will have you longing for an empty pool or a street corner to grind. Local boys Knuckle Sandwich, who have made a name for themselves on the UMass campus, are up next.

Showcase Showdown, who are quite famous in the Boston punk scene, will be making their second festival appearance. The Showdown play oi-influenced punk with some very Jello Biafra-esque vocals.

Weston, who were one of the highlights of last year's festival, will be headlining this happy bill. Weston stay truer to their pop roots then their punk roots but everyone seems to love them. In fact, a Weston show without tons of kids singing along to songs like "New Shirt," "Just Like Kurt," or "Got Beat Up" is unheard of. Plus they're one of the goofiest bands around.

Sunday, noon

This strictly hardcore matinee show is sure to feature a brutal and sweaty pit. The show also feature a lot of bands from the Western Mass/ area. Bring your tank top and boots to this one. Madball, Pushbutton Warfare, Holdstrong, Hatebreed, Catchthirteen, and Onslaught will be playing.

Onslaught, out of Northampton, will set things off. Onslaught who owe a lot to Bulldoze and 25 Ta' Life have a demo out and are making a name for themselves in the local area. Also from Western Mass. is Catchthirteen, who since their inception in 1996 and with the addition of new lead singer Jay Paquette, have been showing crowds what they can do.

New Haven's Hatebreed continue the intensity with their brand of heavy hardcore. Hatebreed is a band that has been able to build a huge following purely based on their live shows. Hatebreed spends very little time in the studio but they spend more time than just about any band on the road. If you like pit-oriented hardcore with intense evil vocals check out Hatebreed.

Two more bands from the Western Mass. area playing the show are Pushbutton Warfare and Holdstrong. Both bands have built successful followings with their breakdown oriented hardcore. Both bands are great to dance to and are a lot of fun to watch.

Headlining this show is Madball, a band whose Influence can clearly be seen through this bill. Coming out of the ashes of Agnostic Front, Madball has continued the tradition of hard, street-oriented New York hardcore. Madball is a band that embodies the hardcore spirit and are the perfect band to headline this bill.

Sunday, 5:30 p.m.

Sunday's evening show closes off the festival on a much mellower tip. Taking a break from the hardcore onslaught, the festival concludes with a ska show. Put on your pork pie hats, get out your two tone suits, get your dancing shoes and come to the show. Spring Heeled Jack, The Pilfers, The Slackers, Johnny 2 Bad and the Strikeouts, The Agents, The Mugwams, and Big D and the Kids Table.

While all of the bands do an excellent job at representing the ska scene the two standout bands are Spring Heeled Jack and The Slackers. Straight out of Brooklyn, N.Y., The Slackers come through representing the old school ska sounds. While too many ska bands today try to incorporate punk and metal into their sound The Slackers have stayed true to the swing jazzier sounds of ska. Combining a tight horn section with the soulful vocals of a Haitian lead singer they have become well known throughout the ska scene. Come down and skank to their jazzy beats.

Spring Heeled Jack are headlining this excellent bill. Spring Heeled Jack are from Connecticut and have risen to the top of the ska scene purely on the basis of a self released demo tape. Now that they are on Moon records it is only a short time before they take over the world. Spring Heeled Jack play fast paced, up-beat ska that manages to stay true to the sounds originated by bands like the Specials and the Toasters.

festival showcased a wide variety of talent but there was a serious lack of local representation. This year Hallraker, The Afflictions, The Marshes, Knuckle Sandwich, and Onslaught, all from the Amherst-Northampton area, will be playing. In addition Converge, Cast Iron Hike, Unionsuit, Sweet Sixteen, Pushbutton Warfare, Holdstrong, and Catchthirteen, all from the Western Mass. area will be playing. It's nice to see that local bands are finally getting the exposure they deserve.

Another factor that could actually go either way is that the festival will focus strictly on hardcore, punk, and ska music. In the past the festival featured an eclectic blend of indie music ranging from pop to metal to hardcore punk to folk rock. Although this year's festival will have any hardcore, punk, or ska fan drooling, the more casual fan of this genre may not find the festival as enticing.

The weekend long festival will showcase almost every aspect of the punk, ska, and hardcore world. The shows will all be at Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton so you won't have to move at all during the weekend, except on the dance floor of course. The festival has stayed true to its roots in the sense that only indie acts will be playing, as this is an excellent chance to catch up on some lesser known bands. You will also get a chance to support your local scene, something we all need to do. Lee has worked hard to make sure that everything runs smoothly and that the line ups will please everyone. So come to Pearl Street and enjoy a weekend that is sure to keep your feet moving and your ears ringing.

The Really Loud Music Festival will be held at Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton. The shows are all ages. Friday's show starts at 7 p.m., Saturday's afternoon show starts at noon and the evening show starts at 3 p.m., the Sunday afternoon show starts at noon and the evening show starts at 5:30 p.m. Each individual show is $10, the whole day is $15, and a weekend pass is $30

Corn opens off–Broadway

Musical retells Hatfield/McCoy story

By Mary Campbell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A musical with the name "Corn," written for the Ridiculous Theatrical Company, has a license to be corny, camp, satirical and hilariously lowbrow.

The late Charles Ludlam took out the license and used all its particulars. "Corn," which he wrote in 1972 for the company he founded in 1967, was revived Tuesday by the Ridiculous at the off-Broadway Chelsea Playhouse.

Pluses for "Corn" are some quite good country-western songs engagingly sung by Lisa Herbold. Minuses are a couple of scenes with a phony doctor and nurse, the latter phony both as a nurse and a female. While the rest of the show is a knee slapper, these scenes are painful, suffering in comparison with Marx Brothers and vaudeville.

The plot has Ms. Herbold as country singer Lola-Lola deciding to go home to Hicksville, to revisit her roots and see if she can patch up the famous Hatfield-McCoy feud. Maw McCoy and two daughters live across the tiny stage from Paw Hatfield and two sons.

In Ridiculous tradition, the casting contains some gender benders. Jimmy Szczepanek plays the lusty Melanie McCoy and Stephen Pell, with a face like a dried apple, plays Aunt Priscilla, a religious healer who really ends the feud.

Randy Lake displays a fine voice as Ruben Hatfield, singing to Christa Kirby as sweet Rachel McCoy. Everett Quinton plays Paw Hatfield and directs.

"Corn" is good natured. It aims for the level of summertime tent shows which once toured rural America and makes no attempt to be as textured as, for instance, "Cowgirls," which ran for months off-Broadway. To best enjoy it, one needs a real taste for corn.

"Improv" to tickle University

Troupes to visit from local area colleges

By Tricia Van Winkle
Collegian Correspondent

Do you want a good laugh? This weekend the University of Massachusetts will host the perfect thing for you. In the lower level of the Campus Center there will be an "Improv Jam" on April 20.

The "Improv Jam" will welcome improvisational comedy troupes from colleges all over New England. There are 21 college troupes invited, including M.I.T.'s "Roadkill Buffet," Yale's "Viola Question" and Boston University's "Spontaneous Combustion." Local schools participating are Amherst College's "Mr. Gad's House Improv," Smith College's "SIKO" and UMass–Amherst's own "Mission: Improvable." Each college will perform for approximately 50 minutes.

The "Improv Jam" is Aaron Krebs' idea. He is the director of UMass' "Mission Improvable." He was part of an organizing committee for another "improv jam" last year, and wanted to have one here at UMass. Krebs researched on the Internet to see what other schools had improv groups.

"It will be a really big event. It is a great opportunity for people unfamiliar with the improv groups to become familiar with them," said Krebs.

Not only does the "Improv Jam" plan to bring a smile to your face, but it will benefit some who are unable to attend. All proceeds from this weekend's events will go to the AIDS services and programs of The Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts. The Family Planning Council was chosen for the donation because it is a local organization, based in Northampton.

The students involved in the improv have no scripts or lines to memorize. What comes out of their mouths is just as new to them as it is to on-lookers. There are skits that are acted out. The audience doesn't only watch, they also get involved. The details to the skits are provided by the audience.

You might think this would be terrifying, but according to Jeff Durand, a member of "Mission Improvable," "it's a lot of fun just to go up there, and having no script makes it very interesting."

The New England College Improv Jam will be held April 20 in the lower level of the Campus Center. The event is scheduled to begin at 2 p.m. and should end around 9 p.m. The cost of the event is $3 for students and $5 for non- students.

Dylan rocks loving NoHo crowd

Enduring entertainer plays favorites with exciting new ideas

BOB DYLAN
John M. Greene Hall, Smith College
April 15, 1997

Bob Dylan used to be so old about five years or more back. He had his problems. Often drunk in the late '80s–early '90s, he was not at the top of his game, and his lyrics came out garbled when he sang. It may have even seemed that he just didn't care about anything anymore. But he's "younger than that now" as the old song goes. The past five years have been hailed as "Dylan's Renaissance" and Tuesday Night at Smith was no exception to this present course that one of the most important musical and lyrical minds of our century has been on.

Dylan likes to play make–believe, especially in terms of his costume. In the past few years, he's strolled out on stage in flashy gold spandex pants, a fully silver suit, and at times, a t–shirt and jeans. It all depends on his mood. Tuesday night, he was in the mood for a ho–down. He strolled out in a white suit and hat that brought to mind a mix between Colonel Sanders and 1930s–'40s cowboy singer Gene Autry.

Right off, the band rocked out on the usual opener "Crash On The Levee (Down In The Flood)" from the 1967 sessions that produced the 1975 album The Basement Tapes. "Crash On The Levee" is a good choice for opener as it introduces what's going to be the sound and feel for the evening: straight–up blues–influenced rock and roll, with terrific extended solos by Mr. Dylan himself, who was always more known for his words than his musicianship. New drummer David Kemper (from the old Jerry Garcia Band) kept a bashing pulse all the way through.

Dylan's coherent singing (a bonus unto itself) helped along the country classic "Lay Lady Lay" as the first surprise for the evening. He took "Lay Lady Lay" into his heart and let out some fine, smooth singing as a companion to Bucky Baxter's pedal steel playing. The standard third song, "All Along The Watchtower" was ripped right through with a ferocity that has nothing to do with Dylan's original John Wesley Harding (1967) acoustic version, but more with Jimi Hendrix's or the Dead's heavy run–throughs.

The band moved through the mellow rocker "Shelter From The Storm" and the country–blues shuffle of "Watching The River Flow" (from 1979's Slow Train Coming) which preceded the usual sixth song in recent Dylan shows, "Silvio," a real basher that he co–wrote with the Dead's lyricist Robert Hunter, with more wailing solos by Dylan.

After "Silvio" came three acoustic numbers, with accompanying slides of Jewish temples being projected on the back screen. "Friend Of The Devil," the Dead's bluegrass–related number was taken more straight and mellow. "John Brown" presented Dylan's mastery of narrative songwriting and "Don't Think Twice, It's Alright" highly pleased the crowd, with a little more energy in it than the 1963 original. Dylan paid tribute to his friend Allen Ginsberg with projections of slides of the late, famous poet.

The momentum just rose after that. He pulled out two ripping songs from 1966's Blonde On Blonde: "Stuck Inside Of Mobile" and "Leopard–Skin Pillbox Hat" which were loved by all, sandwiching the tender "I'll Remember You."

"Like A Rolling Stone," the first encore brought all to their feet and everyone sang along. The sing–along continued with high spirits on the acoustic "It Ain't Me, Babe" and the usual show–closer "Rainy Day Women #12 & 35." That song's chorus "Everybody must get stoned!" was belted out with faith by all age groups. That's what this night was about: music spans all generations, especially Bob Dylan's.

Forests allow opportunity to enjoy nature

"Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain–tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green..."
— William Shakespeare

Climb up to the inspirational heights of Shakespeare's poetry and enjoy Spring's glorious sun from Pioneer Valley's mountain ridges. Experience golden face views of the Connecticut River, New England's majestic mountain peaks, colonial villages, and farmlands from the open summit–tops of Quabbin Park, D.A.R. State Forest and Northfield Mountain Recreation and Environment center.

Located off route 9 in Belchertown, Quabbin Park is a section of the Quabbin Watershed that is widely known for its quiet beauty and wild nature trails. These footpaths are marked by numbered junctions and painted blazes that offer hikers the opportunity to extensively explore the remote areas of the Quabbin Park.

Quabbin Hill (the most traveled route at the park) is a moderate climb through a densely populated forest of oak, maple, hickory, and white birch trees. The trail is marked with circular yellow blazes and steadily climbs up to a fire tower that is excellent for making scenic surveys of the valley below.

Quabbin Park also consists of a network of footpaths that snake through blueberry bushes and pass large glacial boulders to the Enfield Overlook or the Prescott Peninsula. The park's MDC Visitor Center is an excellent resource center full of interesting displays about the reservoir as well as informative literature and trail maps.

If you do not have the time to drive all the way out to Belchertown then check out West Quabbin Reservoir. From the center of Amherst one can reach West Quabbin Reservoir by driving east on Main Street until it becomes Amherst–Pelham Road.

A short uphill drive on Amherst–Pelham Road will bring you to the junction with US–202. Drive straight across the highway onto a gravel road that will lead down hill to a small parking area at Quabbin Reservation gate number 11.

The West Quabbin Reservoir offers hikers numerous hiking routes along stone walls and streams through wet lands which change with an increase in elevation from low level vegetation to hemlock and mountain laurel understory. Many of these footpaths also follow along the open summit–tops of Quabbin Park, D.A.R. State Forest and Northfield Mountain Recreation and Environment center.

Located on the western edge of the Pioneer Valley, D.A.R. State Forest is the best known camping and swimming recreation area in Western Mass. D.A.R. State Forest wraps around Upper Highland Lake offering the public deep solitude in hemlock woodland and fantastic vistas of the Connecticut River Valley.

Its acreage consists of about 14 miles of foot and bridle trails on dirt or gravel roads. At 1,697 feet, Moore's Hill is the forest's highest point, offering hikers not only super scenic views, but also a moderate climb over gentle slopes.

D.A.R State Forest's trail system marks all of its hiking routes with blue triangles, bridle trails with red triangles, and winter sport trails with orange triangles. The most direct way to reach the forest from Amherst, is to pick up route 9 in Northampton, follow it for 15 minutes to Goshen, and turn right (north) onto route 112. D.A.R State Forest's well marked entrance is located on the right just under a mile from route 9.

Northfield Mountain has more uses than any other mountain in the Pioneer Valley. Northeast Utilities owns the mountain as well as some of its surrounding area and uses it as a storage pump facility. Water is pumped

Ideas for alternative grilling this spring

I saw a budding leaf on a tree yesterday.

And you know what that means... winter clothes shed off our bodies like Arizona fans after a NCAA Championship (yes, the headline in the student newspaper was "Loud, Drunk, Naked Fans Storm Tucson"), and also, there is a certain je ne sais quoi in the air.

It's love, baby.

No, not that kind of love, you freakin' horny toads. I'm a man, but not a leg humpin' Pimp Daddy.

It's the love of barbecue. (Hey, work with me, my goombas, this is a food column, so I have to talk about food.)

It's the time of the year when the Finnish Kitchen moves into the cradle of Mother Nature — the backyard, the front porch, the parking lot, etc. It doesn't matter, anywhere where quality meat can be thrown on the barbie, and we can act like the primates we really are.

Like the spring weather so far this year, there are many different kinds of barbecue, and one kind is different than the other. I would like to demonstrate, through the everpresent power of the written word, some different styles and types of barbecue I've used in my tenure as a chef: in and out of the Finnish Kitchen.

I have to warn you, don't try any of this without a lot of supervision (hint: pah–tay), and truthfully, you have to possess the right equipment (hint: no implied hint towards a man's masculinity). All of what I'm going to show you has to be done with quality cooking equipment, not a hole in the ground. Quality cooking needs quality accessories. Some of this stuff can be prepared with a plain, old grill (i.e. charcoal), but one of my masterpieces needs a gas grill, with a two–tier setup inside.

From herbivores to carnivores, I'll try to touch upon every arena of culinary influence. Here we go:

• If you want to make a veggie feast that will have all of Central pounding at your door (in a politically correct manner of course), you can slice your favorite tuberous vegetables into steaks. Yeah, that's right, steaks.

Just take your eggplant, zucchini, squash, etc., and slice lengthwise into inch–wide steaks. The best type for this kind of slicing is in the real big, fat ones that you used to find in your mama's garden.

But, as always, the key is in the sauce. Ooh–la–la.

You can use your standard barbecue sauce, but the way I like it is this way. Before you slice all of your tube–steaks up, I have a dandy little treat for you to prepare. Take some olive oil, and add (to taste, of course, you always must taste while you cook) some salt, ground white/black pepper, balsamic vinegar and some freshly crushed garlic, and blend like a mad person with a whisk. Let the steaks marinate in the oil mixture for a little while, about fifteen minutes. Then, with your grill nice and hot, slap the tube–steaks on to the grill, and brush with the marinade. You don't want to over cook them, because the best vegetable is al dente (cooked yet still crisp, with mega–flavor), so flip them over when they get those nice grill marks.

Pre–prepare some Mexican rice, or toss fresh pasta with the marinade, and lay the steaks over the top. Magnifique.

Suggested Drink: White wine, of course, but a nice one. If you want a good buzz quick, try a chardonnay from the Kendall Jackson vineyards. Their chardonnay has a distinct taste, a little oak–ey for some wine connoisseurs out there, but it is wonderful — a 1992, preferably (reasonable price, but not of Gallo proportions).

• Now for my masterpiece — and you'll need the gas grill for this one. It sounds like a lot of work, and you're going to need some quality utensils like a meat thermometer, metal spatula, solid barbecue fork (with the handle and two prongs at the end), etc., but the effort is well worth it.

And guys, if you make your gals this one, spring will literally spring all over you after din–din.

For starters, you'll need two cornish game hens (or two chickens the size of a football) and enough new potatoes for two people (about a dozen and a half — about two pounds). You'll need to pre–prepare the Chateau potatoes, so take the potatoes, slice them in half, and put them on a wide sheet of aluminum foil (wide enough so you can completely wrap the potatoes). Next, slice up some Bermuda onions, and layer over the top of the potatoes. Sprinkle ground garlic and pepper on the potatoes–onions, and then drizzle olive oil over everything (not a lot, but enough to make the potatoes become crispy).

Fully wrap the Chateau potatoes with the foil — double wrapping if you have to, because the enclosure of the potatoes has to be complete, and set potatoes to the side.

Warm up the grill at high temperature, and then turn down to medium. Rub hens with olive oil, and sprinkle salt, pepper and tarragon (fresh, please) over the entire hen. Place the hens breast down on the grill, brown and turn over. When the hens have a nice golden brown color, take them off the grill. Proceed to double wrap the hens with aluminum foil, lengthwise and widthwise (hint: make sure you can't see any of the hen, com-

Internet provides humor

By Lisa M. Hamm

NEW YORK — It starts insidiously. An e-mail pops up in your mailbox with a mildly amusing joke. Then another, then another.

Soon you find yourself on the distribution list of some joker who collects gags and e-mails them to all his family, friends and colleagues, and the jokes start piling up in your mailbox.

Then the guy sitting in the cube across from you laughs in the middle of a workday, his "hee hee hee" echoing across the computer terminals.

Via e-mail, discussion groups and the World Wide Web, thousands of people across the globe are wasting an incredible amount of time having fun in front of their terminals.

Everyone's a comedian in cyberspace these days. But this emerging "sit-down" comedy has one distinct advantage over stand-up — it's impossible to throw a rotten tomato through a computer.

People spend hours of spare time compiling off-the-wall Web sites for public consumption.

Josh Rantanc, a computer science major at Ohio University, has created a website (http://voyager.cns.ohiou.edu/~jrantane/menu/pig.html) that will convert any Web site — and all its links — to pig Latin.

More than 95,000 people have visited the Mentos Gallery (http://www.karelia.com/mentos), a self-described "horrible butchering of great art" compiled by a group of UCLA graduate students who sneak a package of Mentos candy into works by artists from Michelangelo to Mondrian.

The cast of Falsettoland prepares for their debut at Smith College this weekend.

Smith College puts on Falsettoland

By Alex Iglesias
Collegian Correspondent

It's been musical fever in the valley for the past few weeks and now another hit is about to roll in with its "Teeny Tiny Band..."

Tonight the stage is set and the doors swing open as the Smith College Theater Department anxiously awaits to start its performance of William Finn and James LaPine's Off- Broadway smash, Falsettoland.

At the helm of the show is senior theater major, Director Liz Fenstermaker who is actually making her directing debut with Falsettoland. Unlike the extensively sized cast and crews of the University of Massachusetts Theater and Guild Departments, the Smith College Theater Department is of a smaller size — making rehearsals and set productions a handful. Never fear, for Fenstermaker is the "captain," having the utmost respect from her cast and crew as they see her different directing style. Ambition seems to be her forte.

The cast is composed of a lucky seven actors, ranging from three of the Five-Colleges: including the department's home school Smith, Hampshire, and two of the neighborhood boys from UMass — Keith Hallworth and Ben Hellman. Acting and voices should be at their finest with each cast member being veterans of the stage, not to mention the grueling rehearsal schedule these folks have been going through for the past few weeks.

Fifteen to 25 minutes of warm-ups, and not a second is lost as Fenstermaker asks for silence, so the hours of 'fun' rehearsal can begin. A strong advantage of Smith's Theater department is the one-on-one relationship between director, cast, and crew. Everyone is a student. It's a student run department like the UMass Theater Guild.

Musical accompaniment is at its basic form with a total of only three insruments. It's been said before — a "Teeny Tiny Band..." and it sure is tiny. A drum, a piano, and a synthesizer are still as unique as the original Off-Broadway version. Musical Director Dana Maiben is extremely enthusiastic about the show, due to the fact that there isn't much dialogue at all. Even so, the Opera-bound composer Maiben believes it still contains an "interesting dramatic punch." Falsettoland's music is filled with your typical happy go lucky, humorous lyrics that not only bring a smile, but bring about a few life-like fears.

New York City, homosexuals, and a drop of insomnia and this show begins to sound like another version of Rent — we'll consider it an earlier version of Rent. One of the early '80s, when the fear of the 'gay cancer' was starting to come into full effect. This show is one you definitely should have the opportunity to see. It will touch your hearts and help you see the ignorance which once occurred over this dreaded disease called AIDS.

The show will keep you on the edge of your seats, as you find yourself feeling for the characters. Falsettoland is a ground-breaking musical that brings to the theater a sensitive — and back then forbidden — subject as AIDS. Remember, the audience now knows more about the disease than the characters do.

Falsettoland will grab your hearts — twisting and turning them — and educate your minds at the same time. A show you definitely cannot miss.

"We're hoping for quite a few," said Heather Bell, the Smith Theater Department's publicist when asked about the expected turnout for the production.

Falsettoland plays at Smith College's Theatre 14, April 17-19, April 23-26, April 20 at 2 p.m. $5 Gen. Public / $3 Students & Seniors. For Info/Tickets call 585-3220/585-3374. Teenie tiny dolls, huge demand

Squealer the Pig and Kip the Cat popular happy meal toys

By Cliff Edwards
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Move over, Tickle Me Elmo; you're last year's news. The smaller siblings of Beanie Babies are creating a sensation at McDonald's.

A five-week stock of Teenie Beanies has evaporated after just five days at McDonald's restaurants in some areas, and "they probably won't be around much longer" anywhere else, said Lisam Howard, spokeswoman for the Oak Brook, Ill.-based chain.

"People are buying them like there is no tomorrow," she said. She estimated that nationwide, the supply probably will be exhausted in around two weeks from now.

McDonald's grabbed hold of the hottest kid craze of '97 to lure tiny spenders and their parents into its restaurants.

The chain said it had ordered nearly 100 million of the colorful beanbag toys — its largest order ever for a promotion — in anticipation of heavy demand.

The company on Friday recommended to its owner-operators that they limit the sale of Happy Meals to 10 after some customers bought them by the caseload to get the Teenie Beanies. But even that didn't stop the frenzy, Howard said.

Ty Inc., also of Oak Brook, brought out the first Beanie Babies — characters like Squealer the Pig and Kip the Cat — in 1994. By now, more than 100 different versions have come out, stores can't keep them in stock, and versions of the models that have been retired command big bucks with collectors.

The McDonald's Teenie Beanies, smaller than the originals, come in 10 versions including Patti the Platypus and Pinky the Flamingo.

Two animals were to go on sale each week until supplies ran out.

But different restaurants sold different versions, and some parents reported they spent much of the weekend driving around to get all 10 versions.

NBC wins rating wars with "ER" episode

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — To crack the top 10 in the Nielsen rankings last week, a television show either had to be on NBC's Thursday night schedule, be a newsmagazine or feature an angel.

Television viewers welcomed original episodes of "ER" back from a lengthy absence. It was the week's most-watched show, enabling NBC to win the week with a 9.8 rating and 17 share, Nielsen Media Research said Tuesday.

CBS finished a strong second with a 9.1 rating and 16 share. ABC was third with a 7.7 rating and 13 share, followed by Fox's 6.5 rating and 11 share.

It was a particularly disastrous week for ABC, which finished with the lowest rating in decades for one of the top three networks during a television season.

As frequently happens in weeks without reruns, the top five programs for the week were NBC's Thursday night shows. That included the premiere of "Fired Up," a comedy starring Sharon Lawrence.

"60 Minutes" led four newsmagazines in the top 10, including two editions of "Dateline NBC."

CBS' telecast of Tiger Woods' victory lap in the Masters golf tournament would have been the week's third-rated show. But since it did not start in prime time, it is not included in Nielsen's rankings.

Two freshman programs solidified their recent success: CBS' "Everybody Loves Raymond" continued to benefit from its move to Monday night with a 19th place showing, and Fox's animated "King of the Hill" outrated its Sunday night partner, "The Simpsons."

Without a Thursday night time slot, NBC's "Single Guy" plummeted to 75th place in the ratings, having lost more than half its audience with a shift to Wednesday night.

Among the emerging networks, UPN had a 3.2 rating and 5 share and the WB had a 2.4 rating and 4 share.

A rating point represents 970,000 households, or 1 percent of the nation's estimated 97 million TV homes. Share is the percentage of those televisions tuned to a given show during a specified time period.

NBC's "Nightly News" won the evening news competition with a 7.9 rating and 18 share, the 16th week in a row it has either won or tied for the lead. ABC's "World News Tonight" had a 7.6 rating and 17 share, while CBS' "Evening News" had a 6.7 rating and 15 share.

For the week of April 7-13, the top 10 shows, their networks and ratings, were:

"ER," NBC, 23.6; "Seinfeld," NBC, 21.7; "Fired Up," NBC, 18.8; "Friends," NBC, 16.3; "Suddenly Susan," NBC, 15.7; "60 Minutes," CBS, 15.2; "Touched By an Angel," CBS, 13.7; "PrimeTime Live," ABC, 12.9; "Dateline NBC — Friday," NBC, 12.4; "Dateline NBC — Tuesday," NBC, 12.1.

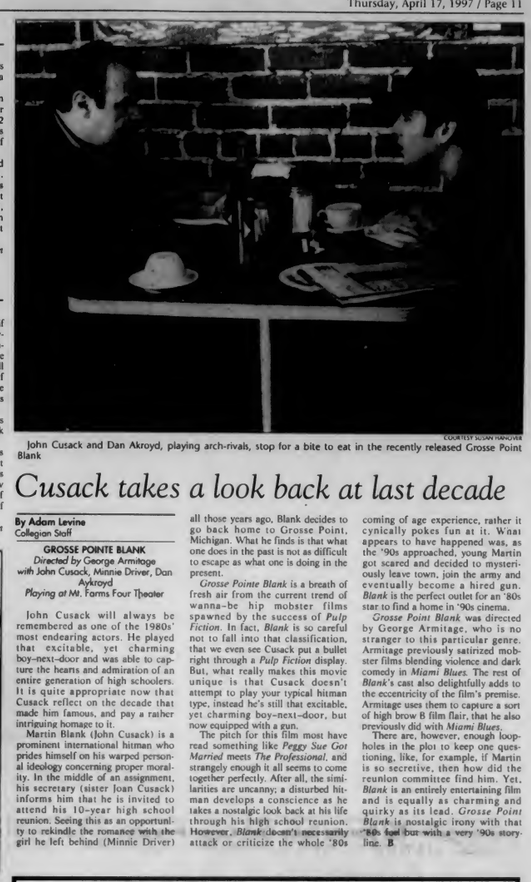
plete enclosure is needed).



Next, place the wrapped hens on the top shelf inside the grill hood, and place the Chateau potatoes on the grill. Knock down the grill temperature as low as it will go, close the grill lid (hint: don't open the grill lid, because the heat needs to be concentrated), and let everything cook for 20 minutes. Flip over potatoes on grill, and check your hens with the meat thermometer at the thickest part of the breast meat (it's covered with foil, fool, so wing/estimate it).

If they're done, take them off, and they will stay warm in the foil — if they're not, let 'em cook. Let everything cook for another 20–25 minutes, and take off the grill. The entire meal should be done, but unwrap all parties involved, and make sure. If they're not, finish off in the microwave. Don't worry, the taste is grilled in.

If you want some more veggies with the meal, use the tube-steak idea previously used in this column.

Suggested Drink: Summertime is on the horizon, so grab a nice wheat beer. Samuel Adams Cherry Wheat is nice, but a traditional microbrew might be better. Add a little slice of lemon to it for that certain dash of panache.

John Cusack and Dan Akroyd, playing arch-rivals, stop for a bite to eat in the recently released Grosse Point Blank

Cusack takes a look back at last decade

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

GROSSE POINTE BLANK
Directed by George Armitage with John Cusack, Minnie Driver, Dan Aykroyd
Playing at Mt. Farms Four Theater

John Cusack will always be remembered as one of the 1980s' most endearing actors. He played that excitable, yet charming boy-next-door and was able to capture the hearts and admiration of an entire generation of high schoolers. It is quite appropriate now that Cusack reflect on the decade that made him famous, and pay a rather intriguing homage to it.

Martin Blank (John Cusack) is a prominent international hitman who prides himself on his warped personal ideology concerning proper morality. In the middle of an assignment, his secretary (sister Joan Cusack) informs him that he is invited to attend his 10-year high school reunion. Seeing this as an opportunity to rekindle the romance with the girl he left behind (Minnie Driver) all those years ago, Blank decides to go back home to Grosse Point, Michigan. What he finds is that what one does in the past is not as difficult to escape as what one is doing in the present.

Grosse Pointe Blank is a breath of fresh air from the current trend of wanna-be hip mobster films spawned by the success of Pulp Fiction. In fact, Blank is so careful not to fall into that classification, that we even see Cusack put a bullet right through a Pulp Fiction display. But, what really makes this movie unique is that Cusack doesn't attempt to play your typical hitman type, instead he's still that excitable, yet charming boy-next-door, but now equipped with a gun.

The pitch for this film must have read something like Peggy Sue Got Married meets The Professional, and strangely enough it all seems to come together perfectly. After all, the similarities are uncanny; a disturbed hitman develops a conscience as he takes a nostalgic look back at his life through his high school reunion. However, Blank doesn't necessarily attack or criticize the whole '80s coming of age experience, rather it cynically pokes fun at it. What appears to have happened was, as the '90s approached, young Martin got scared and decided to mysteriously leave town, join the army and eventually become a hired gun. Blank is the perfect outlet for an '80s star to find a home in '90s cinema.

Grosse Point Blank was directed by George Armitage, who is no stranger to this particular genre. Armitage previously satirized mobster films blending violence and dark comedy in Miami Blues. The rest of Blank's cast also delightfully adds to the eccentricity of the film's premise. Armitage uses them to capture a sort of high brow B film flair, that he also previously did with Miami Blues.

There are, however, enough loopholes in the plot to keep one questioning, like, for example, if Martin is so secretive, then how did the reunion committee find him. Yet, Blank is an entirely entertaining film and is equally as charming and quirky as its lead. Grosse Point Blank is nostalgic irony with that '80s feel but with a very '90s storyline. B tured the New England Regional Championship at the University of New Hampshire. They finished the year undefeated and qualified for the national tournament in Arizona next week. This marks the first time in history the UMass club has qualified for national competition.

On the way to the nationals, they had to defeat a strong Dartmouth team. The Big Green was ranked No. 2 in the nation and was the same squad that beat UMass last year. The Minutemen exacted revenge, toppling the Ivy League powerhouse 15–8 in rally scoring.

UMass faced the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the finals, disposing of M.I.T. 15–8, 15–3. Offensively, Eric Blahut and co–captain Jason Greenlaw stepped up and played inspired. During a time out, Greenlaw told his team, "I don't care where the ball is, set me!" Setters Damian Gasparatto and co–captain Micheal Shipee granted his request and Greenlaw delivered.

Also delivering kills were hitters Wayne Chesna and Chris Blute. In the blocking department, J.C. Laven, Chris Lu, and Patric Morea led the way. Defensive specialists Mike Harrington, Rob Setembro, and Pedro Fernandes showed why they were specialists and kept any ball that went near them in play long enough for UMass to score.

"When we play like that, nobody can touch us," Blute said.

Cheering off to Nationals

• The UMass women's cheerleading team finished in seventh place in the all–girl division of the NCA Collegiate National Cheerleading Championship on April 3–7.

This marks the team's second straight collegiate national appearance. Last year, the 21–member co–ed cheerleading squad took ninth among 19 Division I teams, finishing 14th in the nation.

The 15–member dance team captured seventh place among 29 teams in the Div. I dance competition. Dance team member Jessica Suraski (Cranston, R.I.) took third place in the individual competition in a field of 50 women.

The top 10 teams from each division were chosen for final round competition which will be aired April 20 at 1:30 p.m. on CBS.

NCAA wants Tark's trial out of Las Vegas

By Brendan Riley
Associated Press

CARSON CITY — The NCAA urged the Nevada Supreme Court yesterday to move a trial of former UNLV basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian's lawsuit against the organization away from Las Vegas because the city still loves him.

NCAA lawyer Stewart Fitts argued that Tarkanian, now coaching at Fresno State, remains a "hometown hero" in Las Vegas and the NCAA remains "the embodiment of evil."

Tarkanian was known for towel-chewing and other antics as coach at UNLV from 1973 to 1992. He also faced a lengthy NCAA investigation that focused on his recruiting practices.

A survey in February 1996 showed 6-1 support in Las Vegas for Tarkanian over the NCAA even though he has been gone for several years, Fitts said, adding that in Reno — where he wants the trial held — it's 2-1 in Tarkanian's favor.

Dan Polsenberg, lawyer for Tarkanian and his wife, Lois, said he couldn't buy Fitts' argument of overwhelming prejudice. He said the trial should begin as scheduled, on June 23. It's set to run for six weeks.

Polsenberg was joined by lawyer Kathy Freberg, who said the high court would be hard pressed to find that Clark District Judge Jack Lehman exhibited some "manifest abuse of discretion" in refusing to move the trial.

Freberg also rejected as false an NCAA claim that there has been inflammatory, anti-NCAA publicity in Las Vegas for 20 years. She also said a pollster hired by the Tarkanians discounted the NCAA survey indicating continued overwhelming support for the coach.

And even if a "rabid basketball fan" turns up among prospective jurors, Freberg said it's easy enough to ensure that person doesn't wind up as an actual juror.

The high court will issue its ruling at a later date. Given the fact that the trial is set this summer, Polsenberg asked for a swift decision.

Carroll prepares for draft

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO — Don't expect Pete Carroll to throw a tantrum if he's overruled in the NFL draft. The New England Patriots' new coach is content to defer to the personnel people. Bill Parcells wasn't, a major reason he's now calling the shots for the New York Jets.

Carroll has been too busy hiring assistant coaches and evaluating veterans to spend enough time assessing the players who will be chosen Saturday and Sunday.

So Bobby Grier, the team's vice president of player personnel, and his staff will have more input than in future years.

"It's only natural," said Carroll, who took over Feb. 3. "We are not going to be as valuable to them as we will in other years, so the process will be different next year," he added. "But, as far as me saying, 'Boy, next year I'm going to take over this sucker,' no, that's not what I'm thinking at all."

Parcells, who feuded with owner Robert Kraft, got out of his contract after the team's loss in the Super Bowl to the Green Bay Packers.

Parcells was livid in last year's draft when Kraft made the decision to take wide receiver Terry Glenn with the seventh pick of the first round. Grier had recommended Glenn, but Parcells prefered to have a defensive player.

The rift between owner and coach never closed after that, although without Glenn, it's unlikely the Patriots would have made it to New Orleans.

Will Carroll be more understanding?

"He's not getting in the meeting room," the coach joked about the owner. Then he added that he wouldn't mind Kraft's input. As well as Glenn worked out, the Patriots now need defense. With the 29th pick, the Patriots would like to get a cornerback, one of the deepest positions in the draft.

That need was painfully evident on Green Bay's second play of the Super Bowl when Andre Rison raced by Otis Smith for a 54-yard touchdown reception.

Smith remains, and the Patriots also signed Steve Israel, an unrestricted free agent from San Francisco, where Carroll was defensive coordinator.

"If we could come up with a corner, we'd like to do that," he said. "We're always looking for pass rushers. In the 29th spot, I'm not sure it's going to be there."

The Patriots tried to avoid the need to draft an offensive lineman by offering restricted free agent Rich Braham a contract. But Cincinnati matched the offer.

New England has the 29th pick in each of the seven rounds, plus the first in the third and fourth. But there isn't much room for rookies to make an impact.

The Patriots' offensive starting lineup seems set with quarterback Drew Bledsoe, running back Curtis Martin, wide receivers Glenn and Shawn Jefferson, tight end Ben Coates and a young offensive line.

"It's going to be hard for guys to get on this team and play," Carroll said. "We don't need a guy to come in and take a position but, if we do, we're going to help ourselves."

In Carroll's only other draft as a head coach, Dick Steinberg made the picks for the Jets in 1994. Steinberg, who died in 1995, used to do that for the Patriots, and Grier was part of his staff.

"Bobby has proven that he is very capable," Carroll said. "I think it's going to be a very smooth process."

"One on one I felt good," Glass said. "I felt great. It was important for us to come out and score in the third. We came to play for 60 minutes today and it felt good. It felt real good."

Harvard could not do any damage to UMass' lead in the fourth quarter, as Jon Lopez notched the Crimson's only goal. Jason Heinze and McKeefrey each tallied for the Minutemen.

UMass coach Greg Cannella, however, implored his team after the game not to be satisfied with the win. Despite improving to 6–4 — while Harvard falls to 5–4 — Cannella said his players must now prepare to face Notre Dame on Sunday (1:30 p.m.) rather than celebrate a victory.

"I told them 'Don't be satisfied with a win and celebrate and carry it into practice tomorrow,'" Cannella said. "I'm not satisfied, they should not be satisfied. We have a long way to go and it is a big game for us on Sunday."

■ softball

This will not be the first time of late that UMass has faced a potent lineup. Last week, Henderson and Wegner tamed a Virginia Tech team that batted .285, while hitting nine homeruns. The tandem allowed only two runs in 12 innings of work en route to a Minutewomen sweep.

Simply stated, pitching wins ballgames.

■ baseball

Turner made his second home run of the day count. With two on and two outs in the fifth, Turner worked the count full, and then took Cameron over the rightfield fence to make it a 7–6 game.

"I just got the pitch up," Cameron said. "Maine's a very aggressive team at the plate, and they're real good about taking advantage of mistakes."

But the Minutemen saved Cameron in the bottom of the inning. Wolcott homered to give the Minutemen an 8–6 lead, and second baseman Muchie Dagliere's sacrifice fly drove in David Giglio to make it 9–6.

UMass jumped out to the early 7–2 lead after three innings, paced by Corrie's homer. Corrie added another RBI in the third when he reached on a catcher's interference, scoring UMass rightfielder Pete Gautreau.

Massachusetts 9, Maine 8

Maine jumped on UMass starter Adam Robinson for five runs in the top of the first, but a Doug Clark grand slam, his third of the year, helped give the Minutemen a sweep of the doubleheader.

Clark went 2–for–3 with four RBIs, and now has nine home runs and 42 RBIs on the year. Freshman hurler Travis Veracka pitched three innings of two–hit relief for his second win in a UMass uniform.

"Maine is much more improved batter at the plate from last year," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "They were swinging the bats well. I'm just glad we have Doug Clark on our side."

Clark provided his heroics during the third, with the Minutemen down 6–0. Wolcott and third baseman Ryan Thistle led off with singles, and after Gorrie grounded into a fielder's choice, senior catcher Jason Kudrikow drew a walk to load the bases. Maine starter Bob Wiles then walked Dagliere to force in the first run.

Clark worked the count to 3–and–2, fouling off pitch after pitch, before taking Wiles deep over the rightfield fence to make it 6–5.

UMass built off the momentum from Clark's homerun and scored four more runs in the fourth. Aaron Braunstein led off with his ninth home run of the year to tie the game at 6– 6, and Jason Kudrikow gave them a one run lead with a single. Clark then got a little lucky, when his deep pop fly to left fell between the Maine left and centerfielders, scoring two runs.

Turner's fourth home run of the day made it 9–8 after six innings. Steve Levy got the first two outs of the seventh, but let up a single and two walks, loading the bases. Sophomore Bill Cooke came on to get the final out.

matches played throughout her career, and was a strong performer in doubles competition as well. This season, she held the No. 4 singles spot, going 7–2, and in the fall posted a mark of 8–4. Even with a 15–6 senior year campaign that was incredibly strong, she wanted more.

"I would have liked to finish my senior year totally undefeated," Durant said. "You try to accomplish everything, but you can never be happy with what you have, so you're always trying to do better."

Dixon knows that she'll be losing a senior whose dedication and work ethic exceeds many. A person who was not only genuine as a tennis player, but as a person as well.

"I've been really pleased with her over the years, and her results have been very good," Dixon said. "Mostly what you can expect from Liz is that she is going to be there, everyday, and that's been wonderful, and I think the kids are going to be sad to see her go."

Durant has accomplished a tremendous amount in her four years at UMass. She had great court presence, one who can hit the cover off the ball with her forehand, helping her team win its first ever New England Championship last season.

Durant was ready for the challenge that had faced her from day one and said she enjoyed the experience of beginning something special.

"I think that growing with a new team is better than just coming on to a team that's already built, and that leaving it knowing that it could be a nationally ranked team," Durant said.

Durant's future looks bright.

"School was definitely number one to me, because I know tennis will always be a part of my life, but I'm definitely not playing professional," Durant admitted. "But I would like to use my tennis towards something in the business world and my sport management degree as well."

Durant came to UMass only one year after coach Dixon and the bond which grew between the pair stretched beyond the court.

"She taught me team ethics and morals, and to do the right thing all the time, and really proving something out there," Durant said. "She taught me about putting the team first and setting your priorities straight, so you know what your principles are and you're getting things done."

The memories that Durant will have from the University and from UMass women's tennis are great, along with the knowing that she played an important part in the rebuilding the program. She doesn't feel that she's left anything behind.

"I love my friends I've made out here, my sport management department was phenomenal, and I think that overall, this school, I took it for all it was, and I got everything out of it," Durant said. "I think I pretty much got everything I expected out of college."

Liz Durant will certainly leave a legacy behind her in the women's tennis program. With the accomplishments that she made, and the way that she became such a big part of the program and to her teammates, she will also leave behind many memories.

"I hold something special with each person and I just hope that everyone knows that I was very into the team and I always wanted what was best for the team, and I came on this team for a reason and that was to prove that UMass tennis was going to grow and was going to be successful and the sky's the limit," Durant said. "I just hope that people remember that I was part of the team, and that I started a team to rebuild it, and that I gave everything that I could, and I am definitely going to miss it."

Minutewomen attempted a comeback bid, but it was much too late. Her two goals were academic, and all the freshman could get out of her effort was numbers.

"We did great things in the first half, but then we get into these runs," Pearsall said. "And that's another frustrating part of all this, and is another thing that just makes us speechless.

"Unfortunately, we didn't come out to play in the second half, and we didn't come out with that aggressiveness. We weren't down by much, and we've been able to score four and five goals in a row. We are very capable people of doing that," she said.

JOHNA RANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

Yesterday, senior tri–captain Erica Bryan and the Minutewomen lost to the visiting Flying Dutchwomen.

March 21–April 20

You're dismissive to group endeavors this week. You don't even need to take a prominent role if you're not feeling up to it. You're lucky in small risks early in the week, but do your homework before taking on anything larger.

Lax bludgeons Crimson

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — Last year Brendan Glass' five goal effort wasn't enough of a push for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team to beat Harvard. A year later four goals from Glass was more than the Crimson could take as the Minutemen romped 12–6 at Ohiri Field yesterday.

Massachusetts	12
Harvard	6

Glass, who scored three of his four goals in the third quarter was not UMass' only multiple scorer, but he was the most prolific. Chris Grande had two goals in the game — the ninth time in 10 contests he accomplished that feat, while Casey Costello and Mike McKeefrey each added a pair to help the Minutemen.

McKeefrey started the scoring just over a minute into the first quarter with a tally off a P.G. Massey assist. Jim Kennedy made it 2–0 with 10:12 remaining in the period before Grande nailed both of his scores.

Harvard's Owen Leary got by UMass goalie John Kasselakis with one second left in the quarter to put the Crimson on the board.

Three minutes into the second quarter, Costello put the Minutemen back up by four, but Leary again beat Kasselakis to bring the score to 5–2.

Glass started his scoring spree when Jay Neegus hit him with an assist in front of the Harvard cage with 8:05 left before halftime.

Doug Crofton added another for the Crimson, but Costello was able to find the back of the Harvard net with two seconds remaining before the intermission to give UMass a four–goal halftime advantage.

Much to Harvard's dismay, the third quarter was all Glass. The senior attackman opened the second half with a goal off a Kennedy assist just over three minutes into the period.

Three minutes later he found the Crimson cage, this time with an unassisted shot.

Max von Zuben and Jim Bevilacqua each tallied for Harvard, but Glass still had another shot in him. He ended his scoring run with 2:04 left in the third to put the Minutemen up 10–5.

Minutemen sweep Black Bears

By Luke Marsdidh

Massachusetts shortstop Brad Gorrie was a little more fired up than usual before yesterday's doubleheader with Maine, because NESN came to Earl E. Lorden Field to do a story on the senior shortstop.

Massachusetts	9
Maine	8

It's not often that the Minutemen get much TV exposure, so Gorrie responded by going showtime.

Gorrie's diving stop of a Black Bear line shot with the bases–loaded and two outs in the bottom of the seventh of game two lifted UMass past Maine 9–8, giving the Minutemen a sweep of the Black Bears and pushing their winning streak to seven games.

Gorrie ended game one by turning a double play with two runners on, and smacked a three run homer in the Minutemen victory in the opener, also a 9–8 score. UMass survived four home runs from Maine left–fielder Rex Turner, and is now 17–6, 6–3 in the A–10.

Massachusetts	9
Maine	8

Massachusetts 9, Maine 8

Paced by four RBIs from Gorrie, UMass smack by Maine (17–17) 9–8 in the first game. Junior Matt Wolcott went 3–4 with his first home run of the season, and sophomore righthander Ryan Cameron went six innings to pick up the win in his first career start. Jason Bennett pitched a perfect seventh for his second save.

Cameron took a 9–6 lead into the seventh, but let up a double and three singles before being pulled for Bennett. With two runners on, Bennett got Turner to fly out to Gorrie, before inducing the game–ending double play. Cameron (2–0), given the starting nod after striking out eight and letting up only two earned runs in his last four appearances, struck out five Black Bears in his debut.

"I felt good out there," Cameron said. "It was a new experience, but I settled down [after some early nerves]."

Flying Dutchwomen fly past Minutewomen

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

Pick a sport, any sport — no, work with me here, people.

If you picked a sport that has a goalkeeper, then let's go with this. One of the most rare occurrences in a sport that sports a goalie is when said goalie scores a point.

Massachusetts	5
Hofstra	12

Whether it is an assist or a goal, it does not matter, because when it happens, it really hurts.

That is just one of the aspects that really hurt in yesterday afternoon's 12–5 loss to Hofstra for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (2–6), and for the rest of those aspects — take a number.

The number for the Flying Dutchwomen (7–5) today was 30, as in senior goalie Stephanie Clarke. The keeper recorded 20 quality saves, and one assist on senior Tierney Clark's second goal of the game at the 41:23 mark; the low point of an afternoon of lows.

But, one highlight for UMass today was the play of freshmen midfielder Rebecca Minaker (8 goals, 2 assists, 10 points for the season), who netted a career–high four goals in the loss. Sophomore attacker Laura Korutz continued her quiet, yet consistent, offensive play with a goal and two assists (10g, 9a, 19pts), with junior tri–captain Jen Bowen adding an assist to her 12 points this season (7g, 5a).

Assistant coach Jill Pearsall had a difficult time explaining the loss.

"I am speechless," Pearsall said. "Its a tough one to put in words. In the first half, we really started out strong. It was a close game, we were very intense, and played aggressively. And, then it just came back to team effort.

"There's a couple of players that really play intensely for us, and are looking to pull their teammates up, but are then being brought down. And that's frustrating, and not just for the coaches, but for the players."

Simply said, this was a golden opportunity for the Minutewomen to pick up a win, and they did not. But, it was not for the lack of trying, and in the first half, UMass' offense came out fired up.

The set offense consistently pressured Clarke, but the senior goalie came up with big save after big save. Yet, after a counterattack goal that put Hofstra up 1–0 at the 8:11 mark, Minaker scored her first goal of the day on a beautiful left to right cut in front of the net, on an assist from Korutz.

The Flying Dutchwomen took control, pulling off a 5–0 run to put the game up at 6–1. Minaker was a one–man show with 4:07 left in the first half, pulling a right to left spin move on her defender to get the team within four goals at the half.

A close enough margin to make a comeback, but the second half did not hold good fortune, and Hofstra outscored UMass by a 6–3 score. The Flying Dutchwomen took advantage of a lost possession and ground balls, and then Clarke got into the other side of the game. One of the most inane rules in women's lacrosse is there is no time limit on the goalie holding the ball.

Therefore, Clarke was able to slowly waltz up the field, feeding the other Clark from her spot in the face off circle to put the visitors up 11–3. Clark made a run behind the defense to beat Clarke's counterpart, freshmen keeper Megan Haggerty (7 saves). Following Minaker's lead, the

Pitchers lead team to URI

By Corey Peter Goodman
Collegian Staff

To the naked eye, softball appears to be a very simple game. To win, you must hit better, field better, run better, and keep the other team from scoring more runs than you. But there is one undeniable, universal key to softball: pitching wins ballgames.

Don't believe it? Just ask the Massachusetts softball team's last seven opponents — they all have been stopped dead in their tracks after running into two brick walls, known to us as pitchers Danielle Henderson and Liz Wagner.

Today at 3 p.m., UMass looks to tack on two more wins to their 13–game unbeaten streak when Henderson, Wagner and the Minutewomen bus it on down to Kingston, R.I. to lock horns with the Rams of Rhode Island.

Henderson and Wagner make up the A–10's most overpowering pitching duo this season.

Henderson leads the team with a baffling 1.22 ERA, while Wagner boasts a 2.54 mark. The two combine to surrender under two runs a game, at 1.80.

Henderson has emerged this season as the A–10's top hurler, recognized with three A–10 Pitcher of the Week awards. Her stat sheet reads 10 wins, 1 perfect game, and 6 shutouts. Henderson is also on pace to shatter Kelly Daut's 1995 strikeout record of 194.

Henderson and Wagner's efforts, accompanied by a resurgent offensive attack, has told the story of UMass' unbelievable comeback run this month, that saw their record climb from a disappointing 7–15 mark, all the way up to staggering 19–15–1, 7–0 in the A–10.

Over this period, UMass has outscored their opponents a whopping 75–12.

Junior Kim Gutridge has placed herself at the forefront of UMass' offensive run, being named A–10 Player of the Week this past week. Gutridge hit .429 in seven games for the Minutewomen. She leads the team with a .311 batting average, and 24 RBIs.

The Rams will pose a decent threat to UMass this weekend.

URI (14–14–1, 2–2–1) will start one of the A–10's stronger lineups against UMass.

Four starters bat well over .300. This list includes Kellie Cookus at .400, Lisa Smith at .370, Susan Kessler at .344, and Kathy Bailey at .342.

The creme of this crop is Cookus, who has a team–high 40 hits, half of which have gone for extra bases, highlighted by 18 doubles.

The pitching staff is not too shabby either. The Rams can throw any one of four pitchers at you. Their top hurler is Kathy Bailey, with 6 wins, and a 2.52 ERA. Susan Chymbor and Johanna Boisselle have also been tough to hit, with ERAs of 2.08 and 2.12, respectively. Their team ERA is 2.59.

Durant lead team from start to N. E. Championship

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

When you think of the Massachusetts women's tennis team and its recent resurgence, there are certain names that come to mind. There are certain people that brought this program back up, and helped to reinstate it from the days when there were weeds growing out from under the courts.

One of those people is a person that has dedicated her life to UMass tennis, the school itself, and to the difficult task of rebuilding a team that started out with nothing over four years ago.

We're talking about a person who not only has the highest GPA on the team, but is a member of the academic honor roll. We're talking about a player who has won over 67 percent of her matches played, and has only missed practice three times in four years.

That person is the lone senior on the UMass women's tennis team, Liz Durant. From the time she set foot on the upper Boyden courts, she knew that this was where she wanted to be for her college career, and to build her future.

"I pretty much chose UMass because of the sports management program, and I fell in love with the campus, and I loved the team when I came here on my recruit visit," Durant said.

Durant took over a responsibility as one of the few beginners that was going to be called upon in putting UMass tennis back on the map.

"I knew it was going to be a growing team, and with the freshmen coming in after me, we built up the program," Durant said.

Coach Judy Dixon had only praise for the senior that was the first player the team recruited, and her contributions that have made UMass tennis what it is today.

"Liz was the first player that I recruited, and she helped develop the program," Dixon said. "She has been the workhorse of the team since the day that she arrived."

Durant was a person with a great competitive spirit that ignited her teammates — her tennis ability spoke for itself. She came to UMass with a goal, and thrived on the level of achievement that the team has attained.

"The whole reason why I started playing tennis in the first place was so I could get a scholarship and come to school and play tennis on a college team," Durant said. "The level is much more competitive, and we're playing tougher schools now than we did, and I'm happy we built the team up."

Durant has won 62 of 93 singles

Club lax falls to Cadets

• Twelve hours after returning from a solid winning (8–5) performance at Williams College on April 8, the Massachusetts Lacrosse Club got back on the bus and roared off to do battle with the Cadets of the Army junior varsity team at West Point. Despite an equal performance between both teams for roughly three quarters of the match, a lull in second quarter action cost UMass the win.

UMass got off to a great start, with Jason McKenzie netting the first goal of the game off an assist by Trevor Spiers. While the UMass defense adjusted to Army's out– front isolation offense, they were slow in execution. Army fired off three of five goals in the second with the isolation set up, yet the Minutemen, who had a goal recalled for having a shooter in the crease, could not recover, falling 14–7.

Though penalties hurt UMass, with three Cadet goals coming on man–down advantages. The defense, sparked by defensemen Erik Becker and Paul Barron, backed by Mike Nowlan's goalkeeping kept the squad together. Sunday's match against the Coast Guard Academy was rained out. The team traveled to Cambridge yesterday to face the Harvard J.V. squad and hosts lacrosse powerhouse Bridgton Academy on Lower Boyden Field No. 2 on April 19 at 1 p.m.

Canadian Indians protest government

TORONTO (AP) — Native Indians who accuse the government of ignoring their problems set up roadblocks and staged rallies during a national day of protest yesterday.

The biggest traffic jam occurred outside Prime Minister Jean Chretien's residence in Ottawa. Cars were backed up nearly two miles during the morning rush hour while Indian activists handed out pamphlets to motorists inching past their checkpoint.

Roadblocks also were set up on several Indian reserves, including some on the Trans–Canada Highway. A protest march took place in Winnipeg, and native women in Terrace, British Columbia, supported the protest with a traditional dance.

Later in the day, protest leaders staged a sit–in at the parliamentary building housing Chretien's office, demanding that the prime minister meet with them. The seven chiefs ended the occupation after getting a promise that Chretien would respond to their demand today.

Aborted space mission will resume in July

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA said yesterday it will send the space shuttle Columbia back into orbit in July with the same crew and same experiments that flew on this month's aborted science mission.

A defective power generator forced Columbia to return to Earth on April 8, four days after blasting off on what should have been a 16–day flight.

It will be the first time in 36 years of U.S. human spaceflight that an entire crew has flown in orbit together twice.

NASA is targeting July 1 or so for Columbia's launch. Shuttle managers bumped some other missions later this year and early next, in order to squeeze in the flight.

NASA, meanwhile, still is aiming for a May 15 launch of Atlantis to the Russian space station Mir despite bolt problems.

During an inspection of Atlantis' engine compartment, technicians discovered that some bolt holes had become too long, NASA spokesman Joel Wells said yesterday. The same problem was discovered on two other shuttles and, in fact, prompted this week's check of Atlantis.

UM student arrested for assault; Taylor pleads innocent in case

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

After a month and a half of entering residents' unlocked rooms and allegedly sexually assaulting some women during early morning hours in John Quincy Adams Residence Hall in Southwest Residential Area, a 26–year–old University of Massachusetts student and JQA resident was arrested on Wednesday.

Waco O. Taylor, of Spencer, who is being held at the Hampshire County Jail and House of Correction on $10,000 cash bail, pleaded innocent in Northampton District Court to six counts of daytime breaking and entering, eight counts of night time breaking and entering, three counts of assault and battery, two counts of indecent assault and battery and one count of assault with intent to rape.

According to Assistant Northwestern District Attorney Ian Polumbaum, Taylor originally went to court to protest restraining orders from victims of his alleged assaults.

"When he came to court yesterday to challenge restraining orders someone recognized him... and there was a warrant for his arrest," Polumbaum said.

The dates of the offenses range from Feb. 14 to March 29. However, the UMass Police Department did not receive their first victim report until the last weekend of March.

Chief of Police John Luippold said, "Some of what we heard happened right before spring break, but incidents were not reported until the last week in March."

"At least 11 [out of 12] of the women picked out his photo out of a line up of nine pictures," Polumbaum said.

A victim speaks out

One victim who wished to remain unidentified said Taylor allegedly entered her room on the night before spring break.

"I was asleep, and I think it was about 4:30 a.m. My door was unlocked and I didn't hear him come in, I didn't hear anything," she said. "He took his pants and shoes off and was in his boxer shorts, and with the sheet over me he crawled into bed."

She added that when she woke up, Taylor had begun to pull down the sheets to her waist.

"...Then he started to touch me and kiss my back. I woke up and asked him who he was and told him to get out," the victim said.

She said that she didn't report the incident until after her Resident Assistant (RA) warned residents to keep their doors locked. She then told her RA what had happened to her.

"I never really reported it, the police tracked me down," the victim said.

"I still feel safe in my building and I'm not scared. I didn't realize how serious it was until a few days after it happened," she said.

Housing Services responds

"Several reports started coming in during the last week of March and that was an indication that there was a pattern developing and that this individual wasn't just systematically targeting certain residents," Director of Housing Services Michael Gilbert said.

"When students on the floors started comparing notes, a few more came forward. First there were three or four reports, then we had a dozen reports," Gilbert said. "They realized that they all had similar experiences and at that point it became very evident that there was a pattern emerging," Gilbert said.

After a number of women reported being assaulted, the University obtained a restraining order against Taylor for the entire Southwest Residence Area.

In addition to the court–issued restraining order, the Dean of Students also has the authority to decide how to best protect the campus from incidents such as this.

Gilbert said the reason a restraining order was obtained for Southwest and not just JQA building was that "the Dean of Students decided that a larger community was at risk and not just JQA residents."

The Dean of Students, Jo–Anne Vanin, was not available for comment yesterday.

After obtaining the restraining order, UMass police began building evidence and communicating with the victims in order to obtain a warrant for Taylor's arrest.

Taylor was immediately removed from University Housing Services and was banned from entering any residential building.

Ozoemena Nnaji, Residence Director of JQA, refused to comment.

Everywomen's Center offers help to victims

Public Safety and Housing Services joined forces with Everywomen's Center (EWC) and worked closely with the victims and other residents of JQA, according to Gilbert.

Faculty Senate votes to oppose Division 1–A football after heated debate

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

After long discussion, the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate voted yesterday to oppose a move to Division 1–A Football status.

The issue has been hotly debated since September of 1994 when Chancellor David K. Scott first appointed a task force to examine the implications for the campus of moving from Division 1–AA to 1–A Football status.

Since then, various subcommittees have presented their findings on the subject to the Faculty Senate, culminating in yesterday's almost unanimous vote "that, given the current campus priorities and existing financial constraints... the Faculty Senate oppose a move to 1–A Football status at this time."

The Senate began its consideration of the idea with a moving address by Michael Morris, President of the Alumni Association. Morris spoke about his days at UMass under the influence of Emiritus English Professor H. Leland Varly, who died on April 1.

"Last week I noted with sadness and warm memories the passing of H. Leland Varly, my English professor," Morris said.

Morris spoke about how Varly had sparked his love of literature and forever impacted his life.

"He challenged me and I am terribly glad that he did," Morris said. "[That love of literature] made me a better man and a better lawyer and sustained me throughout my life."

Morris went on to say that Varly had "given joy to his youth" and

Mount Holyoke student sit–in staged over issues of diversity

By Mike Burke and Thang Vo
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY — After an unsuccessful attempt at negotiations with Mount Holyoke President Joanne Creighton yesterday afternoon, Mount Holyoke student protesters began a peaceful sit–in at the college's Admissions Office.

The student sit–in follows a week of discussions and rallies centered around a list of unmet demands that the students issued earlier this week relating to the preservation of both economic and racial diversity on campus.

The list of demands includes:

• "Keep need blind admission for all students, including [non–traditional] and international students."

• "Create an Asian American studies program and hire at least one tenure track Asian/Asian American professor within this program."

• "Hire four permanent chaplains of varied backgrounds, in place by fall 1997, that are able to meet the needs of a spiritually diverse community and are selected by a search committee with at least 25 percent of the students making up the committee."

Yesterday's events began with a 9:30 a.m. student rally as a precursor to a planned meeting at 10 a.m. with Creighton and student negotiators.

Approximately 100 MHC students, faculty and staff gathered near the Eliana Ortega House to protest what they called a delay tactic by the MHC administration in responding to their 11 demands.

Senior Fabiola Tafolla said that the MHC administration are wording their responses in such a way as to stall negotiations with students.

Students feel that the administration's responses reflect what they believe to be an administration unwilling to heed to student voices.

"There is a large list of demands, not everyone supports every demand, but everyone does support student voices being heard," said senior Shannon Service.

After the initial meeting near the Ortega House, the group moved to the Blanchard Campus Center to discuss the next step in the negotiation process with the administration. These talks were then cancelled by the administration.

Creighton responded in a press release to the students, "Because you have not acted in good faith in your dealings with us, my administrative colleagues and I will not be meeting with you today... At the rally on Tuesday, you deliberately misrepresented, mocked and distorted the tone and substance of our dialogue with you earlier that day. You have violated both our trust, and the trust of the Mount Holyoke students who expected that you report to them truthfully."

The student protesters, in their second attempt of the day to communicate with Creighton, waited outside the president's office until her office hours began at 2 p.m.

Much of the discussion that followed centered on the students' demand that need–blind admissions must remain at Mount Holyoke as a means to preserve the college's aim of diversity. Under a need–blind admissions policy, an applicant's financial situation is not taken into consideration when being accepted into Mount Holyoke. This system prevents the college from discriminating against worthy applicants who are in need of financial aid; less than 10 other academic institutions have such a policy.

Due to financial reasons, the College has decided to change their existing need–blind admissions policy to a need– sensitive policy. A change from need–blind admissions to need–sensitive admissions is expected to drastically alter the make–up of the student body at Mount Holyoke by decreasing the number of lower class students accepted into the college.

Many of the students at the all women's college feel that the school is moving away from its original purpose by changing its admissions policy regarding financial aid.

Sixth provost candidate Risa Palm visits UMass

By Laura Forster
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts provost candidate Risa Palm shared her vision of UMass in a forum last night in the Campus Center.

Palm, who is currently the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences from the University of Oregon, spoke to the Massachusetts Daily Collegian about how she would enhance the quality of undergraduate education and research, if she was appointed.

The meeting began with a discussion of Chancellor David K. Scott's Strategic Action Plan.

Palm showed full support for the Strategic Action Plan's goal of UMass entrance into the Association of American Universities (AAU).

Palm called admission into the AAU "a prestigious honor... which sets out worthy plans in my mind."

The AAU is an association made up of 57 schools which are considered to be the top research universities in the United States and Canada. UMass entrance into the AAU would require increasing both the amount and quality of research done on campus.

Palm said that an increase in research at UMass would allow undergraduate students the opportunity to work closely with faculty on research experiments. Palm drew upon her son's current involvement in one such research experiment at Stanford, in illustrating how the experience can develop the awareness a student has of their field.

When asked about her views on the recent student takeover of Goodell and the agreements made between students and faculty, Palm admitted to having a limited knowledge on the subject.

However from what she observations she had made, Palm said "The students show a great deal of humanness and I hope the students and administration can come to see eye to eye."

Commenting on her interest in the University of Massachusetts, Palm credited it to the good reputation which UMass has received. But she also noted that she found UMass' reputation to be better outside the state than inside.

Palm made a parallel to UMass with her role as a dean at the University of Oregon, since Oregon has been pushing to diversify its curriculum. Palm says she has found the change within her University's curriculum to be met with enthusiasm by both faculty and students. In addition, Palm says she sees diversity as "necessary for students and faculty to move forward."

In regards to disabled students' access to buildings on campus, Palm said that, since it was required by law it had to be done — it was –"not an option."

Although the search committee for a new provost encourages students to come ask questions and address issues of concern, there were no students present at Risa Palm's forum, for reasons unclear.

Lia Wong, recently elected Student Government Association President, voiced disappointment in not being informed by any of the administration as to when the candidates will be present on campus, as well as lack of awareness students have.

Palm was the sixth candidate to interview at UMass. Her interview lasted two days. During this time she met with administration, faculty, staff and student leaders. Palm will continue on to Boston tomorrow for a half–day visit with the President's Office to complete her interview.

Palm holds a P.h.D and M.A. in geography from the University of Minnesota, and said that as a geographer, she finds the University landscape and surrounding area "a beautiful place to be."

In addition to her degrees in geography, Palm also holds a B.A. and B.S. in history from the University of Minnesota. In the past, Dean has also served as Associate Vice Chancellor for Research, Dean of the Graduate School and Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs at the University of Colorado, Boulder.

The next candidate scheduled for interview, Cora Marrett, will meet with students at 6 p.m. Thursday, April 24 in Campus Center 163–73.

Public Safety conducted interviews with witnesses and victims and the EWC staff is providing counseling to the victims as well.

"We worked with EWC to make sure the victims received the support and assistance they needed," Gilbert said.

However, staff from the EWC feel that communication between their departments and to students was inadequate.

Patricia Mota Guedes, the Director EWC Educator/ Advocate program said she found out about Taylor and his alleged assaults "through a student."

"We then reported it to Housing and Public Safety and at that point [Taylor] had moved off–campus," Mota Guedes said. "This specific situation raises a problem. Sexual assault happens on this campus all the time, and we don't have a way that all the departments communicate with each other. We need to coordinate our responses to what happens and address the larger systematic questions."

Gilbert said that one of Housing's biggest problems was trying to keep up with the "rumor mill."

"Residents were becoming alarmed from all the information spreading. People were only getting bits and pieces of information," Gilbert said. "Anytime we heard of a rumor we tried to replace it with good information.

"It is most important in a community to feel safe and secure. It is important for us in Housing to know what we should be doing differently and better in order to keep everyone safe."

Gilbert said the University will continue to offer assistance to the victims on campus.

"The victims know if they need support they can seek out residence staff and they also know of many other agencies available on campus. We want them to receive all the help and support that they need," Gilbert said.

Kathy McGarvy, an EWC Educator/Advocate, feels the University focused too much on Taylor's investigation and not on warning the student body at large.

"The University's number one priority was the Department of Public Safety. Their first priority should have been the students — not the perpetrator," McGarvy said.

Taylor may remain in jail

Randall P. Smith, an Amherst attorney who represented Taylor at the bail hearing Wednesday, said that "it is unlikely bail will be posted."

Judge Avertus Morse set Taylor's bail at $10,000, though Polumbaum originally asked for $100,000.

Smith said it has not been determined yet whether he will represent Taylor in his next court appearance.

Polumbaum said Taylor will to have an attorney assigned to him from the Public Offenders Office for the April 24 pre–trial hearing.

Collegian staff members Michelle Hillman and Laura Stock contributed to this article.

Correction

In yesterday's article entitled "Five arrested after CVS found pot in photograph," UMass student Alexander Lea was misidentified as one of the five men facing legal incrimination for drug possession. This misinformation was obtained from The Springfield Union News. Amherst Police verified yesterday that Lea is not identified on the police affidavit filed at Northampton District court, nor is he a resident of 249 East Pleasant St., where the incident occurred. The Collegian regrets the error.

According to sophomore Amanda Sapir, Mount Holyoke College was founded by Mary Lyon in 1837, on the belief that anti–sexist and anti–racist thought would create a beautiful place.

But yesterday the student's demands to preserve Lyon's beliefs seemed to fall on deaf ears.

"I'd love to tell you that we don't need to [get rid of need– blind admissions] but as the manager of this institution I can't say that is financially possibly," Creighton said.

Throughout the talks, Creighton continually thanked the students for expressing their concerns, but if anything, her remarks only aroused anger in the students.

"We basically didn't get anywhere with [Creighton]. She refused to give us any solid details," said junior student negotiator Sung Park dressed in a handmade t–shirt covered with slogans relating to the Goodell takeover last month at the University of Massachusetts.

Park stressed the overall importance of the MHC student protest, "This effects the campus as a whole. But the people who will be specifically harmed will be the lower class, people of color, lesbians/ transgendered... We are trying to maintain diversity on this campus."

Following the unsuccessful talks with Creighton, Park and the five other student negotiators called for a peaceful sit–in in the Admissions Office. Between 100 to 150 students primarily from Mount Holyoke engaged in the protest.

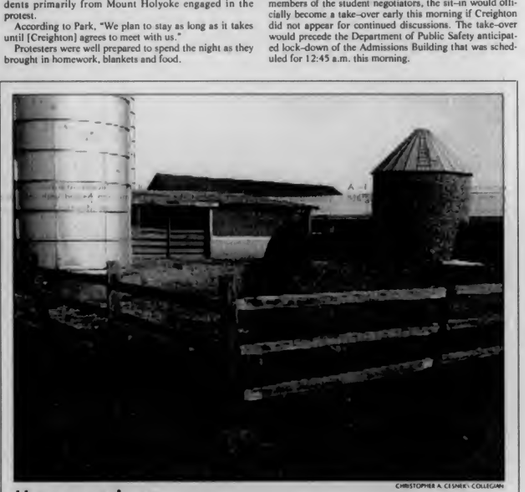
According to Park, "We plan to stay as long as it takes until [Creighton] agrees to meet with us."

Protesters were well prepared to spend the night as they brought in homework, blankets and food.

A group of UMass students joined in the protest carrying signs that read "UMass Supports the Student Protesters at MHC" and "Five College Solidarity."

UMass Student Trustee–elect Brian Tirrell joined in the evening sit–in and endorsed the student's campaign through an official letter of support.

Although at press time there were no signs that Creighton would continue talks with the students last night, students spirit's were high concerning the day's events.



"The most effective [aspect] today was the students coming out to hear Creighton [at her office hours], said senior Elizabeth Simon Ruchti. "We have established a way to get the students voices heard."

Ruchti also included that there was faculty support for the student demands.

At the same time, student support of the protesters did not extend throughout the small campus. There were several student who voiced disagreement with the sit–in.

"I'm not pleased with the separation of students that has occurred on campus," said senior Elizabeth O'Donoghue referring to the polarization of the student body. O'Donoghue was a member of the student committee that recommended the alteration in admission's policy from need–blind to need–sensitive.

At press time, the sit–in was still on. According to student negotiators, the sit–in would officially become a take–over early this morning if Creighton did not appear for continued discussions. The take–over would precede the Department of Public Safety anticipated lock–down of the Admissions Building that was scheduled for 12:45 a.m. this morning.

Catharine Porter's study shows women add unique aspects to their businesses

By Michelle Hillman
Collegian Staff

Women starting their own businesses face unique challenges and bring different characteristics to businesses that men do not, according to Professor Catharine Porter of the Consumer Studies Department at the University of Massachusetts.

Today 50 percent of businesses are started by women and 34 percent of women own businesses, according to Porter. Porter discussed some of the unique qualities women bring to their businesses on Wednesday.

Porter conducted a study in which she selected a sample of Northampton stores solely owned and operated by women and related to apparel marketing. She then spent two hours in each of the 15 stores she selected, as a customer and interviewer.

She found that most of the women she spoke with never expected to own their own businesses. Many of these women left other professions. Among these owners included a former architect, librarian, teacher, abortion counselor and Medieval Studies in order to start their own businesses.

One aspect that the women found most frustrating was the discrimination faced when trying to get financial support from banks.

"Not one woman got a bank loan, all the money came from private sources," Porter said. Porter added that one bank would not even talk to a woman because she was single and another couldn't get a loan without the signature of her husband.

The women also faced discrimination from sales representatives and customers who would come in looking for the owner, assuming the owner could not be female. "People never assumed women were the owners, people gave them credit for being managers... customers assume the same thing, [that] only men own businesses," said Porter.

The women were asked by Porter what did they, as women, bring to their businesses that men may not. According to Porter there was a unanimous answer — the women brought sensitivity to people and their customers.

According to Porter, women were sensitive to the needs of female employees with children, provided full benefits including time off, paid vacations and health benefits.

Other qualities Porter noted was that women were less cutthroat, more flexible and able to handle more than one thing at a time. They also were willing to work for little money because they hold a passion for their business, Porter said.

Porter also asked about the types of equipment the women used and questioned why there were no computers. She found that most women said they didn't need them and either did the books themselves or hired an accountant. The women that did have computers used them for mailing lists and organization.

One woman said she didn't understand why more women didn't own businesses, saying "They can do it on their own, they don't need a partner."

Other advice from the owners included comments like "Do it," "Go for it" and "Be prepared to not make a lot of money, but the rewards are endless."

Porter plans on publishing her findings and sharing them with her students and also interviewing the same number of men in order to compare findings.

■ Senate

thanked the current UMass faculty for "giving joy to the youths of others." He concluded his speech with a call to the Faculty Senate to investigate possible ways to more towards 1–A Football.

"I encourage you to continue to research ways to build a quality 1–A program without jeopardizing our goals and missions," Morris said.

The debate before the packed house then began in earnest as Professor Marios Philippides, the Chair of the Rules Committee of the Faculty Senate, read the proposal to oppose the move to 1–A status.

Marc Weinberg, associate dean for faculty development and a chair of one of the subcommittees of the 1–A Football Task Force, presented several reasons why he opposed the move. Chief among Weinberg's reasons was the financial cost of building a new stadium and adding players and staff to the football program.

McGuirk Alumni Stadium, where the UMass football team currently plays its home games, has just 17,000 seats — no where near the minimum capacity of 30,000 required for 1– A games by the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA).

Weinberg said $52.6 million was a conservative estimate of the cost of building an acceptable stadium, and that an additional $7–8 million increase in the football budget would be needed.

Weinberg also noted that studies have shown that while a winning football team may cause alumni to increase their donations to the athletic department, it would have no impact on alumni giving to the general University fund.

Physics professor Kandula Sastry, chair of the Academic Matters Council of the Faculty Senate, also spoke against moving to 1–A status.

"There are numerous academic needs that should be met, such as buildings and classrooms that must be renovated," Sastry said. "It would be foolhardy to jump into this adventure. 1–A football is not a money making venture."

Director of Athletics Robert Marcum questioned the estimated cost of building a stadium as being high, and said of 1–A programs, "Certainly they make money."

Interim Provost Patricia H. Crosson confirmed the argument against the move, citing her $10 million request for funding for academic programs and research to Scott in the 1998 budget, which went unmet.

"We must consider the other needs at the same level as 1– A football," Crosson said.

When a Faculty Senate member questioned him on the "real total cost" of moving to 1–A football, Marcum said that scholarship money would also be needed both for recruiting new football players and to give to women's athletic teams, since Title IX requires equal spending on men's and women's athletics and moving to 1–A football would throw the University's balance off.

Scott was then asked to comment, and he said that while he believes that ultimately moving to 1–A Football Status can have academic "payoffs," he felt that the University was not in a position, at this time, to wait the 10 to 15 years before its investment in a 1–A team would be profitable.

Professor Joseph Larsen was the last to speak on the issue, commenting that a vote against the move was "consistent with the priorities expected of us, as faculty, to adhere to."

The motion passed with only one Faculty Senate Member in opposition.

Editor's Note: Due to closure of campus during the snowstorm, the Collegian was unable to cover provost candidate Daniel Fogel's open forum with students on March 31. The Collegian conducted a telephone interview with Fogel about the forum and his candidacy, the contents of which appear below.

Provost candidate Daniel Fogel said that he is well prepared to meet the challenges and demands of administrating at the University of Massachusetts.

"There is something about the campus climate at UMass that really needs attention," Fogel said. "I feel that I am the kind of person who could bring a lot of constructive energies and skills to UMass."

Fogel, who is currently the Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Dean of the Graduate School at Louisiana State University (LSU), said that while he enjoyed meeting with UMass students, he was surprised by some of the comments that students made at his open forum held in Memorial Hall on March 31.

"It was great meeting with students," Fogel said. "I was a little surprised by the intensity and the lack of trust of the students for people in authority."

Fogel said that if he came to UMass as provost, he would work to improve campus communication lines and include student leaders on key decision–making committees in order to combat some students' current hostility towards, and lack of faith in, the administration.

"I felt that there was a problem in communications at UMass," Fogel said. "I would hope that the lines of communication could be opened. I would have regularly scheduled meetings at which the students could bring their concerns to me."

Fogel also expressed concern in the questions students raised about access to the University for disabled students.

"I was shocked by things about UMass that I was told by the students," Fogel said. "The students feel that not as much has been done as could be or should be."

Fogel said that he had a lot of experience working on improving access at LSU, and that this issue was of primary concern to him.

"These are issues I care about deeply. At LSU, we have had a reputation of going the extra mile to accommodate students with disabilities," Fogel said. "We have incurred costs from this, but we meet them without question."

Fogel said that because of the climate created by student dissatisfaction with administration, he felt that anyone who assumes the provost position will be faced wi..3 many challenges, but that aspect of the job is appealing to him.

"In a way, I feel that anyone who comes into that situation will have a difficult time," Fogel said. "The job is very attractive to me in part because the student body is so diverse and active.

"I am not really interested in sitting quietly behind a desk," Fogel said. "I have operated for a long time in an atmosphere with a high degree of tension, and you do not stay in the job unless you have an appetite for the stimulation that brings."

Fogel said that his experiences at LSU, which include handling faculty grievances, student appeals, strategic planning and budgeting, leave him well–qualified to assume the provost position at UMass.

"I have been lucky to have a broad range of experience at LSU. From nuts and bolts to large policy things, I have done them all," Fogel said. "I know that I am very well prepared."

UMass hosts women of color conference

By Michelle Hillman
Collegian Staff

The first annual Women of Color Institute Conference will be held this weekend, beginning today and running through Sunday. The conference will feature former president of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association, Christine Lopes.

The conference was the brainchild of several UMass organizations including the Educator/Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center, Campus Activities Office, Zeta Phi Beta Sorority Inc. and the ALANA Graduate Students Organization.

The coordinator of the Educator/Advocate program, Patricia Guedes, said the purpose of the conference was "to begin dialogue, networks and identify resources that are here on campus and in the community."

The conference, which will be made up of three components — education and career development, enrichment of mind, body and spirit as well as community building. The conference will feature several speakers from the UMass community and several former students.

Saturday, the first full day of the conference, will focus on career development pertaining to women of color and will feature Ruth Carey, academic advisor at Mather Career Center and advisors Shirley Tang and Jeanette Berrios.

The conference will enable women "to identify resources so women of color can have different strategies for success," Guedes said.

Topics will include financial aid information, a talk about first generation college students by Sonia Pope, a lecture and discussion facilitated by UMass Women's Studies professor Alexandrina Deschamps and a dance entertainment movement and dance presentation or "cool out" featuring poetry, inspirational readings and nutritional pamphlets.

The final day of the conference will focus on community building and will create a dialogue with men of color.

"Even though this conference is about women of color, there will be a day we recognize men who have been active in the community and allies of women of color," Guedes said.

The event will take place in the Campus Center rooms 803–1009.

Human genomes & human rights

Today and tomorrow, the Five-College community will be hosting a conference entitled "Human Genomes and Human Rights." Its focus is to help shed light on the Human Genome Diversity Project, but the goal is to expose the human rights violations perpetrated by this project.

The Human Genome Diversity Project (HGDP), also known as the "vampire" project, began 1991 when a group of scientists from the industrialized nations got together and decided that they wanted a "global" map of human genetic variation. Indeed their proposal had very little to do with a "global" map of genetic variation, but had much to do with an "ethnic" map of genetic variation.

In their infinite and racist wisdom, these scientists then proceeded to create a list of some 700 indigenous and "ethnic" groups that they were going to targes for "testing." By "testing" they meant the procurement of blood, hair and tissue samples from the majority of the targeted groups. This testing, backed by greedy multinational corporate and institutional sponsors, was not done on a voluntary basis, and even less seldom on a truthful basis.

Will Watts

Once they had their method and strategy down, this group of scientists flew around the world to take their samples from the unsuspecting indigenous people of the world. Quite often they would enter a village and tell the people residing therein, that they were there of international goodwill. Under this guise they would explain to the people that they were there to test the population for diseases like diabetes. Leaving the people with scars and smiles, they would jump back on a plane and head off to their next point of exploitation.

Once the samples were taken, the scientists would break them down to a molecular level and then extract the pieces of genetic material that were resistant to certain bacteria and diseases. They would then patent these genes, even though they were not their own, and proceed to make "medicines" with them. With the assistance of the multi-national corporate and institutional sponsors, they mass produced these "medicines" and made millions of dollars. While these people made their millions of dollars, the indigenous and "ethnic" people, who had been targeted and who were the basis of their fortune, still struggled through blinding poverty. Not only weren't they reimbursed, but they no longer had the entitlement to their very own genetic makeup since it had been patented by the scientists and their multi-national corporate and institutional sponsors.

All who can afford to attend this free conference should because this is an issue that transcends race, gender, class and sexuality. We must understand as a community, that power and wealth filters up higher and higher every year, and a couple decades down the line, we will all be subjected to this sort of biased and prejudiced exploitation. If you do not believe this statement, then attend because the "vampire" project is alive on this campus. This being said, we must take a stance against the "vampire" project not only because it is unethical, but because this campus is a direct reflection of all of us, and we must not let it soil the reputation of the innocent students, faculty and staff who are not involved.

For full information on the dates, times, places and speakers please look for fliers around campus, or check out the conference's web site at : http://frost.oit.umass.edu/~wnw/conf.html.

The dark side of the space program

Mandy Simons

There is something that you ought to know about the United States' space program, something that has been kept much quieter than the comings and goings of astronauts, and the ups and downs of the Hubble telescope. Very simply, it is this: the United States is putting plutonium into space.

First, some facts about plutonium: According to Dr. Helen Caldicott, founder and president of Physicians for Social Responsibility, it is the most carcinogenic substance known. One pound of plutonium, if adequately distributed, could kill everyone on earth with lung cancer. The total radiological life of plutonium — the period for which it is deadly — is about half a million years.

Second, some facts about NASA's immediate plans: In October, NASA is to launch a new space probe called Cassini. This probe will be equipped with nuclear power generators to run its instruments. The power source is plutonium, of which Cassini will carry 72.3 lbs. Cassini is supposed to end up at Saturn. NASA plans to get it there using two fly-by maneuvers, in which the probe circles close around a planet, using the planet's gravitational force to increase its velocity. Cassini will do its first fly-by around Venus; then it will come back to the earth to execute the same maneuver here. If something should go wrong at this point — just a small misfire of the rockets could do it — the probe could end up on a collision course with the earth. Travelling at more than 40,000 miles an hour, Cassini would either burn up in the earth's atmosphere, or hit the earth. In either case, the plutonium that it carries would be released.

The famous Apollo 13 moon probe, which burnt up in the earth's atmosphere in 1964, was also equipped with a nuclear power supply, with a mere 2.1 lbs of plutonium. According to a report by the European Nuclear Agency, a world-wide soil sampling program conducted six years after the accident showed nuclear debris to be present at all continents and all latitudes. As a result of that accident, every human being on earth has a tiny bit of plutonium in their bodies.

The consequences of a similar accident involving Cassini, which will carry almost 35 times the amount of plutonium, would be less subtle. Dr. Ernest Sternglass, Professor Emeritus of Radiological Physics at the University of Pittsburgh, School of Medicine, makes this evaluation:

"Not counting all the other causes of death, infant mortality, heart disease, immune deficiency diseases and all that, we're talking in the order of 10 to 20 million extra deaths. And if we call all the latent deaths from other causes and cancer, it may be as much as 30 to 40 million people."

In recent years, European scientists have developed high efficiency solar cells for use on deep space probes such as Cassini. Such solar cells could be used instead of the plutonium generators. Yet NASA has chosen to stick with plutonium, despite the enormous risk.

And NASA has further plans for using nuclear power. The United States is currently ground testing six nuclear power plants designed for space use. These are large scale nuclear reactors which NASA plans, at some point, to launch into space. The kinds of accidents and malfunctions which commonly occur in space missions could have disastrous consequences if one of these reactors were involved. At present, 1 percent of booster rockets blow up on the launch pad, or in outer space. And things which have made it up into space sometimes fall down; the Russian Mars probe which fell to the earth last November is a recent example. NASA's plans open up the prospect of nuclear reactors falling into the atmosphere, or back to the earth. Then, of course, there is the simple possibility of a nuclear reactor malfunctioning in space, just as they do on earth.

While the debate over the use of nuclear power on earth continues, NASA, in conjunction with the US government, is quietly going ahead with plans to use this power in space. These plans have not been subjected to public discussion or public criticism, at least in part because the information is so hard to come by. Although the news networks regularly carry stories about the appealing aspects of the space program — women in space, the possibility of life on Mars — they are silent on this. Yet it is this aspect of the space program which has immediate and grave implications for us all.

The information given here comes from a documentary which was researched by Professor Karl Grossman of the State University of New York. The documentary, entitled Nukes in Space: The Nuclearization and Weaponization of the Heavens, is available on video cassette from EnviroVideo, Box 311, Ft. Tilden, NY 11695 (1-800-326-8846, envirovideo@earthlink.net). For information on efforts to halt the use of nuclear power in space, contact Citizens for Peace in Space, Box 915, Colorado Springs, Colorado, 80901 (tel: 719-389-0644), or the Global Network against Weapons and Nuclear Power in Space, c/o the Florida Coalition for Peace and Justice, Box 90035, Gainesville, Florida, 32607 (tel: 904-468-3295).

Letters to the Editor

Palestine: the other side of the story

To the Editor:

Get your facts straight!

Act 1: The Oslo agreement between the PLO and Israel clearly states that there shall be no change in the demographical status of all occupied territories seized during the Six-Day War in 1967 with special references to East Jerusalem.

Act 2: Israel announces building a new settlement at Abou Ghoniem mountain (Har Homa) in East Jerusalem.

Act 3: The European Union presents a motion to the Security Council asking it to condemn Israel's action.

Act 4: The U.S. independently vetoes the Security Council motion.

Act 5: The Arab League presents a second motion to the Security Council asking it to condemn Israel's action.

Act 6: The U.S. independently vetoes the Security Council motion again.

Act 7: Violence spreads throughout the occupied territories.

Act 8: Israel continues building the settlement.

Act 9: The whole process of peace is threatened.

Act 10: Act now to save peace.

Mr. Wurtzel, how can you make an ignorant statement saying, "How can our leaders on both sides of the aisle be wrong?" I have to ask, "Were you born yesterday?" Open your eyes and see that people have their own agendas, and just because Democrats and Republicans happen to agree on something does not mean it is OK or right.

How can you say the press is distorting issues surrounding the Arab-Israeli conflict? During the whole Intifadah (Palestinian Uprising [in the late 80s]), you did not see the majority of the cruelty and punishment Palestinians were receiving at the hands of merciless Israeli soldiers over the six year period. You would only hear about Israeli casualties in detail in the media.

When you say there are more Jews in East Jerusalem than Arabs (which is very misleading in itself) you know why that might be: Well, it's because many Palestinians have been senselessly, violently and carelessly massacred by Israeli genocide, which has reduced the Arab population. The population of Jews in relation to Palestinians prior to 1948 was far less in Palestine, and rapid increase of Jews and subsequent decrease of the Palestinian population can be attributed as much to ethnic cleansing of Palestinians from their neighborhoods as Jewish emigrants.

I have a first hand account of how things were and are in Palestine. I was part of the Intifadah: I demonstrated with my people, I threw rocks, suffocated from tear gas, dodged bullets, witnessed my people suffering, and got shot in the leg from a rubber bullet that has left me scarred for life. I know how unsafe and dangerous it is: I can tell you stories about my best friend Amjad Gabriel being beaten to death by Israeli soldiers while on his way to the local convenience store for milk because he was suspected of throwing rocks with no evidence whatsoever. I can tell you about how two other friends Amer and Minaar were taken from their neighborhood by Israeli soldiers and were never heard from again. About how my uncle, Yaser was jailed and cruelly beaten and tortured for four years. About how my mother was shot in the leg by Israeli soldiers during a peaceful and passive demonstration that I too was a part of. About how other relatives have been beaten senseless by Israeli soldiers under "suspicion" of participating in the protests and demonstrations.

You can not tell me what is going on in the Arab-Israeli conflict unless you know from first-hand experience what's going on... I know you do not and that I certainly do. It is people like you that frustrate me almost as much as Zionists do and all because of your arrogant ignorance. You disgust and disappoint me.

Also, about Israelis supposedly building 2,000 new homes in East Jerusalem for Arabs in addition to the 3,000 for Jews in Har Homa; what happened to the 18,000 new homes Israelis promised for Arabs many years ago, to try mend things?

Do you know how many they built? Almost none. Get your facts straight!

You speak of Palestinian crimes against Israeli citizens in the past. Yet let's look at the casualties of the Intifadah, a war of Palestinian stones against Israeli bullets. The United Nations claims that there were 131,240 Palestinian casualties in this uprising (one-quarter of which being children under the age of) 16). This compared to 449 Israeli deaths! Where did you get the information that Yasser Arafat has used Har Homa as an excuse to kill Israeli citizens?

Perhaps you are just regurgitating some of the ignorant garbage the Israeli lobby might have fed you at the AIPAC Conference had you gone to. It seems that it is you, and not the media, are omitting background history. I know that the media is not run by Arabs, so I highly doubt that anything is being distorted except in Israel's favor — how many Arab- American writers have you seen in the national media writing about this issue? And how many pro-Zionist writers have you seen?

So in regard to your column, "An Objective Press?", before you can be an accredited columnist, get all the facts right and not just the information you want to publicize. Until that day comes, try writing for the tabloids!

As a person of Palestinian descent on this campus, I must do all that I can to voice my opinion. I know that I might be attacked for the comments I've made, but I also understand that there aren't too many Palestinian voices on this campus willing to be heard until now. If I have to, I will take full responsibility for the brunt of what I have stated, and I know that I am not the only one who shares these sentiments about this issue. I urge you, the reader, not to just sit back and read articles, such as the one Matthew Wurtzel inauspiciously wrote, without your frustrations and opinions.

CRC vs. CVS

To the editor:

The UMASS Cannabis Reform Coalition would like to dispel the rumors that we were the ones who started the boycott against CVS pharmacy in Amherst. We have gotten many calls regarding the boycott, but we cannot offer any information since the people running the boycott have not left any contact numbers.

What we can offer is a little advice. First for the people boycotting: the boycott should only apply to the CVS pharmacy in Amherst Center, not all CVS stores, and perhaps only the photograph development counter. The boycott is in response to the decision of a CVS employee to turn over to Amherst police photographs which five men got developed. These photographs were pictures of the men standing in front of live marijuana plants which they were cultivating indoors. The law only requires photo development firms to turn over pictures to the police if child pornography or sexual abuse is discovered, so the CVS employee did this on questionable grounds.

Secondly we would like to remark that this whole incident underscores the dangerous complacent attitude which the Valley has started to acquire towards marijuana prohibition. We hold ourselves partly responsible for this, by demonstrating in student elections that the majority student opinion at UMass favors marijuana legalization — but this does not, repeat not, make it anywhere near legal.

Though the police cannot use the photographs as evidence in court, they were legally allowed to send an undercover agent posing as a stranded motorist into the residence where the marijuana was being grown. Her testimony about what she saw inside was used to obtain the warrant and conduct the search.

The attitude "if we ignore it, it will go away" simply does not apply to marijuana prohibition. Regardless of what President Clinton says in the news, there is still a "war" on marijuana users. People, stop acting like there isn't.

UPC responds

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to Jessica Miller's story regarding UPC selling out. It seems that Ms. Miller is a very confused and bitter individual who has ill intentions towards UPC. It seems that she is selling herself out by preaching one thing and then doing another.

Ms. Miller stated that UPC doesn't put on shows which represent this university and that UPC does not ask students on campus what they want to see. If Ms. Miller had done her homework instead of blindly accusing, she's seen that we do talk to students on campus through our General Committee Meeting, which is held once a week. She should also know that we have put out promotional tables out on the Campus Center Concourse and put out student music surveys at these tables, which I might add, have gotten a lot of responses.

Next I would like to discuss the comment regarding UPC's booking of musical acts which fall into these so called "music genres" that Ms. Miller says are stereotypes. If we don't label these genres such as hip-hop, alternative rock, blues or even jazz, how are people going to distinguish one music from another? Ms. Miller, are you suggesting that we eliminate these titles and just pack every different types of music into one giant box? I wish you much luck on this mission. Ms. Miller, let's get one thing straight, just because there is a title on a specific type of music doesn't make it a stereotype. That's why we have something called diversity — look it up.

Another issue I would like to discuss is Ms. Miller's comment on segregation. People have different tastes in the music world and if a person likes alternative rock or techo then that is their choice and if they choose to listen to hip- hop, Latin music, then more power to them, for being diverse. Ms. Miller, I am a little confused on what you meant by "genres" will segregate this campus more. Are you saying that by listening to a specific type of music a person is segregating what's around them? By having diversity in the music industry, it will unite people more. For example, during the Lollapalooza tour, where several music genres (or in your case "stereotypes") were represented, and people were brought together.

Ms. Miller, you said that you went out personally and talked to most of the students on campus. (Boy, you must have plenty of spare time). I'm wondering what you told these students or what you didn't tell them. Answer me this Ms. Miller, why is it that you started your campaign for UPC during the week of Spring Elation? Why didn't you say something during our other shows that we put on this school year? Why now Ms. Miller? Gee, could it be because it conflicts with what you want on campus and not what others want? Also, why is that you preach so much about UPC and how they don't do things for the campus when you haven't shown up to one meeting? This is very interesting don't you think? You said that you wanted a D.J. during the Spring Concert. Why a D.J? Who is this going to cater to, besides yourself? Why not preach for a Latino band or an Asian band; does this conflict with what you want?

The final thing I like to address to Ms. Miller is that if you are going to write a story or an editorial, make sure you are fair by presenting both sides and not just yours. You are attacking UPC for charging $2 for the up coming Spring Concert. Why didn't you write about UPC's reason's for charging people? First, this is something that is not even definite yet. Secondly, SGA suggested us to do this to help cover the large expenses of throwing a Spring Concert.

Ms. Miller is obviously not speaking for me or my community, which is the Asian one. But then she claims she speaks for the students. Before you go on a personal rampage, please do your homework and get involved with UPC from the start. You said that you are for unity, but girl, please know what it means first, and then use the word. Until then, you can't "keep it real." Don't play yourself or the students by saying, keeping it real, when you don't yourself. 'nuff said.

Violence achieves nothing

To the Editor:

I am writing with an aim to highlight a point that has been seriously overlooked by Paul Doheny and Sean Horgan in their responses to a letter by Simon Burke concerning the IRA in the April 18th Collegian. Both authors launch an assault upon British policy towards Ireland and through some perverse logic use this to legitimize the IRA's use of violence against various targets. Let us get one thing straight before we proceed, we British are well aware of our appalling treatment of Ireland throughout history, we screwed up and we know it. The fact that I am responding to two American critics would thus ensure that they both understand the phenomenon of a 'historical screw up,' indeed it is a quality with which their forefathers are much acquainted. The central point of the debate must be whether violence is a legitimate course of action for such an organization? Mr. Doheny is outraged when Mr. Burke describes the IRA's actions as 'terrorism.' How else would you define the systematic and indiscriminate killing of men, women and children for the past 25 years? How else would you define an organization that bombs a crowded shopping mall on Father's Day, killing two children? Frankly Mr. Doheny, when you state that it is "ridiculous to equate [this] violence with the Oklahoma bombings," you succinctly prove that you are blind to the facts. Both incidents are bombings for a political end, both killed innocent people, and both are totally despicable.

Mr. Horgan makes a clumsy and historically naive parallel between IRA violence and the American War for independence. Mr. Horgan, did George Washington and friends bomb pubs, markets, concerts, hotels and town meetings? There is a great deal of difference between the Battle of Saratoga and the Manchester City Centre bombing. To link the American rebels with the IRA is a detriment to their status.

The overriding fact is that being part of a British contingent at this University, we take offense to Americans branding us as ignorant of the Irish situation. I understand my country's mistakes, but I also understand that it is my people that are being killed. Perhaps gentlemen, you both need to take a closer look at American actions throughout history before you are so quick to condemn others. As LBJ said to the Civil Rights movement during his escalation of the Vietnam War — "Violence achieves nothing."

Prism V: UMass's dance & music spring showcase

By Julia Casson
Collegian Staff

An unusual and distinct evening of entertainment entitled will hit the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at the University of Massachusetts tonight. Prism V is the Department of Dance and Music's Spring Showcase of some of the finest ensembles here at UMass.

Malcolm W. Rowell, Jr., coordinator of the program said, "At a Prism concert, it is as though the music of a traditional concert had passed through a prism, with light and sound refracting everywhere." Prism V will be a spectacle and multitude of visions and sound that will echo from one corner to the other with performances by soloists and ensembles.

During this upbeat production, the audience members can expect non-stop performances by this diverse group of entertainers.

The production will feature the talents of Wind Ensemble, Chamber Choir, Chamber Jazz Ensemble, Opera Workshop, Percussion Ensemble, Symphony Band, UMass Marimbas and Saxophone Quartet. These ensembles will perform music by Percy Grainger, Benjamin Britten, Don Freund and Ron Nelson.

Scattered in between the multitude of ensemble performances will be several fascinating and sometimes unusual combinations of musicians. Those present will include a cellist performing the Prelude for Suite No. 2 by Bach, a tuba soloist playing Scott Joplin's "Pineapple Rag,"a flute, harp and cello trio playing music by Arthur Foote, an alto saxophonist performing Debussy and a jazz combo playing "Topical Jam" by Camilo.

Performing for the very first time anywhere, will be a premiere of music by two UMass students. One piece by Iain Moyer will feature guitar and vocals. The second piece was written by Matthew Whittall for the Wind Ensemble and Chamber Choir. Whittall's composition features the horn and soprano.

Also included in the evening's program will be two non- musical artists — a rarity in the world of performance. English professor and poet Ron Welburn will read from his vignette, Pelican. The audience will witness the silent and graceful world of a mime artist as Robert Rivest will perform not only a solo, but also a segment with the University Wind Ensemble, which promises to be a new and interesting experience for all.

You truly may never see such a unique group of talents together in a one night performance. This diverse and varied talent of UMass will hopefully create a breathtaking night of entertainment and will cater to many different tastes and styles.

The concert will take place tonight at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Tickets are $6 for students, elders, and children, $11 for general public, and UMass students are admitted free with a valid ID. Call 545-2511 for more information.

"Science fair" shows off senior design projects at Marcus Hall

CHRISTOPHER A. CESNIK / COLLEGIAN

Senior Engineer students John Kraus, Luis Pabon, Syed Bokhari and Jean-Robert Durocher display their final project yesterday in Marcus.

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

Over 30 University of Massachusetts electrical and computer engineering students displayed their senior projects yesterday in Marcus Hall.

The projects represent the culmination of a two-semester four-credit course entitled "Senior Design Project" (ECE 497), a requirement of students in the major.

According to Baird Soules, the department's undergraduate program director, this is the third year of the popular "science fair" format, which replaced a presentation format that drew little attention.

"Now everybody sees everything," Soules said. "It's like a party atmosphere."

Soules said that the projects brings "many of the [engineering] topics together." In addition to using their classroom knowledge, students have to develop "non-technical" field necessities, such as ordering parts and scheduling meetings.

"It's the most realistic experience in the whole curriculum," Soules said.

The projects covered everything from license plate readers to swim lap counters. One of the most impressive was the IEEE Micromouse project, which was put together by Luis Pabon, Syed Bokhari, Jean-Robert Durocher and John Kraus.

Their goal was to design a robotic, two-wheeled car "mouse" which, using infrared sensors and battery power, could find its way to the center of a maze. While the team's mouse was not ready for a competition in Princeton, N.J. on April 12, it was up and running yesterday.

"What we did could help cars find their way home in the future," Pabon said.

Accompanying the Micromouse was a computer introduction which incorporated three dimensional graphics and the Mission: Impossible theme in a simulation of the mouse's quest. The simulation was created by the Micromouse team with the help of computer systems engineering student Greg Baribault.

Another project, "Wave Energy Module," involved turning the energy of water waves into usable electricity. Presented by Jason Kenaley, Ken Appell and Judith Schonhoff module is a 20-year-old project which is being tested in Holyoke.

The students produced an electric control circuit, which makes subtle changes in the mechanism and increases performance drastically. The module, which measures 12 feet across, consists of a raft and a plate attached to the bottom of the water body. The full-scale model, which will be 10 times the size of the model, will have the capacity to produce a megawatt of power.

According to Kenaley, the new energy source would be most useful on or near oil rigs or islands, where power is a problem.

"The whole senior design took a lot of what we learned and let us implement it," Appell said.

Another project involved digit recognition systems, which could eventually be used effectively in post offices. Presented by Thian Dang, Jack Gendron and Richard Sturtevant, the project could eventually lead to automatic handwriting analysis.

Mandela invites Mobutu for talks

By Alexandra Zavis
Associated Press

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — President Nelson Mandela invited Zaire's president to talk with the rebel leader trying to topple him, a sign of momentum yesterday after weeks of delicate political maneuvering.

There was no clear sign from either President Mobutu Sese Seko or rebel leader Laurent Kabila that they were ready for talks to end Zaire's war. Each side has offered contradictory positions on talks in the past, and there was no direct word yesterday from Mobutu or Kabila.

U.N. envoy Mohamed Sahnoun said Mobutu and Kabila "have agreed that there will be a meeting at the highest level" and called this a "remarkable achievement in view of the complexity of the issue."

A rebel spokesman said a site had been picked for Mobutu-Kabila talks, but neither the location nor the planned date was announced. Kabila's Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Congo-Zaire has seized more than half of Zaire in its seven-month drive to topple Mobutu. Rebels have encountered little resistance from Mobutu's forces.

Kabila was in South Africa overnight for talks that lasted into early morning, first with Mandela and then with Sahnoun and South African officials.

He made no public comments during his visit, and after returning to Lubumbashi — Zaire's second-largest city, which he captured last week — he canceled a planned celebration and reportedly huddled with advisers at his home.

A Mobutu envoy was taking Mandela's invitation back to Mobutu in Kinshasa, Zaire's capital, U.N. and South African mediators said in a statement.

"We are confident that the meeting will be held soon and will discuss transitional arrangements affecting all levels of government in the context of a peaceful and negotiated solution," they said.

Mandela said he had spoken by phone with Mobutu three times since Saturday and Mobutu was "very cooperative."

In a sign of the changing situation, Mandela referred to both Mobutu and Kabila as "president."

"President Kabila is making a great deal of advances, as you are aware, but he doesn't want a military solution," Mandela said. "He wants a solution that will receive the support of President Mobutu and he has also made it clear that he has no intention of doing anything which will humiliate President Mobutu."

Kabila has demanded that Mobutu give up power before any cease-fire to stop his forces' advance. Mobutu has been under increasing domestic and international pressure to step down after nearly 32 years in power.

In Zaire, the rebels claimed that Mobutu was planning attacks on foreigners in the capital to draw foreign military intervention. U.S. forces are already on standby across the border in Congo, ready to evacuate the hundreds of American citizens in Kinshasa. The rebel finance minister, Mawampanga Mwama Nanga, said Mobutu's government had ordered elite Zairian troops to carry out the attacks, with the idea that the world would blame the rebels for the killings.

There was no independent verification of the claim and no immediate reaction from Mobutu's government. In the past, Zaire's warring sides have made claims about each other that have proved to be exaggerated or false.

The finance minister urged Mobutu's people to surrender the capital and leave peacefully.

"We want to tell the world that we don't want foreign intervention, especially under the pretext of getting out expatriates," he said. "We want pressure on Mobutu to take him out."

Also yesterday, ousted Zairian Prime Minister Leon Kengo wa Dondo denied accusations from his successors that he had stolen government money.

"It's easy to accuse," Kengo told The Associated Press at a hotel in Geneva. "Where is the proof? How much was taken? From which accounts? When?"

In central Zaire, a spokesman for the U.N. refugee agency said regional officials had ordered a one-day delay in the start of flights to take stranded refugees home to Rwanda.

The local governor — appointed by the rebels — wanted the Rwandan refugees screened for cholera for fear a cholera outbreak at the refugees' camp would spread, Paul Stromberg said in Kisangaorrow instead, Stromberg said.

Weld appoints three to board of trustees

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — Anxious to give the University of Massachusetts a fund-raising boost, Gov. William F. Weld appointed his former chief fund-raiser and a bank president to the system's board of trustees yesterday.

Peter J. Berlandi, who raised money for Weld's two gubernatorial campaigns, and Robert M. Mahoney, president and chief executive officer of Citizens Bank of Massachusetts, were appointed to fill vacancies on the 23-member board.

The governor also re-appointed Heriberto Flores, executive director of the New England Farm Worker's Council in Springfield. While the jobs are unpaid, Weld said he hoped Berlandi and Mahoney in particular would help the five-campus public system with its private fund-raising.

"I've never agreed with the tradition at a lot of public institutions that they don't go out and do private fund-raising," the governor told reporters at the Statehouse.

"The fear is that if they do private fund-raising, the state will withdraw its support of the institution to that extent. That's not likely to happen here, given the close relationship between the president of the University of Massachusetts, the governor, the lieutenant governor and the leadership in the Legislature," Weld added.

Last fall UMass announced its first major fund-raising drive, an effort to raise $175 million. Some $125 million would go to the flagship campus in Amherst, while the remaining $50 million would be used at the Boston campus.

By contrast, the University of Michigan topped its goal of raising $1 billion with a year remaining in its fund-raising campaign. The University of California also recently announced a drive aimed at raising $1.1 billion.

A total of $35.4 million was given to UMass in 1995. $15.4 million at the Amherst campus, $8 million at Worcester, $5.4 million at Boston, $4.3 million at Lowell and $2 million at Dartmouth.

UMass President William M. Bulger, who had pushed for the University to expand its fund-raising prowess while he was Senate president, greeted the trustee appointments with enthusiasm. "The governor has shown great wisdom in the choice of University of Massachusetts trustees," Bulger said in a statement.

Berlandi graduated in 1969 from Boston State College, which now exists as part of the university system, after receiving a bachelor of arts degree in political science. He has worked in the life insurance industry, sales management field and, most recently, as managing partner of Custom House Street Associates, a business consulting firm.

Mahoney graduated from UMass in 1970 with a bachelor of science degree in chemistry and went on to Columbia University, where he received a master's degree in business administration in 1971. Prior to joining Citizens in 1993, he spent 22 years working at the Bank of Boston.

Flores graduated from UMass-Amherst in 1973 with a bachelor of arts degree in education. He also received a master's in education from the school in 1991. From 1981 to 1985, Flores served on the Board of Regents for elementary and secondary education in Rhode Island.

Minutewoman track will face season's toughest rivals

By Greg Thurell
Collegian Correspondent

At noon on Saturday, the Massachusetts women's track and field team will make a return trip to the University of Connecticut sports complex to face its toughest challenge of the season.

The 6-3 Minutewomen will face the three teams they have lost to this season: Brown, UConn and Rhode Island. In addition, they will face Boston College and Army, both traditionally very strong programs.

Last week UMass finished second to Brown, while placing ahead of Boston College, Northeastern, and Southern Connecticut. Junior standout Rebecca Donaghue returned to action in this meet, finishing the 1500m with a time of 4:37.41.

Her return, along with the possible return of junior Silifa Kenku in the 400m hurdles, will add to the strong performances the rest of the Minutewomen have turned in early this season.

Freshman Andrea Comeau has been a key contributor and will be an athlete to watch in Saturday's meet. She won both the high jump, with a jump of 5-foot-6, and the 100m high hurdles, in an extremely fast time of 14.58. She also placed third in the 200m and competed in the javelin.

The sprints will be a key to this meet, as UMass has been strong in these events so far. Sophomore Shelanda Irish has been impressive in the 200m and 400m, holding the season's best times so far, and she is also a scorer in the 100m and on the 4x100m relay team.

Along with Comeau and Irish, three other Minutewomen have qualified for the New England Championships: Melanie Bell, Emma Gardner and Yves Amazan. With all three also possible point scorers in other sprint events, UMass looks like it has great depth in these events.

The relays are another area that should excite this weekend. With the aforementioned 4x100m, featuring Gardner, Bell, Irish and Raquel Shelton (the Minutewomen's top 100m runner this season), running very strongly, the all-time school record could be in jeopardy. The 4x400m has already qualified for the ECACs, and the 4x200m has looked strong and the possible return of Kenku should help this.

Stephanie Townson and Shana Mitchel have been strong in the throws all season, as both are ECAC qualifiers in the hammer throw and New England qualifiers in the Discus. Townson is also the team's top shot putter.

Irish and Bell lead the teams long jump group along with Melissa Ward. Donaghue, Nicole Way and Lisa Flood could all score in the 800m. Christy Martin and Sally Hirsch look strong in both the 1500m and 3000m. Kristen Donaldson and Tracy Meagher are both New England qualifiers in the 5000m.

Two, including only home race, on crew's weekend slate

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Correspondent

Rowing is a sport which you start at speed zero and in order to avoid floating into the middle of the river you must gain speed and momentum with each stroke to reach a higher level. This is kind of like what the Massachusetts women's crew hopes to achieve this weekend.

After defeating Boston College on March 29 and crushing Villanova and Navy this past weekend, it seems as though the Minutewomen have set a pace to repeat as Atlantic 10 Champions and have a crack at the NCAA championships.

Coach Jim Dietz boasted of his squad stroking to an excellent third place in the prestigious Whittier Cup in San Diego. Dietz feels that this decisive finish will "probably rank us in the top three in the country."

On Saturday, UMass heads to the Harlem River in New York to face Northeastern and Columbia. While Columbia isn't that strong a team Northeastern stands undefeated at this early checkpoint of the season and poses a threat to the UMass juggernaut.

Dietz is confident in his team "coming off a couple good races and having beaten B.C."

The Connecticut River (just below the Hadley break by North Lane for interested fans) plays host to UMass's only home regatta this season. New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Mount Holyoke College are all taking the plunge in attempting to defeat UMass. With the starting time set at 9:30 a.m., UMass has eight crews participating.

Dietz's first varsity boat is led by "a very experienced crew," stroked by returning seniors Sarah Jones, Wendy Wilbur and Deanna Groark, all returning from last year's crew. Also in the first boat are Jennifer Strong, Jeanne Sussman, Neyla Leslie, Nancy LaRocque and Kim Sleath.

Dietz feels that this weekend is critical for the second varsity boat "because depending on how they do [this weekend] the NCAA invitation will go out to them."

The second fleet of rowers for UMass are Amy Kenney, Melissa Allen, Carolyn McGonagle, Renee Domina, Heather Schmitz, Nicolle LaFreniere, Lori Smith and Amy Coughlin.

base, was tabbed as Player of the Week.

Henderson's honors came on the heels of a week that included a no-hitter and 51 strikeouts. She picked up three wins and a pair of saves over the course of last week en route to breaking Lynn Stockley's 11-year-old school record for strikeouts in a game.

Gutridge has recorded a .311 batting average and 24 RBIs on the year. She has recorded 33 hits that include nine doubles and one homerun. A week ago, Gutridge broke Martha Jamieson's career mark of 1,172 putouts.

While Gutridge and Henderson took home the conference honors this past Sunday, they were not the only Minutewomen with lofty accomplishments. Junior pitcher Liz Wagner recorded a no-hitter in the same outing as Henderson, only the second occurrence in school history of a double no-hitter. The first no-hitter of her career, Wagner only walked one batter.

The UMass record watch is also not limited to Henderson and Gutridge. Senior Sam Cardenas, who handles the job at third base and is batting .258, is only three RBIs short of breaking the record mark of 119. She is also only one extra-base hit shy of Amy Aprile's career mark of 71.

For the Minutewomen, Tracy Osier is batting .286, Mandy Galas is at .279 and Katie Kendarski is batting .250. The Minutewomen have connected for 32 doubles and six triples — including a pair from Galas. Nicole Faessler and Kelly Buckly own the team's only other homeruns.

Yesterday's game has not yet been rescheduled.

Harvard beat Brown by one goal the last time the two teams met, and Newcomb is confident that at New Englands, it will also be a close match.

"It could be either team," Newcomb said. "I think it will be another one-goal game."

At the match this past weekend, the Minutewomen beat then No. 19 Harvard 24-4. Earlier this year, the Minutewomen won their match against Brown 11-6.

Newcomb is confident that New Englands will pose no problem for his team, and that they will return to Amherst victorious.

"Yes, I think we will win," Newcomb said. "This team is good enough to be able to get through this weekend with a positive attitude, and they have the ability to get through this weekend winning the tournament."

If the Minutewomen win this tournament, they will enter next weekend's Eastern Championships as the No. 2 seed. Newcomb said he is looking to help his team finish in the top three at Easterns, which would guarantee the Minutewomen a trip to Nationals.

"We are just trying to get everybody exciting about playing this weekend and setting us up for the next three tournaments," Newcomb said. "I think we are looking forward to setting ourselves up for the weeks to come and this is a good way to start."

er in the USHL with 88 points (32g, 56a), starring for the Rochester Mustangs, and Waltis finished third in scoring (43g, 78a, 121 pts) in the British Columbia Junior Hockey League for the Nanaimo Clippers.

The addition of more relatives of former Boston Bruins greats continues with Hodge, son of Ken, who will join freshman forward Jeff Blanchard, the nephew of Bobby Orr, on the team. Hodge was named the best pro prospect at Hockey Night in Boston last year, and was the leading scorer for the Boston Bulldogs of the North American Hockey League.

Matt Smith will fit right in on the backline, as the 6-foot- 5, two-time MVP of the Ontario Provincial Junior Hockey League will join towers like Brad Norton, Tom O'Connor and Dean Stork on defense.

him at the top of the list for all-time runs scored for UMass, tying Bill Knight's record of 157, set between 1992-95. Gorrie's 26 steals is No. 1 in the nation.

Along with Gorrie's success, two-time Atlantic 10 Player of the Week Doug Clark answered the call with a grand spank in the second game against Maine, which kept the Minutemen alive long enough to take over the game. The poke was Clark's ninth homerun of the season. He is currently leading UMass with a .432 batting average, 42 RBIs and 38 hits.

Also for the Minutemen, Brian Samela has risen to the top of the charts with a .406 batting average, five homeruns, 17 RBIs and 26 hits.

Jason Bennett (5-1) will start on the mound for the Minutemen. It's the first game Bennett will pitch in since becoming the winningest pitcher in UMass history.

Now that the monkey is off his back he can completely concentrate with the job at hand. Bennett has two wins and two saves in the last two weeks. His 4.61 ERA is tops for Minutemen starting pitchers.

Bill Cooke (3-2, with a 5.35 ERA) will start in the second game of the doubleheader. He has only allowed eight runs in the last two games he has pitched.

Jeff Puleri (2-1, 5.20 ERA) has become the third man in the Minutemen rotation after his impressive display last weekend against Temple.

by No. 1 singles player Todd Chaney to John Cerga 3-6, 2-6. The usually consistent Chaney suffered many mental errors, while there was no real talent disparity between the two team leaders.

"It was unfortunate to lose first singles, but I have no doubt Todd will bounce back for the tournament," Knuth said.

Otherwise, the team was pretty solid. No. 2 singles player Pat Slyman came back to beat Alex Bancila 2-6, 6-0, 6-4, while third singles Rob Manchester took care of Tony Silva 6-0, 6-4.

In the four spot, Alex Aller vanquished Matt Kochis 7-5, 6-4, and freshman Bo Navarro handled the five spot 7-5, 6-0 over Tom Reis. Parsa Samii won the sixth singles match with ease 6-3, 6-2 over Mike Coino.

UMass took the doubles point as well.

Hopefully, for the Minutemen, this win will propel them to the next level heading into Virginia for the weekend tournament. Manchester, one of the team's freshmen, was exuberant after his easy victory.

"I believe this victory will give us the confidence we need for the A-10 tournament. Everybody felt good out on the court today," Manchester said.

"We all have high expectations for the tournament after such a great season."

Looking ahead to this weekend at Virginia Tech, the field is pretty tough. The seeds have not yet been officially determined, but UMass should receive either the No. 4 or No. 5 slot.

While Knuth did not want to make an official prediction, he seems certain that the Minutemen are up to the task at hand.

"Anything could happen in a tournament like this," Knuth said. "Every team is out there gunning for each other.

"We will be depending on mental preparation the whole way through. It would be great to knock off some of the top teams in the conference," Knuth said.

matches.

Gerasmiova lost her set 6-2, 7-5 but was strong in the outing, as was Gorodetskaya at No. 6 with a 6-1, 6-4 defeat.

Caron at No. 2 and Braunstein at No. 3 were both defeated 6-2, 6-2, respectively, and Steele at No. 5 lost 6-1, 6-2. Durant finished off her senior campaign at No. 4, but lost her match 6-2, 6-3.

In the tournament this weekend, the Minutewomen are almost going in blind because they do not play many of the teams in the Atlantic 10 throughout the year, but the level of competition from Wednesday's match helps them to prepare.

"It is really tough, because you only see these teams once a year and you don't get a chance to scout them," Lowry said.

"What? Oh, geez, no. The baby's not due until September. We just got our sonogram results today."

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20
Clear away all distractions early in the week, and you'll be able to enjoy some unbroken concentration later. Stress on a particularly thorny problem and you may come to a new understanding. This weekend, eschew loud gatherings in favor of spending time with a friend.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21
This week holds promise for being unusually productive. Long trips and long, rambling conversations yield fruitful results. Your cheerful attitude and winning personality could lighten up another person's entire mood, so don't be shy—draw them out!

GEMINI
May 22–June 21
This is a terrible week to indulge in gossip. No matter how good your intentions are, things will backfire so keep your mouth closed instead. Don't hesitate to help where it's needed; however, just offer it in an open, friendly manner to avoid any costly misunderstandings.

CANCER
June 22–July 22
Staying at home instead of looking for adventure helps you bank a little extra money. It will come to handy later in the week, or possibly in a week or two. The conservative approach is best, especially when it comes to handling your finances this week.

LEO
July 23–August 23
Treat yourself and a friend to a culinary experiment. You've got nothing to lose, and it could be a bit of fun. This week is also good for making lifestyle changes that involve your diet or exercise. Your resolve is unusually strong, so you can stick to your new routine.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22
Head away from the beaten path to add a touch of adventure to your life. Face up to your responsibilities. No one else can handle them for you, so don't expect to be let off the hook. A close friend offers support during a particularly difficult time.

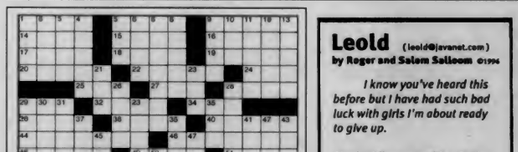
LIBRA
September 23–October 23
A free-spirited acquaintance has a great outlook. Follow that lead, and your mood should improve dramatically toward the weekend. Early in the week, expect an the unexpected. You may not be able to plan for it, but you'll be better prepared to roll with things.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22
Get some busy work out of the way early in the week to clear the way for an enjoyable weekend. If you can't afford a getaway, try to treat your suite or sweetie to little things, like breakfast in bed. Don't let yourself be talked into anything—back off and then make your own decisions.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21
Getting a talkative person to buckle down and get some work done will be a chore, but if you use your charm, it may not be as bad as you expect. If you're planning a purchase, don't overlook nontraditional sources for finding the things you need at a reasonable price.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20
Use your creativity to stretch your budget and create a memorable occasion. Romance is favored toward the weekend, so take a risk—ask that special someone for a date, or share your feelings with your sweetheart. Call an old friend this week.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18
If you're trying to keep a secret, watch out for inadvertent slips. If the wrong person hears the right thing, all your careful effort could be in vain. Avoid outdoors for an antidote to a bad case of spring fever. You might even put some roses in your cheeks!



PISCES
February 19–March 20
Avoid impulse spending—a bill could be looming. This week is a good time to reorganize—whether it's closets, drawers, finances or priorities. If you need a loan or some advice, count on a friend whom you've known for years

Lax faces crucial contest against Notre Dame

By Jeremy R. Adams
Collegian Staff

On the weekend of Paul Revere's historic ride, on the day the original Minutemen were first tested in battle, the Irish are invading Massachusetts. With blue and gold in lieu of red coats, the Notre Dame men's lacrosse team comes to Richard F. Garber Field on Sunday to commemorate the historic battle at 1:30 p.m.

Or maybe it's just going to be one heck of a lacrosse game between two nationally ranked opponents looking to claim a spot in the NCAA championship tournament.

"They're a very good team," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "They're very well disciplined on offense, and they're very unselfish. Hopefully we can get some good matchups on them."

Currently ranked in the top 10, Notre Dame is believed by many to be a contender for a final four berth.

"I think anybody [ranked] from No. 5 to No. 15 could be in the final four, you just have to string together a couple of wins," Cannella said.

Notre Dame is 6–1, not including a late game against Air Force last night. The lone blemish on the Irish's record was a loss to Loyola, which came from behind to beat the Minutemen last weekend in Amherst. Notre Dame also beat Hofstra, who was No. 4 at the time and accountable for UMass' second loss of the season on March 22.

No. 9 Notre Dame will be the seventh top 20 team and the fifth top 10 team on the Minutemen's docket, with No. 6 Syracuse still to come on April 26 at Warren P. McGuirk Stadium.

UMass has won both meetings with Notre Dame, including last year's 8–5 contest at South Bend, Ind. The Minutemen's situation going into the meeting in 1996 was similar to this year, UMass had just dropped a heartbreaker to Harvard in Amherst, setting up a crucial contest with ND. Brendan Glass was the only UMass multiple scorer, with two goals, six others tallied once.

If recent trend is any indication, Glass will likely come through again this year against the blue and gold. Since going goalless with three assists against Duke, Glass has notched multiple goals in every game. Against New Hampshire and Loyola he scored back to back hat tricks, and his shots found twine four times against Harvard.

"He's been great," Cannella said. "Right now he's hitting his stride. He's finally gotten over his shin splints and gotten into reasonable shape and feels good when he gets out onto the field. Obviously that's important for our offense."

Equally important, Cannella says, has been the play of his defensive midfielders and the added offensive consistency of short stick middie Chris Grande.

"He's consistently ready to play for every game, physically and mentally," Cannella said. "He's a guy that, stepping on to the field, brings a lot of confidence and being able to score those goals early brings a lot of confidence to the rest of the team."

The game will be broadcast from Garber Field on 91.1 FM, WMUA. Pregame will begin 15 minutes before the 1:30 p.m. start.

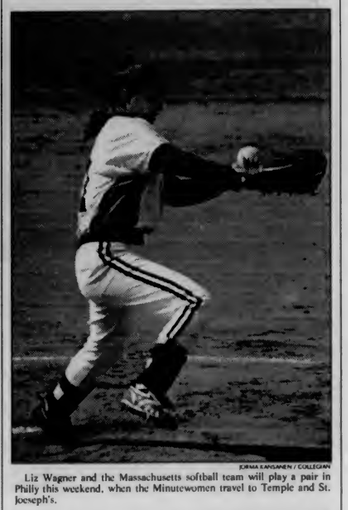
Softball escapes to Philly to face conference pair

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

After rain wiped out yesterday's doubleheader at Rhode Island, and with worse weather predicted for the coming weekend the Massachusetts softball team will head south rather than stay in state.



The Minutewomen will face a pair of doubleheaders, with a Saturday date against Temple (12 p.m.) and a Sunday tilt with St. Joseph's (12 p.m.).

The Owls currently occupies third place in the Atlantic 10 standings with a 15–22 overall record and a 5–3 mark in conference. The Hawks, who sport a 25–9, 7–1 record are the No. 2 team in the A–10.

However, it is Massachusetts which sits atop the standings with a 19–15 overall record and a perfect 7–0 A–10 showing. The Minutewomen have won 23 straight regular–season conference contests, two shy of the school record of 25.

The Minutewomen have been led by a pair of Atlantic 10 honorees. Sophomore pitcher Danielle Henderson was named A–10 Pitcher of the Week, while Kim Gutridge, who plays first

UM baseball faces Fordham in conference tilt

Seven straight wins might be considered a hot streak. Providence College, Central Connecticut, Temple and Maine have all fallen victim to the onslaught that has been unleashed by the Massachusetts baseball team.

UMass (17–6, 6–3 A–10) now must keep its streak alive in this weekend's Atlantic 10 matchup against Fordham (21–11, 6–3 A–10). Both teams are deadlocked with six wins apiece in the A–10. Therefore, this weekend's in–conference match could be the most important one UMass has played in yet.

The first two games of the series will be played tomorrow at 12 p.m. in Bronx, N.Y. The third and final game is on Sunday, also at 12 p.m.

This series against the Rams is even more crucial as the Minutemen head into the second half of the season. Every game counts, and for UMass to be successful come tournamanent time, it must win every series against conference opponents. It will take a complete effort from the entire ballclub.

Fortunately for the Minutemen coaching staff, that's what it has had for the last seven games — a team that can come back from behind, play solid defense and give it's starting pitchers the run support they need.

UMass will need those attributes, considering Fordham's top hitter, Mike Marchiano, is among the nation's leaders with 22 homeruns and 58 RBIs, while batting .336.

On the Amherst side of things, Brad Gorrie (.398) has been on fire on the basepaths and had a tremendous outing, both on the field and at the plate against the Black Bears on Wednesday. A three–run blast in the first game helped put

Hockey signs five recruits to ease graduation crunch

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

Four years ago, coach Joe Mallen had to recruit the best of what was around for the newest edition of the Massachusetts hockey program. That first class put UMass onto the Hockey East scene, and this year's recruiting class should help put the Minutemen on the national scene.

Five new recruits, joining an early season signee, will help fill the holes of a large graduating class.

"I think that this recruiting class provides our program with higher skill level than any class in the past," Mallen said. "This marks a big step for our team to have some highly–sought after recruits pick UMass."

One of the recruits for this class marks a departure for UMass — but an arrival at Logan Airport. Goaltender Marcus Helanen will be the first major recruit for UMass from across the pond, coming to Amherst from Vantaa, Finland. Helanen had the lowest goals–against–average and save percentage in the Finnish Junior A League for the 1996 European Cup champions, Jokerit of Helsinki.

A foursome of forwards should help 1996 All–Hockey East forward and Maine transfer Tim Lovell fill the considerable scoring gap left behind by seniors Rob Bonneau (16 goals, 31 assists, 47 points) and Warren Norris (20g, 26a, 46pts). Nick Stephens, Jeff Turner, Kris Wallis and Brendan Hodge are coming off successful junior league campaigns, and will compete for playing time on the Minuteman squad.

Stephens finished his season with the St. Paul Vulcans of the United States Hockey League by scoring 17 points (10g, 7a) in 48 games. The 1996 All–Minnesota selection signed last November with UMass, and is projected as one of the top prospects in the 1997 NHL Entry Draft.

Tennis teams head to Virginia for Atlantic 10 tourneys

Men strong after spring

By Sanford Appell
Collegian Correspondent

Winning has almost become a formality for the Massachusetts men's tennis team this year. This trend continued on Wednesday afternoon at Fordham University, and in the first ever meeting between the two schools UMass prevailed handily 6–1.

This was an inspiring, if not treacherous, victory for the Minutemen. For one thing, it came against a division opponent with the Atlantic 10 tournament commencing on Friday.

Additionly, while a 6–1 victory may not seem close on paper, many matches did come down to the wire.

Even though Fordham came into the match with an impressive record of 11–1, UMass was expected to pull this one out going into it. However, the Minutemen did have to show their grit to walk away as winners.

"It was not our prettiest win of the year, but mentally our guys showed up and took care of business when they had to," assistant coach Doug Knuth said.

The big disappointment of the afternoon was the loss

Minutewomen gunning for strong showing this year

By Mike Corey

This afternoon the Massachusetts women's tennis team will compete in the highlight of its season, the Atlantic 10 tournament in Blacksburg, Va. The tourney will continue through Sunday, and the Minutewomen are picked for their highest finish ever at third place, with second not that far out of reach.

"The expectation is there, and last year we did what we had to do in finishing fourth, but this year there is a little more pressure to keep our seed and to uphold the expectation," assistant coach Tom Lowry said.

The Minutewomen have had a strong season up to this point. Their last preparational match was on Wednesday afternoon when they fell to Boston University 8–1.

However, considering that BU is a nationally ranked team and probably headed to the NCAA tournament, the Minutewomen put up a battle that could not been seen from the score. The match was a stepping stone for the program, as the Minutewomen are beginning to face tougher teams and are competing strongly against them.

It couldn't of been a better match going into the A–10's according to Lowry.

"It was the first time we played them, and we got a lot of respect out of them and they didn't take us lightly," Lowry said, "It really was a good loss. I told them to go out there with the attitude that they do belong out there on the court with this team, even though the score might not show it, every game and every point was competitive and fun to watch, It wasn't a blowout."

The Minutewomen won the No. 3 doubles match for their only point in the contest, as sophomore Jackie Braunstein and junior Lana Gorodetskaya won 8–4 over Karen Shostakovsky and Michelle Magid.

"They really dominated them on the overhead shots," Lowry said.

At No. 2 doubles junior Marie–Christine Caron and senior Liz Durant contested their match very well, and it was tied at 8–8 before they lost the tiebreaker 7–2.

The No. 1 doubles team of freshman Ola Gerasimova and junior Caroline Steele wasn't able to come up with the victory either, as they lost 8–2. Individually though, they each competed well in the singles

New England's next for UM water polo

By Lisa M. Oliveri

The No. 8 Massachusetts women's water polo team heads to Williamston this weekend as the No. 1 seed in the New England Championships.

The Minutewomen just finished up a home tournament in which they won all four matches. The Minutewomen stand at 17–3 overall on the season, and are 7–0 in CWPA league play.

This is the first time in school history that UMass enters New Englands as the No. 1 seed. According to UMass coach Bob Newcomb, having the top seed doesn't really affect the attitude of the team.

"Being the No. 1 seed is something the team has worked on all year long," Newcomb said. "It's something we deserve. They are just going to go in and do the fundamentals that got us there."

This weekend UMass is slated to play Boston University, MIT, Wesleyan and the winner of the Harvard–Brown game. None of these games should pose any problems for the Minutewomen, though according to Newcomb, playing the winner of the Harvard–Brown game will be their toughest competition.

Teens burn Brazilian Indian chief as 'joke'

BRASILIA, Brazil — Playing what they said was "a joke," five teenagers set fire to a Brazilian Indian chief sleeping on a bench and burned him to death.

Galdino Jesus dos Santos, leader of the Pataxo tribe, died early yesterday at the Asa Norte hospital with burns over 95 percent of his body.

Dos Santos was sleeping on a bus-stop bench early Sunday because he had stayed late at a party marking National Indian Day and had been locked out of his boarding house, police said.

The youths, ages 17 to 19, squirted a flammable liquid on dos Santos and set him on fire, police chief Marco Aurelio Martins said.

Marcos Euclides, a passing motorist, saw the man on fire and the teenagers speeding away in a car. He jotted down the license plate number and raced back to help douse the flames, then notified police.

Hours later, police arrested the driver, who confessed and named his companions. All were from upper-middle-class families from Brasilia, the Brazilian capital.

Chrysler strike affects other plants in region

DETROIT — The effects of an 11-day strike at a Chrysler engine plant spread yesterday to Indiana and Mexico, where workers were told to stay home.

The latest layoffs brought the number of Chrysler workers idled to 22,393, including the 1,800 strikers. Fifteen plants in the United States, Canada and Mexico have been affected.

As contract talks continued by telephone yesterday with the United Auto Workers, Chrysler refused to back down on its right to farm out 300 union-covered jobs to an independent supplier. The contract in dispute is a local one, affecting only the Detroit engine plant. The strike has shut down North American production of Chrysler's highly profitable Dodge Ram and Dakota pickups and Jeep Grand Cherokee sport utility vehicles. It also has stopped production of the Dodge Viper sports car and Dodge Ram vans.

Pickup assembly lines in Lago Alberto and Saltillo in Mexico went down last week and workers were told yesterday they were laid off indefinitely, spokesman Tony Cervone said.

In Kokomo, Ind., 2,362 workers at two parts plants were laid off yesterday.

Mount Holyoke student protest intensifies

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY — Standing beneath the historic gates of Mount Holyoke College, the first women's institute of higher education in the nation, student protesters gathered yesterday to voice their frustration over the lack of what they saw as true negotiations between students and administration. A significant portion of the frustration and anger was directed at Mount Holyoke President Joanne Creighton.

"The women of Mount Holyoke College are women of honor. What kind of woman are you Joanne Creighton? When you refuse to give a public apology [for racist comments], what kind of woman are you? Joanne Creighton, if you're here, step up to the mike," said senior student negotiator Fabiola Tafolla during the 2 p.m. rally.

Moments after Creighton's absence was known, and immediately following the rally, a procession led to the Mary Lyon Building, the head administrative office at Mount Holyoke. Approximately 50 students took over the building at 2:45 p.m. Over 100 students remained outside as they chanted slogans of solidarity and support.

The takeover of Mary Lyon marks the most dramatic event of this tumultuous week on the usually quiet South Hadley campus which has been the scene of numerous rallies since 300 students walked out of class on April 15. Yesterday's protest also marks the second takeover of the week; on Thursday approximately 75 students, withstanding threats of suspension and arrest, took over the Newhall Admissions Office for 30 hours.

At press time, the takeover was in its eighth hour and, according to both student and college reports, there were few signs of students standing down.

According to Meghan Freed, student press spokeswoman, the administration, in an effort to end the take–over, issued letters of suspension to the students still inside Mary Lyon at 4:40 p.m. if they did not leave before 5 p.m. An estimated 25 students remained.

Dean of Students Regina E. Mooney wrote on Friday that suspended students are "required to leave the campus within 48 hours and lose credit for courses in which [they] are now enrolled."

No other action was taken by the college the with the exception of increased police presence.

Student protesters inside Mary Lyon sent Creighton a letter stating that if she would agree with their five altered demands (see sidebar) they would leave the building.

Sophomore Stacy Haynes noted that this letter intended to force Creighton to agree to all of the demands, unlike a letter issued by the students during the initial takeover that simply asked for further negotiations.

"We can't trust her," said Haynes referring to Creighton and her alleged failure to compromise with the students.

President Creighton has not issued an official statement in regards to either yesterday's events or the letter from the student protesters.

According to Freed, Creighton has been meeting with head college officials in an emergency meeting at the President's House; at press time the meeting was still on.

College Spokesman Kevin McCafferty said, "it is safe to say [Creighton] is deeply concerned and saddened that our good faith effort to resolve these issues have taken this latest turn."

The Demands

Yesterday's rally, preceding the Mary Lyon takeover, focussed on four main issues: the retainment of need–blind admission standards, the development of an Asian–American Studies program, the hiring of four religious chaplains and the establishment of safe spaces for the lesbian/transgendered and the Asian/Asian–American population.

The rally came following a weekend of discussion with students and administration. Though the students and the administration met for over 8 hours this weekend, the two sides differ on the progress actually made.

"Over the course of those two days [Saturday and Sunday] the administration put forward a number of changed and evolved proposals that led the President and the administration to believe that we were optimistic that we were moving to agreement on a number of key issues," McCafferty said, pointing out the administration's "Progress Report" dated April 20.

But many student protesters saw little progress in this report. Sophomore Stacy Haynes said, "The report did not address our demands."

Throughout the hour long rally student speakers voiced this similar concern.

The first speaker, Amanda Sapir discussed the importance that Mount Holyoke maintains its present admissions policy of need–blind. Under this system, the college does not base admission on financial need. Mount Holyoke officials have maintained that this process has become financially impossible for the school to retain.

According to the College's "Progress Report," "Failing to make this change [from need–blind to need–sensitive] would undermine our ability to maintain an excellent educational environment because it would necessitate deep cuts in the academic program, student services and other areas."

Sapir acknowledged that the need–blind policy may be costly but indispensable to upholding school tradition.

"The fact is: that Mount Holyoke spends 5.75–6.5 percent of its endowment for student services. Peer institutions spend 5 percent — this represents a deficit. The facts are Mount Holyoke College spends more, but Mount Holyoke College offers a lot more," Sapir said, noting the school's effort to prevent the institution of classist policies and the school's continuing effort to afford "safe space" for women of color.

"That little bit more [funding] represents the intangible and profound addition to this community that we will not, and refuse to, live without... Sacrifices may need to be made [but] need–blind admissions is not one of them," Sapir said, concluding her speech.

Editor's note: The following is a list of five revised demands made by Mount Holyoke students who their administration. As of 2:45 on Monday, the students have occupied the Mary Lyon administration building.

List of revised demands (including student compromises)
April 21, 1997

1. Postpone the decision to instate need–sensitive admissions for five to 10 percent of applicants] for one year, pending further education and understanding by the whole Mount Holyoke community.

2. Allocate one separate space each, not including dining rooms, Blanchard Campus Center or basement rooms to the Lesbian/Bisexual/Transgendered community and the Asian/Asian American community by the end of Spring of 1998.

3. Create an Asian American Studies program in conjunction with the Five Colleges and hire at least one tenure track Asian American professor within this program by the end of Spring of 1998.

4. Maintain the Assistant Dean of Students position as it currently exists, as the liaison to the ALANA groups, according to the description in the Student Handbook.

5. Ensure that the interim Dean of the Chapel has the authority and the funds in the Eliot House budget for the hiring of four permanent chaplains of varied backgrounds, and that the search committee to find these chaplains will be made up of at least 25 percent students.

The status of on–campus chaplains has also been a key issue discussed over the past week. According to the Mount Holyoke News, on April 8 the three present chaplains, Rabbi Devorah Jacobson, Catholic Chaplain Mary Sue Callan–Farley and Protestant Chaplain Andrea Ayvazian were notified that they would not be re–hired for the fall semester. In their replacement, Assistant Professor John Grayson would serve as interim Dean of the Chapel.

At yesterday's afternoon rally, student protester Chavvah Penner voiced her concern over the consolidation of the chaplaincy.

During her emotional speech, Penner reminisced about the significance of having the Rabbi who was always there during here first year at school.

UM Nursing students travel to Ghana health care clinic

By Laura Forster
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts School of Nursing is providing 10 students with the opportunity to travel to Ghana where they will provide health care to residents in a church–based clinic.

The graduate students left last Friday and will stay until May 1, with faculty members Leda McKenry and Anita St. Clair. This is the second year nursing students have had the opportunity to travel to Ghana.

In addition to the Ghana trip, nursing students also had the opportunity to travel to Jamaica and Ireland last January. Students worked in community hospitals, staying either in dorms, at the church parish or with families in the surrounding community.

McKenry said that on their last trip in the fall, the students used supplies donated by pharmaceutical companies to care for about 2,000 people in seven days, as well as handing out clothes and toy donations.

St. Clair explained the students' work which includes providing acute care to patients and educating the community workers on how to stay healthy through nutrition, hygiene and sanitation.

On her second trip, St. Clair will be able to tell whether the education the students provided on the last visit helped make a difference in the Jamaican health care. St. Clair hopes to bring immunizations for malaria soon since it is currently a serious problem there.

Drawing upon students' feedback, St. Clair says that after completing the clinic, students felt more "culturally competent."

"The students feel it has made them more open–minded, regardless of race and age, more patient, and better able to listen and work with patients incorporating their own beliefs," St. Clair said.

St. Clair found that students were faced with making adaptations to their skills due to the different culture.

"We have some of our own preconceived notions of what's best [for medical treatment] and by working with diverse populations, students are much more sensitive and willing to accept individuals who do not want medicine," St. Clair said.

Tonya Carlino was one of the undergraduate nursing students who traveled to Jamaica. A senior graduating this May, Carlino worked in a rural area not often visited by tourists, at the St. Thomas parish hospital.

Carlino, who hopes to become an emergency room nurse, said she chose to go to Jamaica because of the "direct patient contact... and more hands–on experience."

In regards to the difference in culture, Carlino noticed the Jamaican nurses using a lot of "eye and hand" in contrast to the technology used in the United States.

"It is not necessarily as quick but it works," Carlino said.

Sanitary conditions primitive in flooded North Dakota

By Jeremiah Gardner
Associated Press

GRAND FORKS, N.D. — With a record flood filling most of the city with filthy water, city officials said yesterday they were considering stringing a hose up to 22 miles across the prairie to bring in clean water so people could at least wash their hands. "What people take for granted day to day, like taking a shower and washing clothes, isn't going to happen for quite a while," said National Guard Capt. Greg Bowen. "The sanitary conditions are primitive at best."

The Red River that had flooded 75 percent of the city also shut down the municipal water treatment plant, and there was no water service for the estimated 10 percent of the city's 50,000 inhabitants who hadn't left yet.

"The toilet part is the worst," Richard George said. "We just flush it with melted snow. We were melting snow on the barbecue grill."

Portable bathrooms and drinking water stations were scattered throughout the city's still-dry extreme west end. In public and motel restrooms, the stench built up until crews could periodically come by with flushing water.

The city also supplied most of the water for Grand Forks Air Force Base, where more than 2,000 of the city's refugees were staying.

The base still had a reserve of clean water, was pumping some water from a nearby small town and planned to bring in 20 large tanker trucks, said a spokesman, Capt. Byron Spencer.

In the meantime, he said: "We're asking people not to use the washing machine, limit their shower usage, things like that." President Clinton planned to fly over the flooded area and visit the Air Force base today, the White House said.

City officials held a meeting yesterday afternoon to discuss the proposal for a long water pipeline.

The city water treatment plant and sewer system are expected to be flooded for weeks, and Bowen said the temporary hose or pipeline also could be used to speed up the process of restoring service once the flood ebbs. The city uses about 8 million gallons of water a day

In addition, the students were introduced to different sorts of illnesses and problems of the Jamaican community.

Carlino said she found that because the Jamaican nurses did not have as much "active research," the students were able to exchange a great deal of information. However, Carlino still felt the students benefitted more from the experience than the Jamaican staff benefitted from students.

In addition to the hands-on experience which the students will benefit from, McKenry, one of the faculty travel leaders, pointed out the impact it has on them as individuals.

"For many students, this experience is a turning point in their lives," McKenry said.

McKenry and St. Clair say they are currently looking into the possibility for clinical training sites in countries such as India, Japan, Haiti and Puerto Rico.

"It's our responsibility to teach our students the skills they need to practice nursing in the community," McKenry said. "And we mean 'community' in the most literal, global sense."

"We don't want an administrator running our spiritual life... we need people who understand and be able to talk heart-to-heart," Penner said. "[How is it] that one person would be able to take over the jobs of three amazing women?"

The student demands call for the hiring of four permanent chaplains of varied backgrounds and increased student involvement in the hiring process. Besides chaplains of the Catholic, Protestant and Jewish faiths, protesters are calling for a full time Muslim chaplain.

Another student protester, Carmen Lopez, issued a cry for the need of safe space the lesbian/bisexual/transgendered and Asian/Asian-American communities.

"Mount Holyoke College was founded on the idea of safe space — giving women opportunity to educate themselves and having that safe space to develop their identity," Lopez said

"What is it going to take to make this administration understand? We shouldn't have to stand on the side of the road with signs," Lopez said as several crowds drove by on Route 116 beeping their horns in support.

"The lesbian community has been working on [gaining] safe space since 1965," Lopez said.

Lopez's frustration with the stalled negotiations and the lack of concern given by the administration mirrored Elizabeth Simon Ruchti who dedicated her time on the microphone to explaining the frustration of hearing administrators laugh at students during negotiations meetings.

"This isn't a compromise, it's a game. When you have to define the word 'negotiation' to the president of your college and repeat the same question six times because she wasn't listening — that's frustrating," Ruchti said regarding the failed negotiation meetings with student protesters and the administration.

As the rally ended, Fabiola Tafolla quoted former Mount Holyoke president Ellizabeth Kennan, "the gift we give to another is honor." before asking the crowd what type of woman Creighton is.

Tafolla emphasized, "we're not here because we're radicals... we're here because we're right."

The group of protesters proceeded to take over the Mary Lyon Building, a stones-throw away from the Gates of the College.

Weekend Events

On Friday night student negotiators agreed to exit the occupied Newhall Admissions Office under the sole condition that President Creighton would meet with students to discuss their demands. The two sides met twice over the weekend for 3 1/2 hours on Sunday and 4 1/2 hours on Saturday but according to student protester Amanda Sapir little was accomplished with the exception of a few minor concessions.

Sapir noted that the administration did not compromise at all during the meetings, and in that sense, Creighton breached the signed contract from Friday night.

According to a press release distributed by student protesters, "During extensive hours over the weekend, multiple compromises were presented on the part of the student negotiators. The administration refused to commit to any of the proposed options, bringing the process to a halt."

"The administration has put forward clarifications, amplifications and revised positions that we believe will lead to an agreement with the students or better understanding on many issues as the process moves forward," Mount Holyoke spokesman Kevin McCaffrey said in an interview with the Associated Press.

Yesterday's student take-over took place despite the fact that a third meeting between students and negotiators was planned for 9 a.m. today. According to McCaffrey the meeting is still scheduled.

The initial Takeover

On Thursday afternoon at 4 p.m., following two days of rallies and protests, approximately 75-100 Mount Holyoke students took over the Newhall Admissions Building. The takeover lasted 30 hours.

The Newhall pull-out at 10 p.m. on Friday came six hours after the Dean of Students Regina E. Mooney warned the students inside the occupied building. "Should you choose to remain, you will be suspended from the college for the rest of the semester."

Approximately 15 students remained inside, after the College's threats of suspension. The College suspended the suspension.

At 10 p.m. President Creighton and the students signed a contract mandating subsequent negotiations between the two sides.

Five College support has been vocal throughout the last week. University of Massachusetts Student Government President Lea Wong, the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) and Student Trustee-Elect Brian Tirrell have endorsed the student's campaign. Also, several Five College students have participated in the on-going protests.

"There are certain issues that transcend location. These are issues that were fought for in Goodell. Why wouldn't I fight for them just down the road?" said UMass student Will Watts, a sophomore legal studies major.

HOLLIDAYSBURG, Pa. — A couple who believed that prayer can heal should not be prosecuted in the death of their teen-age daughter because they did not intend for her to die, their attorney said today.

Lorie and Dennis Nixon of Altoona went on trial on involuntary manslaughter charges in the death of 16-year-old Shannon Nixon last year. She died of a heart attack brought on by untreated diabetes. The couple, who belong to the Faith Tabernacle Church, also lost a son to illness several years earlier.

"This case is not about the prosecution of criminals. This case is about the persecution of well-intended, well-meaning parents," defense attorney Steven Passarello told jurors in Blair County Court.

District Attorney William Haberstroh said doctors will testify this week that "there is absolutely no reason why this child should have died."

State law requires parents to protect children who are younger than 18, he said. He pointed out that Shannon had been to a doctor as a requirement for her drivers' license and had seen a dentist. Shannon had complained to her parents for several days that she wasn't feeling well, she vomited repeatedly and she was constantly thirsty, the parents told police at the time. She asked for a healing ceremony from the church rather than a doctor. She was unconscious for several hours before she died, with a minister and her parents praying over her.

Five years earlier, the couple's 8-year-old son, Clayton, died of an inner-ear infection. That time, they pleaded no contest and were sentenced to probation. They also were ordered to perform community service in a hospital at the request of Haberstroh, who wanted them to see the positive effects of medicine.

But no hospital would accept them as volunteers, so they performed their community service elsewhere, he said.

The couple have eight surviving children and Mrs. Nixon, 44, is pregnant again. Haberstroh has said he would not seek more than a year in prison if they are convicted.

Former drill sergeant faces rape trial

By David Dishneau
Associated Press

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. — Two trainees who accused a former Army drill sergeant of rape made no secret of wanting to have sex with him, witnesses testified yesterday.

One of the women said she "thought he was sexy" and paraded by his office in short-shorts and a bikini top. Pfc. Divina Scott testified yesterday at the court-martial of Staff Sgt. Delmar Simpson. "She said she thought he was sexy and if the chance was given to her that she would have sex with him," added Pfc. Carnesia Jones.

Scott and Jones both characterized the woman as a compulsive liar.

Both said the other accuser told them that she, too, wanted to have sex with Simpson. Jones said she told her "he had a sexy bald head."

Simpson, 32, is one of 12 Aberdeen Proving Ground staff members charged with criminal sexual misconduct. He is charged with 54 crimes ranging from sexual invitations to rape involving 13 women from his former company.

Simpson has already pleaded guilty to having sex with 11 women subordinates in violation of Army regulations and he faces up to 32 years in prison for those charges. He could be sentenced to life in prison if found guilty of a single rape conviction.

His lawyers, who began presenting their case Friday, contend the women participated willingly and Simpson is not guilty of rape. They have argued the women only pressed charges when investigators bullied them or offered them leniency in disciplinary cases. One of Simpson's lawyers, Capt. Edward Brady, said he expected the defense to rest today. He said Simpson hasn't decided whether to testify. In a major setback for the defense, however, the judge in the case ruled Friday that drill sergeants have so much power over trainees that they don't need to use a weapon or threaten force to be found guilty of rape.

The judge further stated that the women need not resist or object, either, for Simpson to be found guilty of rape.

Also yesterday, an Army drill instructor at Fort Leonard Wood in Missouri pleaded guilty to posing for a nude photograph taken by two female trainees but pleaded innocent to other charges. Drill Sgt. Calvin E. Daniels said the trainees asked him to pose for a photograph with his shirt off at their Dec. 7 graduation from the eight-week basic training course. Daniels said that led to a photograph of him in his underwear, then to the nude shot. "I got caught up in all the excitement and made a bad decision," said Daniels.

Daniels, 36, of Vienna, Ga., pleaded guilty to violation of a lawful general regulation. He pleaded innocent to charges of sodomy and adultery, and his court-martial on those charges continued.

Chirac orders early elections in France

By Christopher Burns
Associated Press

PARIS — President Jacques Chirac ordered early parliamentary elections yesterday in a risky move intended to save his conservative coalition and get a voter mandate for tax and spending cuts.

Chirac asked voters to show their support for his austerity measures in elections May 25 and June 1, about nine months ahead of the originally scheduled March 1998 vote.

Chirac is struggling with record 12.8 percent unemployment, is down in the polls and faces battles over budget cuts to qualify France for participation in the single European currency. He's gambling that his coalition could run now and still win.

"The time has come for you to speak," Chirac told the French people in an address televised nationwide, contending that "the interest of the country demands that we anticipate... the elections."

Chirac challenged what he called "archaic solutions founded on always more state, always more spending, always more taxes. It's a new path I ask you to follow."

Referring to more than a decade of Socialist government before him, Chirac attacked what he called "a long free-for-all for which we're still paying."

Socialist leader Lionel Jospin called Chirac's move to dissolve the Parliament and order elections "a dissolution of convenience." He also attacked proposed budget cuts.

Chirac's campaign battle cry was increasing employment. But after he was elected in May 1995 to a seven-year term, his initial efforts to slash long-held benefits and privileges to create jobs triggered a series of strikes.

Since then, unemployment has crept upward and speculation grew in recent months that Chirac could lose his governing majority if he waited for balloting next spring, when the single-currency debate is sure to intensify a year ahead of the planned launch of the euro.

The president called yesterday for reform "to allow a reduction in public spending — the only way to lighten the burden of taxes and social charges that weigh too heavily on you."

He said France must adopt the euro "if we want to affirm ourselves as a great economic and political power, equal to the dollar and the yen."

Proponents of the euro say it will help turn the 15-nation European Union into an economic superpower and bolster a single, more efficient European market.

Euro participants must cut their deficits to 3 percent of gross domestic product this year.

Finance Minister Jean Arthuis yesterday unveiled euro coins for France with Marianne and other national symbols. If France qualifies for the euro, it will begin stamping 7 billion of them in spring 1998. They would go into circulation in 2002.

Netanyahu promises panel to screen future appointments

By Karin Laub
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Benjamin Netanyahu tried to shore up his government and his reputation yesterday after escaping prosecution in an influence-peddling scandal, but opposition leaders demanded he resign and face trial.

The opposition asked Israel's Supreme Court to overrule prosecutors' decision not to charge Netanyahu for his role in a political ally's short-lived appointment as attorney general. The prosecutors, wrapping up a three-month probe, said Sunday that Netanyahu's actions raised "bewildering questions" but that they lacked the evidence to charge him with fraud and breach of trust.

"There is no evidence because the prime minister didn't remember," Yossi Sarid, leader of the left-wing Meretz Party, said yesterday after submitting one of four appeals. "I hope that once he is before the court, it will help him refresh his memory." Sarid and the three opposition Labor Party legislators who lodged appeals said prosecutors' decision not to bring charges — despite the recommendation of police investigators — was unreasonable.

But it appeared unlikely that the high court — which is to hear the four motions in early May — would overturn the decision. Netanyahu said he made a mistake, but did not commit a crime. He lashed out at the news media and opposition politicians, saying they had twisted facts of the case "beyond recognition" because they were unable to accept his victory in last May's election. Netanyahu moved quickly yesterday to keep his six-party coalition together, announcing that next week, after the end of the eight-day Passover holiday, he would appoint a ministerial committee to oversee future appointments to senior government posts.

The panel will be led by Finance Minister Dan Meridor and Trade Minister Natan Sharansky, two Cabinet members who reportedly had considered resigning over the scandal.

Two centrist parties, Sharansky's Israel Be'Aliya party of Russian immigrants, and the Third Way, announced yesterday that they would stay in the coalition, though with some conditions.

The Third Way demanded that Netanyahu improve decision-making in his administration, and Sharansky said the justice minister, Tsachi Hanegbi, would have to be fired. Sharansky said Netanyahu promised him that changes in the government would be made.

The scandal began in January when Netanyahu appointed Jerusalem lawyer Roni Bar-On as attorney general. News media suggested that Netanyahu had made the appointment in response to threats by Arieh Deri, leader of the religious Shas Party, to withdraw his support. Deri expected Bar-On to agree to a plea bargain that would end Deri's three-year corruption trial without a jail sentence. In exchange for the appointment, Deri would guarantee the support of two Shas ministers for an Israeli troop pullback in the West Bank town of Hebron.

In the end, prosecutors investigating the influence-peddling decided to charge only Deri. That angered Shas followers, who blamed the decision on Israeli prejudice against Sephardim — Jews of Middle Eastern and North African descent. Shas represents Sephardic Jews.

"The Sephardim are scapegoats," Rabbi David Yosef, son of the Shas spiritual leader, Rabbi Ovadia Yosef, told the Jerusalem Post. Shas has 10 seats in Netanyahu's 66-member coalition and could deprive him of his majority in the 120-member Parliament. However, it appeared more likely that Shas will stay in the government, but threaten not to support Netanyahu in key votes.

Palestinians, meanwhile, worried that the affair would further jeopardize peace talks, already in a crisis, and make Netanyahu more beholden to the right-wing parties that supported him throughout the crisis.

U.S. denies food aid to N. Korea until peace negotiations clarified

By George Gedda
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The United States will not consider North Korean demands for more food aid until Pyongyang clarifies its stance on entering proposed peace negotiations, the State Department said yesterday.

Expressing frustration with repeated North Korean delays in answering U.S. and South Korean diplomats in New York, department spokesman Nicholas Burns said, "We can't wait forever."

North Korea had promised a response last Wednesday to a U.S.-South Korean proposal for four-way peace talks, but has remained silent. A low-level meeting was held Sunday evening in New York but no commitments were made and no date was set for the higher-level discussions the United States has been seeking.

Burns said the North Koreans have continued to ask for additional U.S. food aid on top of the $25 million already pledged. Officials from the U.N. World Food Program, which issued the appeal earlier this month for additional aid, have said the U.S. contribution might not be enough to head off widespread starvation.

"We've always responded positively to the United Nations when North Korea has been in trouble on the question of food," he said. "So I think we've shown our good faith on that issue. But clearly, the North Koreans just need to make a fundamental decision."

What does it mean to be an American? Land of the free? Home of the brave? Are United States Army commercials with stars and stripes flapping in the breeze supposed to swell my heart with pride?

Well, to tell you the truth, they don't — at all. I don't need a flag placed strategically at the center of every residential area to remind me of where I am and what it means; and it would be a harsh reminder at that, for I am not exactly proud of what the flag represents.

Call me unpatriotic. Call me un–American — it wouldn't be the first time. But before you do, I challenge you to explore what it really means to be an American.

First things first, the term, "American," is such a misnomer. Last time I checked, the Americas included more than just the United States. And who can we exactly call a True American? We are almost all immigrants to this land. It seems to me that the only people who have a right to claim the land are the Native American people, the same people who, ironically enough, have been termed "Indians" throughout history.

It is in this context that I find the recent immigration scare ironic as all hell. God forbid we let too many foreigners in, especially those damn Mexicans trying to cross the border.

My seventh grade geography and history teacher once taught me that most of the Southern United States once belonged to Mexico and was obtained by force. "Um, excuse me, you don't belong here." That sounds a little hypocritical to me.

The war on drugs is another issue that intrigues me. You might have noticed how South American countries are being held almost solely responsible for providing the drugs that have corrupted our beloved country. And who's being corrupted? All those lower and middle class children at the hands of African American drug dealers. And don't forget the Native American and Irish American drunks.

Asian Americans were once depicted as living in opium dens. But those who have studied the history of the Asian people might remember the way the English introduced and pushed the popularity of opium as a drug among many Asian people. Drugged people do not resist. Coincidence? Hmmm.

It's amazing what we can learn about the present by studying the past, particularly the past of others. I find it interesting that most of the people who have accused me of being un–American are upper–class white male political science or history majors. They have either been brought into a political system made up of people have been raised to the top for so long that they are no longer in touch with the people whom they supposedly represent, or have been taught a history of the United States written entirely by European white males. I challenge the former to take a few lessons in anthropology. How can you represent people whom you don't understand? I challenge the latter to study histories written by other representatives of society.

I don't exactly resent being called un–American. Instead, I resent being called un–American by people who rely on military power, a set of laws and a biased history to paint their picture of what it means to be an American.

I do not resent everything the American flag stands for. On the contrary, I see much promise in the United States of America.

It is a relatively young country which has yet to establish a cultural identity of its own. Instead, it depends on the mixture of cultures of the people represented in its population. Once termed the "melting pot," it has almost always been populated by a diverse conglomerate of people. Unfortunately, certain ingredients have gathered at the top. The land of opportunity has been seized time and time again by opportunists.

There have been certain moments where I have seen the promise in this melting pot of a country in which we live.

The Goodell Takeover was one of these moments. To me, Goodell symbolized all that America could be — a diverse group of people mixed together, making sure that everyone's cultural identity and history was not lost while working toward a common goal.

I challenge all those who consider me to be un–American to reconsider their view of America. Future leaders of this country, make sure the education you are receiving here is not Euro–centric. The only way you will truly understand your own "American" culture is by studying the cultures of all those who make up the United States of America. Represent us well, transform the melting pot into a veritable stew, mixing it well and stirring it constantly.

Maybe then I'll be proud enough of what the United States flag stands for to erect a flagpole in my front yard.

Food for thought

Doctress Neutopia

There has been a lot of talk about the place of American flags on campus lately. I have a flag story that happened to me this semester at Earth Foods Cafe. I was asked to put up an art show at the Cafe for three weeks. One of the works was of an American flag with a hole in the middle of it. Inside the hole there was a sign reading, "Revolt" surrounded in a shape of a big black heart. Beside the American flag was an Earth flag with the word Neutopia on it as well as my World Wide Web page address.

After the first week, some vandal(s) stole the revolt sign. I simply replaced the sign with another sign. The next week the vandal(s) took the American flag.

I went to the Collegian News Editor with the story, but she didn't think the story was newsworthy. Before that, I had gone to the Arts Editor who told me that none of his reporters were interested in reviewing my show. I thought it was an important art show and desired to be reviewed because I had had the courage to show my dissent for American politics by desecrating the American flag. In many countries throughout the world, if I had done such a thing to a national symbol, I would have been imprisoned or killed.

So, my art work had been violated and no one on campus seemed to give a damn. And, I was being completely ignored by the news media!

I told my contact person from Earth Foods, collective member Stacy Morganstern, that I would replace the America Flag conceptional art piece only if the Earth Foods Collective supported my efforts by giving me the $10 needed to replace the stolen flag. Before the art show went into Earth Foods, I asked Stacy if Earth Foods would give me three free meals for my three week show. She said that would not be possible. She said that their money was running short and even collective workers couldn't take as much food as they wanted any more.

I felt that if the Earth Foods Collective really believed in me, in my work and in my lovolutionary cause, then replacing the desecrated flag would be a collective effort for economic justice and artistic freedom.

Stacy left a message on my voice mail saying that it had been decided at the Earth Foods meeting that they would not help me. Instead, they wanted me to take down my art show.

Later, after the show was down, Stacy told me that at the meeting $5 was raised from individuals in the collective who wanted to support my putting up another holey flag. But the official Earth Foods Collective didn't want to be involved in helping me because they felt that they were not responsible for any damage or theft that might happen to art work on their walls. Nevertheless, I never received the $5 which was collected.

She said that Earth Foods considers themselves to be politically neutral. Some of the Earth Foods "customers" had complained about the politically radical nature of my art show. These "customers" said that they would stop eating at Earth Foods if Earth Foods continued to show such work. She said that they wanted to show art work that didn't upset any of their [yuppie] customers, unlike the images in my art show which made people think about starvation, poverty and the inequality of wealth in America.

But it appeared to me that those were exactly the kind of questions the Earth Foods Collective needed to address to the public as well as to themselves.

I asked Stacy: "What do you think artists are supposed to do if places like Earth Foods does not support us? Why do you think the ancient clique of 'starving artists' still rings true today? Is it because alternative places like Earth Foods refuse to be sensitive to the needs of artists who are struggling against Corporate America so that we can end starvation on this planet by feeding everyone with an organic vegetarian diet?"

Then she said that if I wrote a letter to the Collegian about what happened, I would only be hurting the Earth Foods Collective and helping McDonalds establish itself at UMass. But isn't the real problem that the counterculture doesn't support the counterculture? People, when divided, have always been defeated. Will we ever find the wisdom we need to unite our species so that we may feed the world with both good food and great ideas?

GEO supports MHC takeover

To the editor:

Once again in the Pioneer Valley, it is students who are leading the way to create a more diverse community. The courageous students who are occupying the Admissions office at the Mt. Holyoke College are part of a decade-long movement led by students and workers to hold those in power accountable. As part of this movement, the Graduate Employee Organization/UAW 2322 both supports and applauds this latest battle waged by our neighbors at Mt. Holyoke.

GEO/UAW rejects the obvious attempt by Mt. Holyoke President Joanne Creighton to divide the students on the campus. University and college administrators, and all those in power, will have to reckon with us only on our terms until students' and workers' voices are respected and action is taken to address our concerns.

As part of the student movement, GEO/UAW believes that every campus must be a place of diversity and opportunity. As a union and part of the larger labor movement, we are proud to be fighting for the same things as the Mt. Holyoke students: democracy, opportunity and freedom for all.

In Solidarity,

Patrick Crowley

Racism and America

To the Editor:

I recently read that a motion to place a flag in the center of each residential area was voted down. My immediate question was, "why?" Assuming Diana Estrade speaks for her colleagues, I now have an answer.

Let me start by saying that her letter makes me sick. What kind of stupid idea is that— hang up a flag for each of the ethnic groups on campus? What is this, The United Nations?

Millions of other Americans are very proud of our flag. Unlike what the ALANA caucus would have us believe, it does not represent racism or oppression. America has long been known as a "melting pot." Certainly there are problems with our system. However, I challenge anyone to find a place without any such problems.

All the people who feel they are being treated as minorities should wake up. Generally, these are the same people who expect special compensation for whatever ethnic group they are from. The more they ask for special treatment, and the more they set up separate groups, the worse the situation becomes. Personally, I would not want special treatment because of my ethnic group. To me, that would be like saying that I can't rise to the top without help.

Everyone should try and be part of the group as a whole, instead of trying to separate themselves even more. You can't have it both ways. You can't complain that people treat you differently because of your ethnicity —not when you create the schism yourself by insisting on "special" rights and privileges.

I am a member of the armed forces and I am very proud of my flag. It represents freedom, diversity, hope and the dreams of millions of Americans who came before us. For the thousands of immigrants who come here every year, it most assuredly means even more.

When I think of an American, I don't think of a white person. I think of black, Asian, white, Latino, Native American and a variety of others. If you can't see that, that is your problem, not mine. Maybe you are the racist one. I have never been responsible for the suppression of any group. I have more nationalities in me than I can list. But these constant slaps in the face by ALANA and other groups will undoubtedly perpetuate more problems with race, instead of solving them.

I love America, apple pie and the flag. I would gladly die in defense of my fellow Americans, even those who hold ideals with which I strongly disagree. I say if you don't love America, get the hell out. If you want to see a different flag than ours, go to that country. I am sure you will find the conditions less favorable. I am also sure that you won't find our flag flying "there" either.

In defense of Skindog's Army

To the Editor:

Hi there. As someone who is familiar with the Skindog's Army, I'd like to make a few observations about the article about them. I first became aware of Skindog's Army last summer as a member of M.U.S.I.C. coalition (Musicians Unity Supporting Innovative Creativity). It is a Springfield area group of musicians and bands who perform original music. Every possible genre of music was represented— Rock, Rap, Alternative, Hip-Hop, Thrash, you name it. I was even there as the keyboard player of a Country band. Also, there was every race, class and creed you would care to name. The only thing that these people had in common was the belief that they could create something original. They would help each other out not only with moral support but with joint shows and the lending of equipment to each other.

Now some of the most vocal and enthusiastic supporters of M.U.S.I.C. were Skindog and his army. I found it hard to believe while reading the from page (Collegian, April 17), that a bunch of racists would be some of the most active members in a group whose motto is, "Boldly causing awareness, respect and prosperity for original creations. United."— especially not one founded and headed by an African-American.

So, do I understand the original impulse to call the flyer racist? Yes. Do I think that the man who was, in effect, demonized should be upset? I know I would be. But do I think that Skindog and his Army are racists? I've talked with these people and they may be many things, but I don't think that they're racists. So, after thinking about it, do I still see racism when I look at the flyer? Only if I want to.

Christians already have spaceship

To the Editor:

In response to Martin Jones' article "The dawning of the New Age" I'm including excerpts from The Kingdom of God, by the Champaign Vineyard. What is the Kingdom (KOG) to Christians? To many, it is that the kingdom is not only a "tomorrow" hope, but a present reality in our lives.

Yes, a new age is indeed approaching, and since the coming of the Messiah, Jesus, we have been in a period of overlap between "this age" and "the age to come."

With the rent of the birth, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, the KOG burst into the present age. In Jesus' ministry, we see signs of the coming of God's kingdom — the overthrow of Satan's rule (seen in the casting out of demons), and healing. (Sodzo translated "save" can also be, and is, translated "heal.") The salvation Jesus brought was for the whole man — spirit, soul and body.

How can the KOG be both a future and a present reality at the same time? The KOG is "already here" but it is not yet "here." The redemptive process will take place in at least two stages. (For more information see The Kingdom Of God in its entirety at http://www.champaign.vineyard.org/papers/kogseen.) "The classic anthology of the already/not yet was offered by Oscar Cullman in Christ And Time. World War II was concluded with two events— D–Day and V–Day. The question for historians concerns when the war was over. While the fighting ended on V–Day, one could say the war was really over on D–Day when the troops landed at Normandy. Oddly enough though, some of the fiercest fighting of the war occurred because of the atrocities caused by Germany's anger at defeat. D–Day was the beginning of the end and V–Day was the end of the end, the termination of the fighting. This illustration offers insight into the real problem with the KOG as a present reality, namely why there is still so much evil. The already/not yet is the only explanation for both the tremendous defeats and rampant evil...

"The designation 'in Christ' is a declaration of what those who believe in Jesus already are. Despite the appearance of a finite perspective, those who are in Christ are now raised to an eternal perspective." They needn't be anxious about anything in the finite realm.

"At its heart of hearts, the coming reign of God in the person of Jesus is nothing short of an unfathomable miracle. It is a mysterium tremendum... It means that God is reestablishing his original intent for humanity and creation... Jesus came, as the second Adam, to reestablish God's original purpose... The advance of the kingdom into the present means wholeness for the humanity and creation." Jesus healed people, and the nature of miracles can be seen as redemptive as well.

"Expect the miraculous because the KOG is already. But also expect opposition and set–backs because the KOG is not yet. Let's not err on one side or the other, as is so often the case. In order to be healthy and biblically balanced we need both a theology of power and a theology of pain. Those of us who know the implications of the overlap of the ages should live in expectation of the miraculous overthrow of Satan's wreckage. We shall remain unmoved by defeat of any kind, continuously praying, continuously exercising our kingdom authority, always trusting God in the sovereignty of His love power and wisdom."

So, you see, that to a Christian, our spaceship to the heavenly realm has already come in the person of Jesus Christ, and by opening our hearts to Him, those who choose to can receive today the a "righteousness, peace and joy" that kingdom holds.

Hundreds gather to march against violence

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

About 200 women, men and children gathered in the rain to let their voices be heard through the streets of Northampton in the annual march and rally "Stop the Clock: Women Unite Against Violence," last Thursday night.

The march was described by the director of the Everywoman's Center Educator/Advocate program, Patricia Mota–Guedes as "a way for women and men in the Five College area to join forces and protest violence against women."

Tina Cincotti, a University of Massachusetts student and march organizer began the first rally at the Unitarian Church, Northampton by saying "I hope this event will not only educate people, but also encourage women to Stop the Clock."

Originally Take Back the Night, the event was renamed to Stop the Clock because it was misleading and perpetuated the name of the black rapist, according to Cincotti. A second reason for the name change was because women are not assaulted only at night or in dark areas according to Cincotti.

"We not only need to take back the night, we need to take back our bodies and neighborhoods," Cincotti said.

The march and rally were attended by students concerned about violence, women who experienced battering and assault and men concerned about women friends and violence against women.

"Even if you don't have a direct role as an aggressor or victim you still have a responsibility to fight it [violence against women]," Katheryn Palmer, a Mount Holyoke freshman said.

Members of the Men's Resource Center of Amherst were also in attendance. "I am really devoted to fighting violence against women. If men don't take some initiative against male violence then this sort of thing will be going on for a long time," Chris Land–Kazlaurkas, a staff advisor for the Men's Resource Center, said.

One woman who experienced violence in her life, Karen Rock, a resident of Amherst said she attended the event "so that people know that there is still a problem. The government is part of the problem."

Rock elaborated that welfare provides women with economic stability, enabling them to leave their batterers.

The first speaker in the rally, Yoko Kato, a local Northampton business woman and community activist against domestic violence, told the story of her daughter and grandson's tragic death.

Thirty–two years ago Kato came to America as a student from Japan. She divorced her husband, who drank and abused her. "He was always sorry when he did it and promised he would never do it again," Kato said.

In 1990, her daughter, Sherri, became pregnant while in college and decided to have the child. The baby's father became jealous of Sherri and the time she was spending with her son 18–month–old son, Cedric. She left the father, John Seabrook, after he had pushed her out of a moving car and left her in the road and committed other violent acts, according to Kato.

In 1993, Seabrook went to Sherri's apartment and grabbed a knife from the dishwasher. He stabbed her 57 times, 10 that went through her heart and he stabbed his son Cedric 13, six of which went through his heart. Seabrook left the knife stuck in Sherri's face, "showing how much he hated her leaving him," Kato said. Sherri and Cedric died in each others arms.

Kato said that two months prior to the stabbing Sherri left Seabrook. "Leaving does not put an end to violence. It is at this time when it is the most dangerous," Kato said.

"Violence against women is one issue that has not been resolved," said Brenda Lopez, Domestic Violence Prevention coordinator of the Springfield Police Department.

"All of us are here to talk about violence in our own voice... we rarely hear about violence against women. We don't see any task forces formed or committees raised," Lopez said.

Lopez called for zero tolerance and said "'till all of us are free, none of us are free."

Janet Aalfs, of Valley Women's Martial Arts, read several of her own poems and addressed the crowd. "It is all of our jobs together, it can't be just one of us or a few of us," Aalfs said. Several of the Valley Women's Martial Arts students demonstrated various martial arts techniques and performed to music by Sweet Honey and the Rock.

Following the rally, the marchers lit candles and took to the streets of Northampton catching the attention of pedestrians, store owners and passers–by singing and chanting words of empowerment and inspiration.

The marchers ended on the steps of Dewey Hall on the Smith College campus, where a second rally began.

Janey Gordon, co–chair of the Pioneer Clothesline project, spoke about her friend, Patty Hennessey, the last of the Framingham Eight, serving time for killing their batterers. Hennessey is currently serving 10 years in jail for killing her batterer in self defense.

Speaking about Hennessey, Gordon said "you find yourself in a situation where you want to get out, but it's a lot more complicated than that... the system is not that honest."

Several other speakers followed Gordon including a poetry reading by an Amherst High School student, personal stories of childhood sexual assault from Smith SAFE (Survivors and Allies for Education of Childhood Sexual Abuse and Incest) members and talks by community women.

The second rally was followed by a coffee house at the Northampton Center for the Arts. University of Massachusetts graduate student and Counselor/Advocate volunteer at the Everywoman's Center Nicole Pajer commented on the night. "It went well, we had some really excellent speakers... even though we didn't get the turnout we expected, the people were here for the right reasons."

To My Readers:

How long is the University of Massachusetts, the Dean of Students, Chancellor Scott, UMass police and housing going to allow sexual assault to continue on this campus? I am disgusted at the lack of organization, response and action taken by them in every instance of assault that have occurred on this campus.

I am sure everyone remembers last semester when a convicted rapist who was featured on Dateline NBC was living side by side with women in a dormitory in Northeast. First of all, why was this student allowed to live in a residential area where he could endanger women? Secondly, if the University unwisely chose to admit a convicted rapist didn't they think that any of the women students on this campus might want to know in order to protect themselves?

Last semester, they dealt with the situation in a highly unprofessional way, this semester a 26–year–old man assaults 12 women in a dormitory and there is no mention of it anywhere except to certain residents in Southwest? How many times does the University have to be confronted with sexual assault instances before they learn how to "deal" with them?

Why is it that this University has total disregard for women's safety? It took an act from SGA to add lighting to the infamous "rape trail" to get the University to consider adding lighting and still nothing has been done. The fact that there is such a place called the "rape trail" on our campus is absolutely insane. The University cannot act as though they did not know it existed, because on numerous occasions there have been police patrolling the area.

In a memorandum sent to a member of the Undergraduate Student Senate, Paul Page states "We share your concern for safety on this campus. That request has been referred to a group from Public Safety, Campus Planning and Physical Plant for review and response. The date on this little note? February 4, 1997. Has anything been done? Do assaults keep occurring? Does anyone care? Carbon copies of this memorandum were also sent to Chancellor Scott, Vice Chancellor Robinson and Bill Rose.

I'm sure they pushed this request aside just like they did with the ALANA agreements.

Women's safety not a UMass priority

Alison Crawford

When you were little, your Mom or Dad tucked you in at night and told you that nothing bad could happen while you were in your bed. That was the safest place in the world, the bad boogey men in the dark couldn't get to you through the covers. Well, for some women in JQA, their slumberland has been invaded. And while UMass doesn't have to tuck us in at night, they should have some responsibility to make sure that we are safe while we sleep.

In the past few weeks, a story centered around sexual assault and issues of womens' safety has been unfolding before our very eyes. Waco Taylor, a 26–year–old student living in JQA, was arrested on charges of breaking and entering, indecent assault and assault with the intent to rape. Putting it simply, in the middle of the night, Waco would get up and open the doors to rooms where women were living. If they were asleep, he would take off his clothing, either some or all, and get into bed with them. Some of the women reported that he would touch them, and even tried to kiss them.

Some people are saying that these women had their doors unlocked during the middle of the night and they were asking for trouble. There is something else that needs to be said. The idea that these women were asking to be sexually assaulted is like saying that women are asking to be raped because of the clothes that they wear. No one ever wants to be a victim, to have their privacy invaded, to feel powerless. But yet, people seem to think since they didn't make damned sure that the boogey man couldn't get in, he must have been an invited guest.

The reason their doors were not barred to the outside is not the issue, the issue is safety. The dates of the incidents makes one wonder how safe the University administration wants to make the campus. From Feb. 14 through March 29, there were at least 12 victims. Now let's do some math. It averages out to one victim every 3 1/2 days. Why was nothing done sooner? Like February 15th? It's the middle of April and things are just starting to work themselves out.

Why didn't the University jump up and down, screaming and waving their arms, trying to tell us that there was a real danger lurking in our very dormitories? I get angry e–mails from the Chancellor regarding a letter criticizing the Administration for being slow on their promises on Goodell. I did not, however, receive one little note saying "Attention, it has been brought to our attention that there is the possibility of some potential danger in the dormitories..." I think the safety of the students is more important to us than a message from Mr. Scott trying to change our opinions of him. In fact, I think that students would have had a positive reaction to him telling us the truth. Mr. Scott does not need to read us a bedtime story and bring us a drink of water, but if you have a bedtime story, that will keep us safe and warm at night, pull up a chair and let us know.

University Housing said they "realized that [the victims] all had similar experiences and at that point it became very evident that there was a pattern emerging." I guess that waiting for a pattern to emerge is more important than the safety of the women attending the University. If there is no pattern, there is no danger. Or maybe if there is no pattern, there is nothing they can do.

Hmmm... is that something that we're going to plug to the incoming female students? Read the disclaimer on the brochure now. To incoming freshmen and women transferring: If you are involved in a pattern crime, you can expect some help, untimely at best, but we'll get around to it. If you are alone in your experience, we can't help, there is no pattern. One woman's assault is not something that demands attention, but if there are a enough, say 12, then it is a good time to get involved.

I can understand that panic would not have helped anyone, but women have a right to know that they are in danger. The residents of my dorm never knew that right across the street, people were being sexually assaulted on average every 3 1/2 days. They didn't know that the University had gotten a restraining order on their behalf. They were told that there was a "situation" in JQA and to lock their doors at night.

Why were they never told that 100 feet from where they lived there was a "emerging pattern" of sexual assault? I don't think that this is the proper time for the University to try and save face, it is a time to protect the people that it was created to educate and serve. College is a place to learn that not everyone in the world is nice. By hiding these dangers from women who need to know how to protect themselves the University is not doing us any favors.

There is something else that is bothersome. Housing had a restraining order against Taylor for all of Southwest, which is better than only having it apply to JQA, but I do believe that there are women living in the other 4 areas on the campus. What would have stopped him from trying to get into any of those other buildings? I admit that the chances of that happening actually is slim, but better safe than sorry.

Waco Taylor is in jail now, and it's $10,000 to post bail. So for now, we don't have to worry about him, but what happens the next time? Does the University wait for another pattern to emerge or do they take action to protect the other 11 women who can be spared from sexual assault? The only thing that I can say is the University can't get the boogey men under your beds, and can't keep them out of your rooms, so lock your doors and pleasant dreams.

In recognition of Sexual Assault Awareness Month the Deana's Fund will present "The Yellow Dress," a one woman play about relationship violence. This event is sponsored by the Everywoman's Center and the University Health Services Women's Health Project. The event is located in Herter room 227 at 7 p.m.

Deana's Fund is a not–for–profit organization founded after the death of Deana Brisbois, a young woman from Topsfield, MA., who was a victim of an abusive dating relationship.

April is Sexual Assault Awareness Month.

The following statistics and information were provided as a public service announcement from the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Fact: One out of every three women in the United States will be raped in her lifetime. This is a current statistic from the FBI. For more information about rape and sexual assault as well as counseling and support services call the Everywoman's Center free 24–hour hotline at 545–5834 or 1– 888–337–0800.

A woman is beaten every nine seconds in this country. Domestic Violence is the leading cause of injury to women between the ages 15 and 44 in the United States—more than car accidents, muggings and rapes combined. Get involved in the fight against violence against women. The Educator/Advocate and Counselor/Advocate Programs at the Everywoman's Center have a volunteer training program in the fall. For more information call 545–5831 or 545–5855. This information was compiled by Battered Women Fighting Back, Boston Abuse can be physical, emotional, sexual, economical and more often than not, more than one type of abuse usually occurs at the same time. It is important to recognize what's being done to you and to know that you don't have to accept it. For more information, support services and/or crisis intervention, call the Everywoman's Center free 24– hour hotline.

In Massachusetts, 24 women, six children and six men were allegedly murdered as a result of domestic violence in 1994. These figures are from the Massachusetts Caucus of Women Legislators, Boston, 1995. For more information, counseling and referral services call the Everywoman's Center free 24–hour hotline.

Women who leave their batterers are at a 75 percent greater risk of being killed by the batterer than those who stay. Nationally, 50 percent of all homeless women and children are on the streets because of violence in the home. This information was compiled by Battered Women Fighting Back, Boston. For more information, counseling and referral services call the Everywoman's Center free 24–hour hotline.

Teen dating violence is a reality. More than one in 10 teenagers experience physical violence in their dating relationships. From "Preventing Teen Violence" by the Dating Violence Intervention Project, distributed by the Educator/Advocate Program at the Everywoman's Center. For information contact the Educator/Advocate Program at 545–5831.

People who abuse their partners do not behave violently by accident, mistake or as a result of loss of control. Relationship violence is intentional violence directed at partners in order to gain or maintain control over them. This information is from the Bureau of Justice Statistics, Washington, D.C.: U.S. Department of Justice, 1991. For more information, counseling and referral services call the Everywoman's Center free 24–hour hotline at 545–0800 or 1– 888–337–0800.

As children we are warned not to talk to strangers. The fact is that we are more likely to be sexually assaulted by someone we know: a friend, a relative, an employer, a date or someone we have recently met. Sexual assault is defined as forced, manipulated or coerced sexual activity—that includes a range of abusive behaviors from sexual harassment to rape. Sexual assault is a crime. If you or someone you know has been a victim of sexual assault, please feel free to use the Everywoman's Center new toll free 24–hour hotline number at 1–888–337–0800.

Assaulters protected instead of students

Kathy McGarvey

What is going on? Why is it that an identified perpetrator of sexual assault who is a resident of JQA was put up in the Campus Center Hotel? And why were we as residents at this University not made aware of this? Why is it that Housing, the Dean of Students and the Department of Public Safety knew what was going on, but evaded inquiries by the Collegian, even though this is information that is publicly accessible? Why is it that last year when a non–resident perpetrator of sexual assault was identified, there were sketches of him published in the Collegian and postered all over campus? We all knew what was going on then. Why did it take so long this time to find out any information that was not based on rumors?

What is all of this telling you? It's telling me that the policies for residents who commit sexual assault are completely different than the policies for non–residents. And yet, who has greater access to campus?

There is a prevailing stereotype that women need to be wary of the stranger, the boogyman in the bushes who is going to rape us. The fact is that women are more likely to be sexually assaulted by someone they know, whether it be a friend, a lover or a family member. The fact is women need to be wary of their fellow residents, not the boogyman who is walking off of the streets and into their buildings.

The main problem that I see with the situation in JQA has more to do with the policies at UMass that deal with perpetrators of sexual assault who are residents of this campus than with the perpetrator. I want to caution people at this University not to make Waco Taylor into the only perpetrator on campus. I think there is a danger that follows the identification of a perpetrator on campus, mainly that people lean back with a sigh of relief because that person over there has been arrested for sexual assault, so now we can all feel a little bit safer. The fact is that every 1.3 minutes a woman is raped in this country. That statistic is talking about women right here at UMass, and Waco Taylor is just one man who has been identified.

I do not want to see another rally. I want to start working to change the policies at UMass so that when a resident is identified as a perpetrator of sexual assault, he automatically forfeits his rights to guaranteed housing, including being set up in the Campus Center Hotel. There needs to be an established network of communication between Housing, the Dean of Students, the Department of Public Safety and the Everywoman's Center. Any information that is known about sexual assaults, even if only speculation, should be accessible to residents at this University.

I do not want to see another situation like this occur again. I do not want to continue to see sexual assaults covered up in the name of protecting the perpetrator's rights. We as residents of this University have the right to know when sexual assaults have occurred, when they have been reported to the police, housing or to the Dean of Students.

Garth Brooks wows Worcester crowd; proves country has Northern appeal

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

GARTH BROOKS
Worcester Centrum
April 19–22

WORCESTER — Many concerts have passed through this small area of the world, but none have had such intensity and passion as the one Garth Brooks put on the other night. Brooks was rumored to have one of the most exciting shows in country music, and he lived up to every expectation.

He is the ultimate entertainer. Using a mixture of flashy lighting, sometimes crazy antics and just plain great music, he produced one of the best shows around today.

The last time Brooks played Massachusetts was over four years ago, on Halloween night in 1992. Then, he played just one show at the Centrum, but Garth Brooks' fans and country music's popularity have both dramatically increased since then.

This time around, Brooks played two shows in Boston and four in Worcester, and there wasn't an empty seat at any of the shows. Brooks promises excitement and something new at all of his shows, and he most certainly doesn't disappoint. He lives up to every expectation, and hearing his music live is so much more fulfilling than listening to it recorded — his genuine love for playing live shines through in every verse he sings.

Brooks prides himself on giving his fans something worth waiting for. At the start of the show, the audience only heard a loud rumbling, like that of a spaceship, for a good two minutes, before Brooks exploded onto the stage for his opening song, "The Old Stuff," from his newest album, Fresh Horses.

From then on, it was two and a half hours of the most energetic show Worcester has seen in a long time. With a wireless band and the lack of a backdrop, Brooks was able to run completely around the stage, entertaining his fans who sat around the perimeter of the Centrum. Brooks also mentioned another incentive that made the crowd even louder — he was using some of the material at this show for his next live album.

Brooks pleased the audience by promising at the beginning of the show that it would be less of a promotion of his new album, and more of his old favorites. He played what can be considered his greatest hits, from "The Thunder Rolls" to "Standing Outside the Fire" to "Ain't Going Down Till' the Sun Comes Up."

Throughout the show, Brooks kept commenting on how great the audience was, and with each compliment, the audience grew louder and more responsive. One thing Brooks loves to do is let the crowd take over, and during "Unanswered Prayers," Brooks stopped singing and directed the microphone to his fans, who serenaded him with his own song.

"It really means a lot to me when you know the verses and not just the chorus," Brooks remarked.

The music of Garth Brooks transcends just the typical country genre, though he has been instrumental in bringing country into the spotlight, making it more mainstream. And one song which is a prime example of this is, "Friends in Low Places." Even folks who aren't country fans have been known to play this song in the local bar jukebox. Brooks knows this is one of his biggest hits, and the crowd went crazy when they heard the opening chords.

Though the album version of this song received considerable airplay, a live version was released to radio stations a while back, with an added verse. This seems to be the staple Brooks performs now, and he does it with all the flair that he is famous for. It's a long song, but there was not a silent person in the house, everybody joined together with Brooks, singing the anthem of the middle class.

Brooks keeps ticket prices to a minimum, thus making the show affordable to everyone, which makes this show all the more remarkable. Brooks said earlier in a press conference that is the reason he plays smaller cities — the cheaper the labor costs of the arena, the cheaper the ticket prices are for the public.

"We like to say we are blue-collar music, we are the middle class people of music, so I like to be the common man's singer," Brooks said. "We like $17 [per ticket], that's what we've toured at for four years and we all make a good living and we all feel lucky to be doing what we're doing."

Brooks ended his set with one of his most meaningful songs, "The Dance." Once again Brooks and the crowd sang in unison his sad but inspiring words, "I could have missed the pain, but I'd have to miss the dance."

But the audience wouldn't let Brooks leave just yet. Even though he had played for two hours, they demanded more. He answered the call with a multi-song encore that included Elton John's "Rocket Man," and a bunch of songs off of Fresh Horses and ended with Don MacLean's "American Pie."

It was well worth the four-year wait to see Brooks, and I can only hope he doesn't take that long to come back again. For all of the times he has been voted Entertainer of the Year, this show exemplified the reasons why he was awarded that title.

Americana series focuses on train songs

By Joshua Boyd

VARIOUS ARTISTS
Steel Rails: Classic Railroad Songs, Volume 1
Mystery Train: Classic Railroad Songs, Volume 2
Rounder Records

As a child, I would always look for trains going under bridges and it was a little personal victory every time I saw one in motion. I carried a little bit of fascination with trains, but it didn't last long enough to have a train set or any such thing like that. However, when it came time to ramble on away from this Melancholy Valley and change my surroundings to the Pacific Northwest for a year, I decided to forego plane travel and instead opted for a 3-day rail tour of the Northern United States, going through Ohio, Minnesota and Montana before ending in Seattle, Wash..

For three days, my life was one of constant motion, tiny bathrooms (hey, they were clean, and that's what matters), uncomfortable sleeps on coach chairs, and frequently long layovers in various stations. All these are the few bad things about cross-country rail travel.

But there is a whole different world surrounding trains. A world of dark railyards with B & M engines, Burlington Northern cars, and twisting tracks create fields of glistening steel. It is a world where trains run through pitch black nights while most people sleep and possibly hear the cry of some determined locomotive in their dreams. It is a world of shuffling rhythms created by shaking rail ties which continues to cast a macabre fascination on us all.

This strong, steel realm came to influence artists as early as the mid-19th century, when trains came into being. The earliest country artists must have loved those shuffling rhythms and the strength that a locomotive engine represented. Bluegrass musicians must have loved the high, lonesome sound of a sad whistle being blown under the blue moon of Kentucky. Folk musicians must have loved all the stories of strong men whose names were synonymous with these "iron horses" — legendary men such as John Luther "Casey" Jones and John Henry. Musicians from these three sects of music are represented on the commendable new two-disc series of Classic Railroad Songs, part of Rounder's new "Americana Series."

Steel Rails starts off just where it should, with Roy Acuff's tribute to a train wailing out of Birmingham called the "Wabash Cannonball." The blues-based country of this tune provides a firm statement of the respect these massive, powerful trains deserve. One of the most famous train- related songs, the fast-paced instrumental "Orange Blossom Special" is a live performance by bluegrass' Johnson Mountain Boys, with banjo and bass emitting that unmistakable throb of a rail's rhythm.

Following these songs, Steel Rails is a fine collection of tributes to memories of trains as young children by musicians such as Guy Clark ("Texas — 1947"), and Utah Phillips ("Daddy, What's A Train?"). It contains tributes to meandering, suavely curving railroad tracks (Alison Krauss' & Union Station's title track) as well as a sad request for the "Last Train" that has taken Peter Rowan's love away to bring her back. This is a shake of the head at how society has moved so quickly away from the rail world.

Mystery Train is a continuation, sold separately from Steel Rails, which continues the themes presented on its companion. The disc starts off with Johnny Cash's version of the ballad of "Casey Jones," a wild engineer (not to be confused with the Grateful Dead song of the same name— same type of idea, though). The Whitstein Brothers' "Freight Train Boogie" continues the topic of Jones' fatal karma.

The original version of the well-known "City Of New Orleans" (the actual name of an Amtrak line from Chicago to New Orleans) is here, by the songwriter, Steve Goodman. Bob Willis & His Texas Playboys' rockabilly version of the Duke Ellington jazz standard "Take the 'A' Train" is here to illustrate the role of inner-city train lines.

These two discs feature a delightful soundtrack to the heritage of one of the world's first industrialized modes of transportation. Let all those planes fly overhead and fast cars whiz down highways — some of us will take it nice and easy, sitting back, watching America roll by like an early picture show outside a cafe car window.

New World Beat releases are sure to satisfy

Loved and loathed, controversial French singer Serge Gainsbourg created strong reactions in his day. Gainsbourg, son of Russian Jewish immigrants, originally pursued painting until he became absorbed in the Paris music scene of the late '50s. From his roots as a cabaret and cafe pianist/singer to his later status as pop icon, Gainsbourg produced an extensive body of recorded work.

Mercury Records has just re-released three CDs of Gainsbourg's '50s and '60s pop tunes. Each CD focuses on a phase of Gainsbourg's development.

The earliest, Du Jazz Dans Le Ravin, charts the influence of jazz on Gainsbourg's work. Although he never was a specifically jazz musician, the distinctively American musical style was dear to his heart. He invited many jazz musicians of the time — Michel Gaudry, Alain Goraguer— to play or arrange work for his albums, and focused for a while on a sort of pop-jazz hybrid. It sounds horrible, but it really isn't. Gainsbourg's voice is appropriately gritty, and the music, while light, is always entertaining.

The second CD, Couleur Cafe, moves into some new ground. Still outside the mainstream of the day, Gainsbourg here delves into African and Latin rhythmic influences. Although these kinds of explorations were something of a trend at the time, Gainsbourg's pieces don't sound trite at this late date. Strong rhythms working underneath classic pop tunes make for some interesting listening, and you can imagine it was somewhat sensational at its initial release.

The final CD of the trio, Comic Strip, is my favorite. Here are a good number of the pieces that really set Gainsbourg a place at the table of French pop culture. Icon of sexiness Bridgette Bardot chimes in for a pair of duets ("Bonnie and Clyde", "Comic Strip"). Really it should have been three duets — Bardot also recorded the languidly sexy number called "Je T'aime...Moi Non Plus," but apparently decided it was too racy to release. Jane Birkin sings it with Gainsbourg on Comic Strip.

This album has such a goofy '60s pop feel, sexy articulation and sardonic Gainsbourgian tone that it will continue to grace the ears for years to come. For all three releases, the grade is a solid B.

Huun-Huur-Tu, the notorious Tuvans who have brought their style of throat-singing to the world at large, are back with a new release on the Shanachie label. If I'd Been Born an Eagle often sounds like it could have been born in the American Southwest. It has the stripped-down twang of gritty old country, and the earthy, deep Tuvan vocal mixes with it to evoke a feeling of wide open spaces.

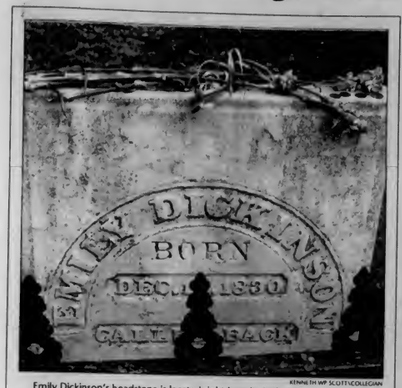
However Tuva, tucked between the plains of Mongolia and the far reaches of eastern Russia, has its own vast distances and rural lifestyle to infuse into music.

This new album finds the band in great shape. They play and sing comfortably, and have refined their style even further since their already-excellem earlier days. If I'd Been Born an Eagle is accessible folk with Gaining mate style and integrity. B+

Alan Lomax has spent his entire working life documenting the music of real people. From the prisons of the deep South, to the fields of Ireland, to the forests of Indonesia, Lomax has made hundreds of field recordings of music.

A lot of these recordings have been out of print — until now. Folk label Rounder Records is embarked on an ambitious project to reprint the Alan Lomax Collection, digitally remastered for CD.

"I found out what I was really doing was giving an avenue for people to express themselves and tell their side of the story," Lomax has said about his work.



This perspective lets these recordings light up with the spirit of the musicians and singers. What we have here is an attempt to break the Western mainstream cultural monopoly, an attempt to give voice back to the people here on the ground. And it is a success.

The songs, featuring musicians such as Woody Guthrie, Son House, Growling Tiger and Inez Muñoz, are clearly recorded and full of passion. There's great variety here, but in the variety we have a chance to glimpse the spirit that gives us all something in common. A.

Roba cruises in Boston marathon

By Bert Rosenthal
Associated Press

BOSTON — Fatuma Roba is still looking for Heartbreak Hill. Competing on a course she had never run before, the 26-year-old Ethiopian became the first African woman to win the Boston Marathon, proving that her Olympic victory in Atlanta wasn't just a one-race breakthrough.

Roba finished in 2 hours, 26 minutes, 23 seconds, the first runner — male or female — to win in Boston after the Summer Games. She did it on a demanding, undulating stretch known for its steep hills, including the famed Heartbreak Hill — a course she was neither familiar with nor afraid of.

"I am told there is a hill, but I didn't find it," she joked afterward.

For the men, Lameck Aguta ushered in the marathon's second century the same way its first century ended — with a Kenyan champion.

The fourth-place finisher the previous two years, he became the seventh consecutive Kenyan winner and the third different champion in three years.

The 25-year-old pulled away toward the end, finishing in 2:10:34.

"It is magic," Aguta said. "I have been waiting all my life for this."

Uta Pippig of Germany, trying to become the first four-time women's winner, finished fourth in 2:28:51, more than 2 1/2 minutes behind Roba. She did not decide to seek a fourth consecutive title until March 7.

Pippig has been beset by physical problems. She was forced to drop out of the Olympics because of a stress fracture while leading, then developed another stress fracture four weeks later. "I had less training than in other years," she said, with her usual gracious smile. "I'm fourth, it's OK."

The victories by Roba and Aguta in the 101-year-old marathon appeared to signal the end of an era not only for Pippig but Kenya's Cosmas Ndeti, the Boston champion from 1993-95 and third-place finisher last year. Ndeti, never in contention, finished 27th in 2:22:56.

"My training didn't go as well as the last four years," said Ndeti, who set the course record of 2:07:15 in 1994. "The other guys still have some homework to do, though, because they didn't break the course record."

As expected, the men's race materialized into a battle between the Kenyans and the Mexicans, who never have won at Boston. The Mexicans came with a strong contingent of three-time London Marathon champion Dionicio Ceron, two-time New York City Marathon winner German Silva and 1993 New York City champion Andres Espinoza.

As late as 25 miles, Ceron, along with Kenya's Joseph Kamau, was within two seconds of Aguta. But the rangy Aguta, trained by Pippig's coach, Dieter Hogen, then began pulling away and beat Kamau by 12 seconds.

Kamau, timed in 2:10:46, was followed by Ceron in 2:10:59 in his Boston debut. Silva, also in his first race at Boston, finished fourth at 2:11:21 and Tanui was fifth at 2:11:38.

Tanui developed bronchitis a week before the race and had little stamina.

"That's why I had a problem toward the end," he said. Kenya's string of consecutive victories began in 1991, when Ibrahim Hussein won. Hussein won again in 1992, then Ndeti took over before Moses Tanui won last year. The last non-Kenyan winner was Italy's Gelindo Bordin in 1990.

Aguta's winning time was the slowest since Hussein's 2:11:06 in 1992, but the runners were plagued by a headwind throughout the 26 miles, 385 yards.

Aguta and Roba each earned $75,000 from the purse of $500,000. Roba's sum was more than 10 times the amount she received from the Ethiopian government after her Olympic triumph, when she received about $7,000.

As expected, no U.S. runner came close to breaking the American record and collecting the $1 million bonus.

Carr looks done with Celtics

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON — M.L. Carr coached the Boston Celtics to the worst record in their 51 seasons. Now his job appears done.

He is expected to give up one or both of his positions, coach and director of basketball operations, although general manager Jan Volk said yesterday no decisions have been made.

"That doesn't mean discussions haven't been undertaken," Volk said. "Obviously, we've not been dealing in a vacuum."

The Boston Globe reported yesterday that a decision already has been made for Carr to give up both jobs, with Larry Bird possibly replacing him in the front office. The newspaper, citing sources, said Carr would retain an active role with the team, possibly in ownership.

"It's been decided by whom?" Celtics president Red Auerbach said yesterday from his office in Washington. "There's nothing I can even comment on until we meet."

The Globe also reported that the Celtics have decided on a front-office replacement for Carr and it would not be a surprise for Bird, now a Celtics special assistant, to take that job. The newspaper did not indicate who might become coach.

"That's premature," Carr told the newspaper. "That's all I'm going to say."

The Celtics offices were closed yesterday for Patriot's Day, a state holiday. Team owner Paul Gaston did not respond to a message.

"Paul Gaston and I are on the same page," Carr said after Sunday's 125-94 loss to the Toronto Raptors ended his second season as coach. "We have one goal and we're not going to waver from it."

They've had talks already, he said. But Carr didn't directly address the question of whether Gaston wanted him to return as coach for a third season.

Carr did say he was the right man to coach the team, and that was in keeping with his eternally upbeat mood.

Now these are grim times for the Celtics, who cal take some consolation in holding the No. 1 pick in the June draft and earning a shot at Wake Forest center Tim Duncan.

Carr also engineered a trade that brought Dallas' first-round draft choice, another lottery pick, for center Eric Montross." Boston's 15-67 record was the second worst in the NBA. Vancouver was 14-68 but cannot get the top pick in the draft lottery because of the expansion agreement under which it entered the league last season.

Carr said after Sunday's game that he was going to the beach before returning for organizational meetings. Volk said no meeting has been scheduled but one could be arranged quickly.

"We will continue to have conversations over the next couple of days. We don't pus a timetable on it. We don't need to," he said. "We need to do it the right way and not be artificially pressured to make a decision."

Bird, a Celtics special assistant, already has talked with Rick Pitino, who said he doesn't want to leave as coach of Kentucky. The Celtics also may be interested in Larry Brown, who said Sunday he will decide in 10 days whether to remain coach of the Indiana Pacers.

Whoever coaches next season will take over a team with a glimmer of hope, considering the draft position and the likely return division games when they beat Philadelphia on Friday to finish at 1-23 in Atlantic Division games. And they tied the team record 13-game losing streak.

"It's obvious how (horrible) they were. We all know that," said Auerbach, who won nine NBA championships in his 16 seasons as Celtics coach. "But they were competitive. I think they were only blown out about 10 times."

Given all the injuries, Carr had few options in shuffling personnel.

"Out of the first 10 men [Sunday], you only had [David] Wesley and [Antoine] Walker," Auerbach said. "The rest of them were CBA [type] players, but they were trying. Like I told them [Sunday] night at the breakup dinner, 'you can't make chicken soup out of chicken feathers.'"

He said that if the Celtics get two outstanding draft choices and sign a quality veteran free agent, they could bounce back relatively quickly.

And whether he's coach, basketball boss or part owner, Carr still may be a part of that.

"As decisions are made and, I suppose, implemented, we'll let everybody know," Volk said. "But right now there's nothing to talk about because none of those aspects have come together."

Brown loses discrimination suit

By Richard Carelli
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In an action hailed as a victory for sexual equality, the Supreme Court refused to free Brown University of rulings that the Ivy League school discriminated against female athletes.

Although yesterday's court action is not a decision and therefore sets no legal precedent for other universities and colleges, the practical effect may be enormous.

"I think the message that goes across the entire country today is that those who have been dragging their feet are duly warned that the time is now," said Christine Grant, athletic director for women's sports at the University of Iowa. "It's a very clear message and long, long overdue."

Lawyers for Brown had argued that lower court rulings in its case could require schools nationwide to offer varsity opportunities for women based on "a stark numerical quota." Those courts had ruled that Brown violated a 1972 law known as Title IX.

The law, credited by many with changing the face of women's sports and influencing society's attitudes about women, bans discrimination in education based on sex. All government-run schools and private schools that receive federal money are covered by the law.

Even before learning of the high court's denial of review, Brown officials yesterday submitted for a federal trial judge's approval a plan for complying with Title IX.

The plan calls for increasing by about 60 the number of varsity team positions available to Brown female athletes so their total number mirrors the overall student population.

The school does not plan to cut any men's teams, and gives varsity status to three additional women's teams — lightweight crew, equestrian and water polo.

Speaking to reporters yesterday, Brown spokesman Mark Nickel said the school "has believed all along that our program of athletics for men and women meets the requirement of Title IX. The school's appeal had argued that "the use of Title IX to mandate adherence to preferential quotas presents an issue of exceptional importance that warrants resolution now." It added: "Universities with budgetary constraints must cut academic offerings to fund additional teams for women, cut teams for men, or risk liability for damage and loss of federal funds."

Lynette Labinger, a lawyer for the women who sued Brown, said, "It's just a relief to see an end to litigation." She said the school spent more than $1 million in defending steps it took to save $66,000.

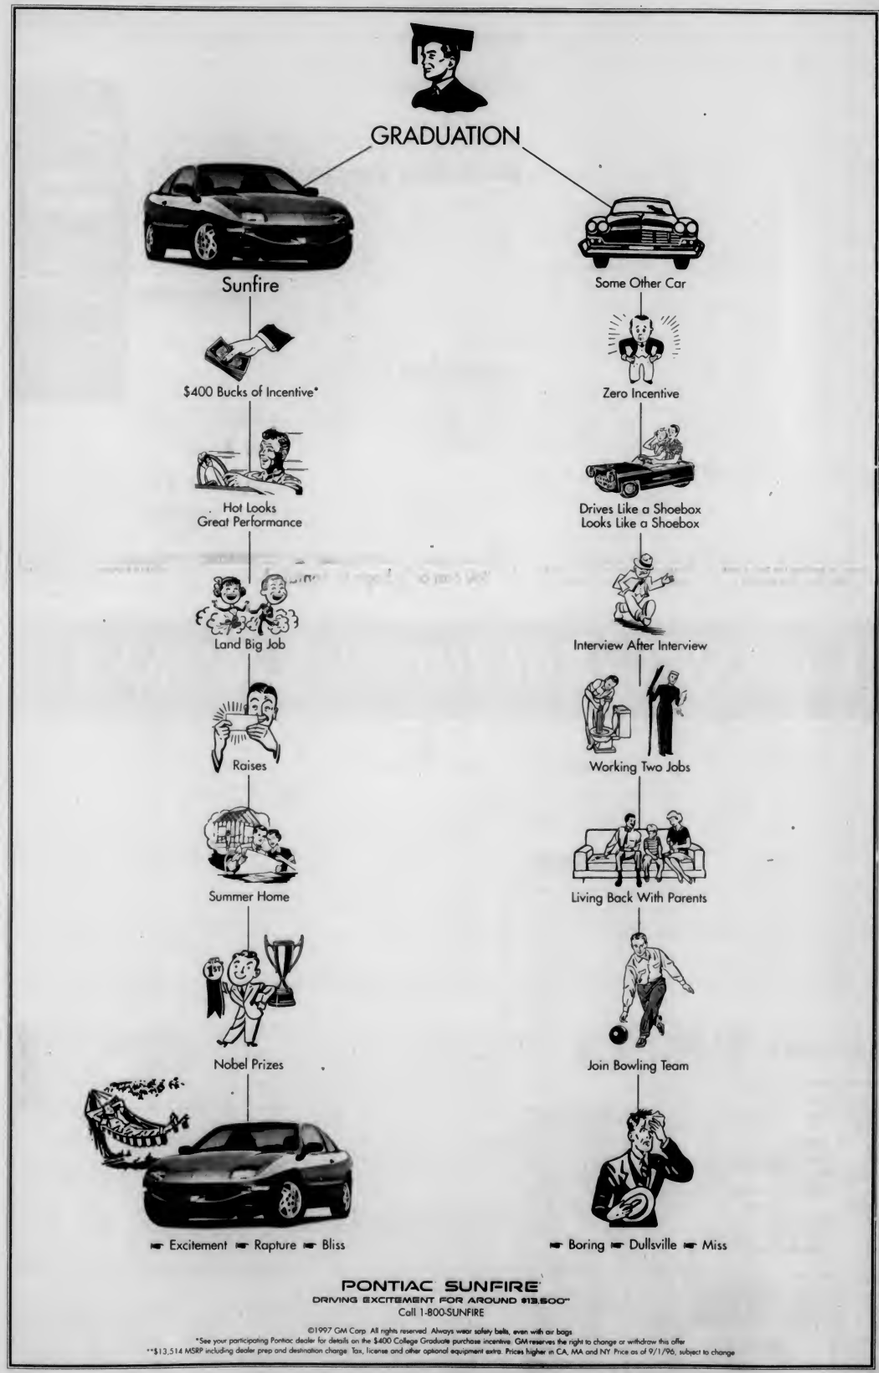
the game.

The Minutewomen got their first and only run of the second game in the second inning. Galas hit a single to left field, stole second, and then scored on an RBI from Osier. Heather Brown of Temple put in a suicide squeeze bunt in the seventh to bring in Kathy Bedersk and tie the game at one apiece. The score would remain tied through extra innings, until the ninth. Temple's Kathryn Kulan made it to first after being hit by UMass' Liz Wagner, who pitched the second game. Henderson was brought in for Wagner, but it wasn't enough to save the game for the Minutewomen. Kulan advanced to second on a sacrifice, and then scored for the Owls after a couple of wild pitches from Henderson.

The Minutewomen played St. Joe's on Sunday, and were swept by the Hawks, 1-0, and 4-2. Henderson's consecutive shutout inning streak was broken at 41.2 innings. She pitched both games for UMass, entering in relief of Wagner in the fourth inning of the second game. She now stands at 11-11 on the year.



Both teams remained scoreless in the first game until the bottom of the fourth inning. St. Joseph's Trish Treskot had an RBI single to center to bring in Heather Sullivan, and take the 1-0 lead. Osier had a 2 for 3 performance and the Minutewomen got off eight hits, but were unable to score in the game. Henderson struck out seven, gave up five hits and walked.

UMass hit the boards first in the second game, scoring twice in the third. Mareina hit a single and was advanced to third on a double from senior Sam Cardenas. Both were brought in to score on a single from Gutridge. Cardenas' double gave her 72 extra base hits, breaking the previous school record. Holly Aprile, a 1992 graduate, was the former record holder with 71.

The Hawks came right back in the bottom of the third, with a home run from Candice Clark and an RBI from Danielle Cavone. They finished off the Minutewomen with two more runs in the sixth. Clark had a double to bring in Danielle Davaro, and then scored herself, on an errant throw.

After this weekend the Minutewomen stand at 20-18-1 overall and 8-3 in the Atlantic 10. They fell from first in the conference to second. St. Joseph's now holds the top position, at 10-2, and La Salle holds third at 9-5. Temple and Virginia Tech are tied for fourth place, each with a 7-5 record.

The Minutewomen have plenty of games this week to try and get back into things. They head to Storrs, Conn. today for a doubleheader with UConn, at 3 p.m. On Thursday they host Holstra, then travel to Rhode Island on Friday, and are back in Amherst on Saturday to take on Fordham.

third quarter off an assist from Will DeRiso.

"Things went our way in the first half offensively and defensively," Canaille said. "But you can't expect to hold them scoreless for 60 minutes."

That opened the floodgates for the Irish. A minute later, Dan Butler tallied, and at 2:45, Chris Dusseau finished a Ned Webster pass for Notre Dame's third goal of the game.

"As soon as they got one I knew they were going to get a couple more," Glass said. "They just had to break the ice."

Hayes and Dusseau each added another goal, but UMass' attempts to slow the game in the waning minutes would not allow Notre Dame another solid look at the goal.

"We stuck together today and we went out and got it," Glass said. "It was a great team effort."

Velazquez all scored three goals.

The championship game took place on Sunday against Harvard, another team that UMass beat during the previous weekend. Their 12-3 win against the Crimson marked the first time in school history they won this tournament.

"It's another step in building the program. We've always finished third in this tournament," Newcomb said. "[The win] gives a little more recognition to the program. Everybody was real proud of it, and they deserve it."

The Minutewomen came on strong, scoring four goals in the first quarter. Grogan tallied four more goals, bringing her overall total to 68 this season. She was followed by Leeburg with two. Goalie Peggy Nieves performed well, making seven saves in this match, and only allowing six goals in the whole tournament.

Newcomb said he feels his team played very well this weekend.

"Everybody played really solid," Newcomb said. "I don't think there was one standout — everybody contributed.

"The second game was a highlight," Newcomb continued. "Our players really clicked as far as playing together. Everybody recognized where they were supposed to be."

Newcomb said that he wanted to accomplish three things this year, the first being a win at New Englands. The second was a win at Easterns and the third was to finish in the top five at Nationals. The Minutewomen are well on their way to attaining these goals.

Seeded No. 2, the Minutewomen will face some of thier toughest competition next weekend in Cambridge as they go up against Slippery Rock, who have been the Eastern Champions for a long time.

Newcomb has a positive outlook for the weekend.

"Slippery Rock has been on top for a while and it would be nice to be able to knock off the big one," Newcomb said.

■ Garber

and great sportsmanship. We always want to make Coach proud."

At the start of the season, Garber Field is a patch of mud emerging from snow cover. At the end of the season, Garber Field is a worn out patch of mud, sometimes emerging still from the snow cover of a weekend Nor'easter. It is not by any means the picture of an ideal lacrosse pitch, but like Boston's Fenway Park or the once great Garden, its flaws are what give it character and make it special.

"It's so small and tight you can hear everything that is said," Senior goalkeeper John Kasselakis said. "There's always lots of friends and parents in the stands and on the hill, and they're real loud. Other teams don't like it."

This past Sunday, Kasselakis shut out a potent Notre Dame offense for over 40 minutes while sloshing around in Garber Field's muddy creases, with retaining boxes sparse of grass. He still loves the field.

"This field is great," Kasselakis said. "All the New England fields are like this. When you go down South it's like you're playing on a putting green."

"It's a tremendous honor to play on that field," Cannella said. "It meant a lot to the seniors today to get a win in their last game there."

Cannella says the Syracuse game this coming Saturday at Warren P. McGuirk Stadium and the installation of artificial turf at Garber Field is a tip of the cap to Dick Garber, because he has built the program to merit top quality facilities.

"He's a grass guy, a throwback," Cannella said. "But I think the improvements to the field only showcase further the field itself and his name."

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20
Big changes are ahead as the seasons shift more rapidly. Meditate, communicate with a mate or loved one - if not, you risk wasting your energies on arguments and negotiations. You're better off maintaining harmony instead of navigating conflicts.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21
A half-truth you told recently could come back to haunt you. Make a clean breast of it, and you'll feel better. You'll also earn the respect of someone you didn't know was watching. Spend extra time with an older person - they could be in need of some attention.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21
A crossroads looms, and you're of two minds as to what to do. Step back sit down and try to consider all of the ramifications before speaking your mind. Tactful silence is better than little white lies for preserving the peace this weekend - don't be drawn into an argument.

CANCER
June 22-July 22
In a pinch? Use your imagination to come up with a creative solution you wouldn't have imagined possible. Budget carefully before allowing yourself to indulge in something. If it's not really feasible, hold off on any major purchases until later.

LEO
July 23-August 23
You're prominent with an interesting opinion early in the week. Solicit advice from a professional before making your move. This weekend, spend time with friends and family to recharge your batteries and learn some interesting news. Enjoy some active games without being overly competitive.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22
An old friend calls with an exciting piece of information. If possible, act on it. You're moving into a time of increased possibilities and good luck: so strike while the iron is hot! Assist your sweetie in a boring task, and you'll be richly rewarded later.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23
A new influence enters your life late in the week. Its effect could be subtle at first. You'll need to be mindful that you don't ignore some basic chores when an exciting opportunity turns your head this weekend. Try the tenis approach to a sticky problem.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22
When it comes to resolving a misunderstanding, be aggressive. Focus an education if you're interested in improving your income. Travel with a sweetheart offers exciting possibilities for strengthening your mutual bond. Look behind the scenes for a valuable piece of insight.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21
Money troubles may stem from a lack of foresight. Analyze your budget now and enjoy increased financial health in the near future. Remember: all good growth is slow growth. Your mate's experience gives you a new perspective on an old situation.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20
Take care of responsibilities early in the week so you can enjoy a carefree weekend. A plan that seems exciting could be fraught with pitfalls, so be sure to get a second opinion. Someone in your circle has a great deal of experience, so rely on his or her expertise.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18
A social event is on the horizon, and you're in a position to add to the fun, as let your imagination run wild! A dull routine could be numbing your vibrant personality, so don't be afraid to shake things up a little! A faraway friend could be feeling blue. Why not call them or write a letter?

PISCES
February 19-March 20
You're full of energy this week, so throw your weight into the harness and you'll be amazed at what you'll accomplish. Others may not share your enthusiasm, however, so be sure to work on group projects early in the week. Later: you may find yourself alone on the job!

UM Lax makes statement; defeat Irish 6–5

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

For the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, three factors came into play in this weekend's game against Notre Dame. First, postseason implications; second, it was the seniors' last game at Richard F. Garber Field and finally, it was everybody's last game on Garber's natural grass surface.

UMASS	6
Notre Dame	5

With the season entering make–it–or–break–it time as far as the NCAA Tournament js concerned, the No. 11 Minutemen (7–4) made a statement to the tourney selection committee Sunday with a 6–5 victory over the No. 9 Fighting Irish (7– 2).

"We're sitting there at No. 11 and we've got really no one behind us. I mean we do, but we don't have a real strong team like Army last year, someone really on the gun," senior Brendan Glass said. "Since Notre Dame's No. 9 it's a nice little push and finally we showed the committee we can win the close one."

Minuteman coach Greg Canella agreed that the win will help UMass' tourney hopes.

"I think it helps us tremendously, obviously Notre Dame will be in the NCAA Tournament," he said. "So when the committee looks at it, it's a win against a tournament team."

The Fighting Irish did not look like a tournament team in the first half of Sunday's contest. After a scoreless 14:59, the Minutemen put the game's first tally on the board when Mike McKeefrey shot a buzzer–beater past Irish goalie Alex Cade.

The shot came after Todd Sokolowski brought the ball into the Notre Dame zone. After an Irish player picked up the ball, three UMass players knocked it loose. Ken Sussi picked up the ball and passed it to McKeefrey, who was on Cade's left side. McKeefrey wasted no time in letting the ball go, just beating the clock for a 1–0 advantage at the end of the first quarter.

"I knew there was no time, because when Todd was coming down the wing I was like 'Todd go to the cage,' and I was telling him how much time there was," McKeefrey said. "I didn't think it was going to come back to me, there wasn't that much time left. Sussi picked up the ball on the wing and threw it, so I just threw the ball toward the goal."

McKeefrey did not stop there. After Glass pocketed a shot at 11:05 of the second with a low strike on Cade McKeefrey pounced again.

The game's only two scorers, McKeefrey and Glass combined to push the UMass edge to 3–0. Glass cut in on Cade's left to the baseline extended, while McKeefrey moved in front of the goal. With Cade concentrating on Glass, UMass' leading point man dished the ball to his fellow attackman, and McKeefrey dumped the ball into the ND net.

"He stepped up. He finally gave the old man some assists," Glass joked.

Jim Kennedy put in an unassisted goal to make it 4–0 before McKeefrey netted his final shot of the game.

It was the Glass–to–McKeefrey combination that again beat Cade, as Glass took the ball behind the net and passed it over the net to McKeefrey, who was waiting at the crease's edge. In the blink of an eye, the Minutemen had a 5–0 advantage heading into halftime.

"Three goals in the first half. He had a great shot right at the end of the first period. All year we've been lacking a guy inside on the crease that finished opportunities. He's a guy who works hard," Canaille said.

After the break, whatever Notre Dame coach Kevin Corrigan said in the locker room kicked in and the Irish went gunning for the UMass net.

Jay Negus scored to open the second half for UMass, but that was all the firepower the Minutemen could muster.

Burke Hayes broke through for the Irish with 4:28 remaining in the Garber goes artificial turf; field a UMass tradition

JEREMY ADAMS

There is a special place on the University of Massachusetts campus, a place that symbolizes the utmost in tradition, school spirit and sportsmanship.

It is a beat up patch of grass, bordered to the west by cold metal bleachers and a cramped maroon press box, across from which is a steep hill from where you get the best view of UMass lacrosse games and oh–so–scenic Boyden Gym. It is Richard F. Garber Field.

It is a shrine.

Don't show up to wave pom–poms or eat cotton candy. Buy yourself a hamburger or "hot-dogger," let the opposing team's fans have the bleachers, and find yourself a nice piece of grass up on the hill.

"When you come out and see the hill crowded it's a nice feeling," senior Casey Costello said. "The bleachers are real close to the benches and the field, you hear everything and you really feel like you're playing for the people."

The afternoon sun from over the horizon–altering Holyoke Mountain Range counters the cool early spring New England breezes, but you may want to bring a sweatshirt in case overtime trails into early evening, when the sun hides behind dinosaur–esque (in stature and age) Boyden. Bring your love for lacrosse, and your respect for the deep maroon and white tradition — the Minuteman lacrosse program thrives on it, the field symbolizes it, and the players and coaches live by it.

Richard F. Garber Field is not named after a philanthropic alumnus looking for a tax write–off, it is named after the man who built one of the nation's most respected men's lacrosse programs. Garber took the reigns of the program in 1956, in its second year. He recruited athletes from the physical education classes he taught, going 0–7–1 in his first year. "Garber's Gorillas" would go on to earn a reputation for their tenacious play. The program enjoyed 31 winning seasons through Garber's 36 year tenure, including a 11–0 perfect season in 1969. Seven starters on that undefeated squad had never played lacrosse before Dick Garber's influence, and he did not have scholarship athletes until 1980.

"He built such a strong foundation to the program," Dick Garber ward and current UMass lacrosse coach Greg Cannella said. "I can't say enough about him as a person and what he did not only for me but for thousands of alums."

Garber is the NCAA Division I's all–time winningest coach, with exactly 300 victories and only 141 losses. Dick Garber is UMass lacrosse, and Cannella is gravely determined to preserve the dignity upon which Garber built the Massachusetts program.

"Protecting the integrity of this program and what Coach stood for is something that concerns me," Cannella said. "I have and will continue to do my best to uphold that."

Garber Field was dedicated in 1992 after the legendary coach's 1990 retirement. It will be converted to artificial turf by next fall to accommodate the field hockey and lacrosse teams. It stands now as a memorial to a great man, who always regarded achievements off the field before those on the field.

Cannella does not speak of his mentor without reverence. He has pushed for Garber's induction to the UMass Athletic Hall of Fame, and in just his third year at the helm of the Minutemen, he continues the teachings of the man he simply calls, "Coach."

"Every year the first time we step on this field we step back and I have [the players] look at the press box and his name," Cannella said. "I just tell them that he's looking over the field from up on that press box so always play your hardest on the field to respect him, and always play with class

Walsh, Minutewomen beat UNH

By Jorma Kansanen

The color of money in the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's 15–8 win over New Hampshire last Saturday was Wildcat Blue, but it was in the way that the Minutewomen used it that showed.

Paced by 10 different scorers, UMass (3–6) outshot UNH (3–5) by a 33–13 margin, and made change of goalie Shelby Hodgkins, known as "Money" by her teammates, for a well– deserved victory at rainy Totman Field. It was a day of record highs amidst low temperatures on Saturday morning for the Minutewomen, with two of their scorers setting career scoring marks.

Only sophomore Laura Korutz' career–high five goals could have possibly outshined senior Stephanie Walsh's 100th career tally, especially on such a cloudy day. Sandwiched around sophomore Melissa Anderson's 20th birthday present, a goal at the 24:20 mark of the first half, UMass could not have asked for more in their 15–8 win.

For coach Francesca McClellan, the victory was not only evident on the score sheet, but on the field.

"It was more of a team effort today," McClellan said. "What I think was the best thing was that some of our players turned their performances around today. Not just in the goals, and we did some some very nice things out there, we took care of business and Laura [Korutz] was one of those things.

"But the beauty of it was our bench, and they came in and did a nice job. We had our ups and downs, but we played like so much of a team today."

UNH got on the board quickly, with freshman midfielder Stephanie Kefe's goal just :33 into the game for the early 1– 0 lead. But UMass took the lead at the 2:45 mark on a goal by junior midfielder Jennifer Herker (5 goals, 4 assists), capitalizing on the increasingly murky play for her fifth goal of the season.

The Wildcats tied the game up, but Walsh (14g, 2a, 16pts) put the Minutewomen on top for good at the 15:27 mark. Freshman goalie Megan Haggerty held UNH to one more goal in the half, with senior Erica Bryan, freshman Rebecca Minaker and Anderson giving UMass the 6–3 lead at the half.

Walsh became the fifth player in UMass history to score 100 goals, but Walsh was more happy with the win than career marks.

"I didn't really think about [the scoring mark] at all today, really," Walsh said. "I haven't been shooting well lately, and I've kind of been down on that. But, its definitely relieving, and it feels good, but I'm more impressed with the overall game right now."

Minaker (13 points) scored her tenth goal of the season at the 34:35 mark, but after a period of sloppy play, the Wildcats were able to chop the lead down to 7–5. Enter Korutz (15g, 10a, 25pts), who quickly became the money player on the field, scoring five of the next eight, and assisting on another goal.

In a period of 1:18, the sophomore from Media, Pa. one– handedly stopped UNH's comeback attempt by scoring three straight to put UMass up 11–5. The Wildcats attempted another run, and a goal by freshman Stephanie Pavlick and two more by Korutz slammed the door on a 15–8 win.

Softball streak comes to end in Philly

By Jackie Leroux
Collegian Staff

The city of "brotherly love" was not very loving for the Massachusetts softball team this weekend. The Minutewomen were riding high atop two winning streaks, and held first place in the Atlantic 10 standings. They had been on a 14 game unbeaten streak that included 13 wins and one tie game, plus a 24 game regular season Atlantic 10 winning streak. But it all came to an end this weekend when they traveled to Philadelphia, P.A. for doubleheaders with the Owls of Temple and the St. Joseph's Hawks.

UMass won their first game against Temple on Saturday, 4–0, but lost the second 2–1. With a shutout in the first game, sophomore pitcher Danielle Henderson extended her consecutive shutout inning streak to 38, tying her career high. She had 3 strikeouts, 3 hits, and 2 walks.

The Minutewomen opened the scoring in the first game with two runs on the top of the third. Junior Tracy Osier got the first score, moving to third on a bunt single by senior Stephanie Mareina, and then stealing home. Two batters later Mareina scored, off an RBI single from junior Kim Gutridge.

UMass scored twice more in the fourth inning, when sophomore Mandy Galas stole home plate, and sophomore Octavia Brown scored on an Osier ground out to short. There the score would remain, as Temple was unable to get a run in

Minutewomen win N.E's; oust Wesleyan, Harvard

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

The No. 7 Massachusetts women's water polo team captured their first New England Championship title this past weekend at Williams College. The Minutewomen are now 21–3 overall, and this tournament win puts them one step closer to a trip to Nationals.

UMass was slated to play Boston University on Friday evening, but the snow made it impossible for the Terriers to make it. The game had to be forfeited, and ended in UMass's favor with a score of 5–0.

On Saturday, the Minutewomen had two matches, with the first coming against Wesleyan. The 12–0 game was the fifth shutout in program history. The defense was on the mark for this game, not allowing Wesleyan any shots.

Offense wise, the Minutewomen played strong the whole way through, scoring five goals in the first quarter, and then four, one and two in the remaining quarters. Leading scorer Katie Grogan tallied two goals, as did Cathy Leeburg and Andrea Vazquez.

"One of the things we tried to do this weekend was to work on the fundamentals," UMass head coach Bob Newcomb said. "This weekend was relatively easy competition."

Following that match, the Minutewomen took on MIT, crushing them for the second weekend in a row, winning 23– 3. Jill Carroll, Marcie Hupp, Jacqui Tichenor and Maria

UMass sweeps Fordham; opens Beanpot today

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

If the Massachusetts baseball team can keep it up, the Beanpot trophy just might reside in Amherst for another 12 months.

The Minutemen extended their winning streak to 10 games this weekend, sweeping Fordham (22–14, 5–7 A–10) in a three game series in the Bronx. UMass beat the Rams 10–4 in the opener on Sunday, 6–5 in game two and 17–8 in the final game yesterday. The sweep gives Massachusetts (20–6, 9–3 A–10) a four game lead over Fordham for first place in the Atlantic 10's East Division.

The hot streak gives the Minutemen momentum heading into this week's Beanpot tournament, to held at Fenway Park today and Thursday. UMass will face Northeastern at 2:00 p.m. today, following the Harvard–BC game, which kicks off at 11:00 a.m. If the Minutemen win, they'll face the Harvard–BC winner at 2:00 p.m. Thursday for the Beanpot championship. UMass won the inaugural tournament last year, beating the Huskies 1–0 in the final behind a complete game shutout from junior Scott Barnsby.

Both games will be carried on WHMP 1400 AM, with Mark Van Dermeer and Mike Reiss calling the action.

COURTNEY SMITH/COLLEGIAN

The UMass baseball team gears up for one of the more special weeks of the season, the Beanpot tournament, which kicks off at Fenway park this afternoon.

Massachusetts 17, Fordham 8

The Minutemen used an eight run fourth inning to crush the Rams 17–8 in the Patriots Day finale. Sophomore catcher Brian Samela went 2–for–3 on the day, including a three–run bomb in the fourth. Sophomore third baseman Adam Correa also homered in the fourth for UMass, who broke open a tight 4–3 game with the big inning.

Brad Gorrie stole two bases in the win, giving him the all– time record for steals at Massachusetts. Gorrie now has 85, passing the old mark of 83 set by Ryan Jette.

Junior righthander Jeff Puleri improved to 3–1 on the year, scattering six hits in six innings of work. Puleri allowed four earned runs and struck out three.

Massachusetts 6, Fordham 5

Sophomore Aaron Braunstein provided the heroics for the Minutemen in game two, crushing a two–run homer to lead UMass to a come–from–behind win over the Rams.

The Minutemen were down 5–3 after five innings, but first baseman David Giglio hit the second of two home runs, a 445 foot blast that pegged the scoreboard at Jack Coffey field, in the top of the sixth, cutting the lead to 5–4. Pete Gautreau hit a double to lead off the seventh, and Braunstein hit the game–winner two batters later.

Bill Cooke started for Massachusetts, but left for eventual winner Ryan Cameron in the fifth. Cameron pitched 2 2/3 innings of scoreless ball for his third win of the year.

Massachusetts 10, Fordham 4

UMass opened the series by jumping out to an early lead and cruising behind another strong effort from Jason Bennett, who earned A–10 Pitcher of the Week for the second straight week.

Bennett (6–1) pitched a complete game, his 10th in 22 career wins, allowing four runs on seven hits. Gorrie set another record in the second, scoring on a wild pitch to give UMass a 5–2 lead. With the run, Gorrie now has 158 runs scored in his career, a new UMass record. Gautreau led the offense with four hits, including his sixth home run of the year.

Show student-athletes the money?

What is this crap about college athletes getting paid ("Play Nice," Jan./Feb. 1997)? I believe Mr. Sports Agent Drew Rosenhaus said that. What the hell does he think a full scholarship is? Don't you think we "regular" students would love to have a free ride to school (and not have to have the grades or the SAT scores required of nonathletes)? Maybe Rosenhaus should consider that instead of working a minimum-wage fast-food job (or two) to put themselves through school, student-athletes are "working" for the university.

Bonnie Ferritto, senior, Virginia Tech

I agree with Drew Rosenhaus that college athletes should be paid for their contribution to the big business of college sports. I feel salaries should be negotiated on the basic principle of "what the market will bear," like it does in the pros. However, I would place these funds in trusts for the athlete, pay tuition, books, room and board from the funds, pay a small allowance for incidentals and pay any balance to the athlete when, and only when, they graduate. This would certainly improve graduation rates among athletes, as well as relieve the schools of the cost of providing athletes free rides. If the individual decides to leave early or does not graduate, the money goes to the university scholastic fund. The toughest part of this plan would be convincing the athletic departments to give up their golden goose.

I. M. not a crook

Gee, thanks for dressing "I.M. Crook" ("Play Nice," Jan./Feb. 1997) in the shirt used by my country's national teams, including the shield! That shield is a national symbol, and it represents my country. It represents the unity of my country, an idea for which many of my friends have fought. Having "Crook" wear it is like having him hold your flag. I'm sure it was not an intentional offense, but please be more careful with this kind of thing.

We are deeply disappointed that you decided to publish a celebratory piece on rodeo ("Back in the Saddle," Jan./Feb. 1997). In no way is rodeo a "sport." It's the brutalization of peaceful, domestic animals for nothing but our fleeting entertainment value. Animals in rodeos are choked, roped, spurred, shocked, forced to the ground via a grotesque twisting of their necks, upended by their necks via taut ropes after reaching speeds of nearly 30 miles per hour and have straps cinched tightly around their sensitive inguinal regions to force bucking. From 1994 to 1996, nine animals were killed at California rodeos. The entire event is highly abusive, exploitative and deserving of outright condemnation.

Prank's on U. of Wisconsin

Many thanks and our humblest apologies to the pranksters and prank-appreciaters who wrote in to inform us that the Lady in the Lake prank ("Pranks a Lot," Jan./Feb. 1997) took place at the U. of Wisconsin, Madison, not James Madison U., Va. From the piles of letters we received, it's obvious that the Pail and Shovel pranksters are not just legends — they're heroes. One letter even informed us that one of the creative geniuses behind the original Lady was Jim Mallon, one of the creators of Mystery Science Theater 3000.

And the Lady in the Lake prank was just one of many legendary stunts the Party pulled. A resident of Madison writes: "During the Pail and Shovel Party, we were also treated to awakening to 1,000 plastic pink flamingos on Bascom Hill (in the middle of campus) and to the first Boom Box Parade. The Pail and Shovel Party allegedly started every meeting by throwing money all over the room, thereby getting graft and corruption out of the way so they could get down to the business of student government."

In February 1996, the Lady in the Lake reappeared at Madison's Winter Carnival thanks to Hoofers, an outdoor recreation club. Five students involved in the prank were given civic recognition awards for their revival of Lady Liberty. — ed

Isn't it ironic?

The irony that I am writing the editorial for U.'s annual music issue has not escaped my co-workers. Of all the editors on our capable and music-savvy staff of hipsters, I'm the one to introduce you, the faithful reader, to this issue of all things musical.

So let me preface this introduction with the following disclaimer: Aretha Franklin rocks my world, not Pearl Jam. My idea of a ripping concert is parking it on a stool and rhythmically nodding my head to the slow grooves of an ancient blues man. And when I'm feeling giddy, there's nothing like a little Sinatra to keep me in the mood.

Which is why I'm a bit baffled at the concept of God rock ("Reborn To Be Wild," page 14). I keep imagining these weird scenarios with naughty altar boys running around a church and playing air guitar on crucifixes. Imagine what a rocker could do at a pulpit. But the assistant editors assure me that this new wave of Christian music is not only legit — it isn't half bad.

And this whole electronic music thing ("Electronic Avenue," page 10) doesn't confuse me — it scares me. Those funky, keyboard-y, scratchy sounds remind me of Beverly Hills Cop and that "Axel F" song I couldn't get out of my head for months. But I guess I'm just thankful that whatever the "next big thing" is, it means an end to all that crap about grunge music, flannel and Seattle.

The one great thing about being musically challenged today is that no matter how obscure or non-existent my taste in music is, there's bound to be a group or solo act to satisfy my craving for sound. Fortunately for me, many of today's groups are rooted ("Digging The Roots," page 11) in the past, and I can usually find a familiar tune, or in some cases a familiar name ("Like Father, Like Son," page 11) on the radio when I'm scanning around for a good sing-a-long song.

Oh sure, I've been scoffed at for my admittedly narrow musical interests, but I'm not really interested in what the music snobs have to say about it. They can keep their didgeridoos, screaming guitar riffs and melodic bass lines. I may not always get it, but even I can R-E-S-P-E-C-T the beauty of a good tune.

GUEST EXPERT: Coolio

Rapper Coolio may live in a Gangsta's Paradise, but he's a superstar now. He plays the part of a bookie in the upcoming Batman and Robin and has a third album, My Soul, due out this summer. So the real burning question isn't whether Coolio made the Fantastic Voyage, but rather: Who does his hair? Answer: His sister. But Coolio says he could teach anybody how to do it.

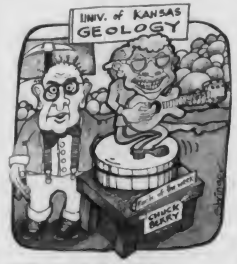
NO MORE BEERS
Clemson U., S.C.
It may not be the king of beer, or even in the royal family, but students were on edge after a nasty rumor circulated about the sudden and untimely demise of a college staple: Pabst Blue Ribbon beer. "I don't know what to say, man," said one student about this revered drink of Middle America. "It was cheap, good beer. I didn't want this to happen." The turmoil started when a local bar that sold dollar bottles of PBR stopped serving it. This prompted one student newspaper columnist to urge others to get it while it lasts, saying, "These are trying times and one day, even an American staple such as Pabst Blue Ribbon might fall victim to the horror of commercial extinction."

THE NAME GAME
U. of Minnesota, Duluth
The term "statesman" has always been used to define a disinterested leader working for the public good, but for some people at Minnesota, "statesman" is a dirty word. A few Dudley Do-Rights are trying to force the student newspaper, the UMD Statesman, to change its name to represent a "progressive and more inclusive vision of the future." For now, the staff members are refusing to become a slave to uptight administrators. They're taking it like a man and won't smoke the peace pipe until the fat lady sings. How's that for P.C.?

POTTY PARTY
Kansas State U.
A ribbon-cutting ceremony was held in honor of a new women's bathroom on campus. The lavatory has been nicknamed the Judy Roland Testimonial Restroom in honor of the woman credited with its existence. Roland, an academic adviser, was disturbed at the lack of women's restroom facilities available and made it her mission to get involved. "What we had to go through to get a restroom is unreal," she says. "This was a really hot issue. I've been yelled at and cussed at."



COOKIE CAPER AND THE HAMBURGLAR
Ohio State U./U. of New Mexico
Foodnappers are cropping up on college campuses faster than you can say, "Give me that bologna sandwich." Ohio State police are looking for a man who accosted another man and demanded he surrender his chocolate chip cookies. The victim refused to give up the cookies and repelled the attack by pummeling the assailant with a wooden cane. (Must have been some damn fine cookies.) In a similar case at the U. of New Mexico, an unidentified fast-food thief attempted to swipe a student's bag of McDonald's fries.

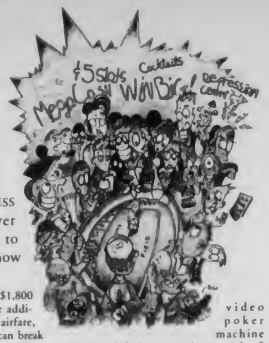
PRESIDENTIAL POSEUR
State U. of New York, Oswego
We all know politicians can't be trusted, but SUNY students were truly shocked to find out their student body president wasn't really a student. Christopher Brodt never re-enrolled last year, but he continued to accept his $3,300 salary from the student government association. Now the association is considering taking legal action against the impostor. Fortunately for Brodt, the university can't charge him with a violation of the school's conduct code — since he isn't a student, the code doesn't apply to him. Gotta love those university loopholes, eh?

HOT TO TROT
U. of Pittsburgh, Johnstown
A geology professor and a physics instructor teamed up to experiment with thermal conductivity. Sound boring? Think again. The two invited students to witness them walk across a 10-foot bed of burning coals. They claim there's absolutely no pain involved in the activity and plan on inviting students to join them in the future. We just hope they don't get fired.

ODE TO A GEODE
U. of Kansas
Some may think he's stoned, but here at U. Magazine, we think geology professor Roger Koesler rocks, and we're not gonna take him for granite. His "Rock of the Week" display on campus is très chic and comes complete with a rotating stand and rhyming poems that delight and inform. Past mineral honorees have included a bladder stone the size of a tennis ball, a stomach stone from a dinosaur, pieces of the Berlin Wall and a rock that resembles a penis. Once, when he didn't have any selections for the week, Koesler grabbed a handful of gravel and put it in the display case with a poem titled "Gravel Is Our Friend." If that doesn't merit tenure, what does?

THE POLITE INTRUDER
Rice U., Texas
Two students awoke one morning to find a strange man rifling through their belongings. A little freaked by the situation, one of the students asked the burglar to walk downstairs with her to report the incident to authorities. "He did everything I told him to," said the student. "It was strange." The other student described the intruder as "mellow." When the police handcuffed the man, he said he needed to call his grandmother. All criminals should be so courteous.

ORAL HIGH JINKS
Oral Roberts U., Okla.
The best laid plans of mice, men and zealots oft go awry. With Bibles in hand, 40 Oral Roberts U. students converged on a mosque in Tulsa, Okla., in an attempt to convert the Muslims inside. The students surrounded the building, put their hands on the walls and prayed out loud for the Christian conversion of the worshippers inside the mosque. The students agreed to leave only after they realized they had shown up on the wrong day. They mistakenly thought it was Lailat ul-Quadr, a holy night expected to draw 200 worshipers. As it turned out, there were only a few people in the mosque to witness the spectacle. The students' activities were not sanctioned by the university, and they'll receive "appropriate disciplinary action," according to school officials. Like memorizing the Muslim calendar?



BURNING MAD
Wartburg College, Iowa
Have you ever gotten so upset by a bad test grade that you wanted to burn down your dorm? Well, that almost happened when a disgruntled student lit his less-than-perfect science test on fire and couldn't extinguish the flames. Dorm residents were forced to evacuate when smoke from the burning test set off the fire alarms. Hate to see what would happen if his roommate bugged him.

PISSED OFF
Montana State U.
Professor Paul Trout says he was feeling bloated, not bubbly, after he played two and a half hours of tennis in the campus tennis bubble. Finding the nearest bathroom facility usually means heading over to the nearby field house, but this time the field house was closed — in the dead of winter. So Trout and some others sought their latrine in the great outdoors and peed in the snow. The associate athletic director says making yellow snow isn't normally necessary because the field house is rarely closed. But if the situation isn't relieved soon, Trout says, "I might just piss on the court, and they will have to deal with the consequences."

Learning Las Vegas

STUDENTS IN BOB HANNUM'S BUSINESS statistics course at the U. of Denver know when to hold 'em, know when to fold 'em, know when to walk away and know when to run.

Hannum, an associate professor of statistics, teaches a four-credit course called "Risky Business: Gambling & Gaming" between quarters. It involves a five-day trip to Las Vegas, where students learn the ins and outs of the casino industry. Students write a paper and take a final at the end of the week.

"It's definitely a unique way to go about teaching statistics, but it just made sense to me," Hannum says. "Statistics are what the gaming industry is all about."

The excitement of the bright lights and big city doesn't come cheap. Shelling out $1,800 for tuition and the additional expenses of airfare, lodging and meals can break you. But the trip is well worth it, says senior Jennifer Williams. "I learned as much during my five-day stay in Vegas as I would have during an entire quarter."

Williams didn't win big — and neither has Hannum since he started the course three years ago. But one student did cash out, Hannum says. "Once, during a 15-minute break between lectures, a student slipped a quarter into a video poker machine and left the casino $1,000 richer."

Ariana Uhlenhopp, a junior, says learning about the surveillance cameras and tracking of cheaters was enlightening. "Not only was it easier for me to learn visually, but I got to see some of the behind-the-scenes work that most people don't know about."

FUNC the Rankings

IN A FLASHBACK TO THE CAMPUS ACTIVISM OF THE 1960s, students at colleges across the nation are trumpeting a new cause: the boycott of U.S. News and World Report's annual guide to "America's Best Colleges."

The Forget U.S. News Coalition (FUNC), a group of students from about 60 schools, says the magazine's rankings of institutions — according to criteria such as faculty resources and selectivity — portray information that is unfair and sometimes inaccurate.

The movement started at Stanford U., Calif., in the spring of 1996, when some students expressed concern that administrators were more interested in getting a good ranking than in improving the college.

FUNC has since encouraged other institutions to consider withholding data from U.S. News until changes are made, while other schools have passed resolutions condemning the rankings. Among them are the U. of California, Berkeley; Smith College, Mass.; Rice U., Texas; Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Wesleyan U., Conn.

University presidents are following FUNC's lead. In a letter to U.S. News editor James Fallows, Stanford president Gerhard Casper wrote: "I am extremely skeptical that the quality of a university — any more than the quality of a magazine — can be measured statistically. However, even if it can, the producers of the U.S. News rankings remain far from discovering the method."

Senior Jeff Tsai, student body president at the U. of Texas, Austin, says the rankings are a disservice to readers because it's difficult to compare entities as diverse as colleges. And FUNC's efforts are not just "sour grapes" from schools that got low rankings, he says.

Mel Elfin, the U.S. News guide's executive editor, says he has heard criticism of the rankings for years, but he'll consider FUNC's ideas for future editions.

Still, Stanford senior Nick Thompson, FUNC's coordinator and the student body vice president, says there's no way to rank a college.

"It's like ranking a religion."

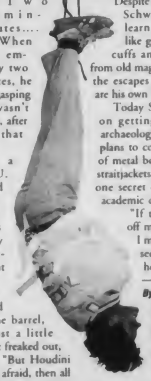
The Great Escaper

THE U. OF CHICAGO AUDIENCE HELD ITS breath as Mark Schwartz was locked in the water-filled 55-gallon barrel. The container had been built by the university to be absolutely escape-proof.

Twenty seconds passed, and audience members began expelling their breath. Forty seconds. One minute. The stage hands were nervous — they knew the barrel wasn't rigged.

One minute, 30 seconds. Still no sign. Two minutes.... When Schwartz finally emerged after nearly two and a half minutes, he was heaving and gasping for breath. He wasn't faking it. This was, after all, the escape that killed Houdini.

Schwartz is a Northwestern U. grad student and self-taught escape artist. His U. of Chicago stunt is just one of many escapes he has performed at different schools.



When the security guard locked him in the barrel, wasn't he at least a little freaked out? "A lot freaked out, actually," he says. "But Houdini once said, 'If I am afraid, then all is lost.' You learn to concentrate and avoid your fears. I think that's one of the appeals for me."

Schwartz discovered escape artistry in grade school, when he read a book on Harry Houdini. "I wasn't tall enough to be great in sports," Schwartz says. "Escape artistry was a way I could use what physical power I had."

Despite a lack of resources, Schwartz managed to learn a few escapes — like getting out of handcuffs and straitjackets — from old magazines. But most of the escapes he has performed are his own creations.

Today Schwartz is focused on getting his master's in archaeology, although he still plans to continue busting out of metal boxes, handcuffs and straitjackets. And he does have one secret escape route if his academic career falls through.

"If the university cuts off my research funding, I might have to sell my secrets to criminals," he says.

The Buzz

• It may be easier for this year's college grads to find jobs, according to a recent Michigan State U. study. The national survey showed a 6.2 percent increase in jobs and a 4 percent increase in starting salaries, resulting from a strong economy. The study estimates that chemical engineers will have the highest starting salaries, $42,758 a year, and journalists will have the lowest, $22,102 a year.

• The College Board is increasing the scores of 45,000 students who took the SAT in October because a student found a flaw in the math segment of the test. About 13 percent of the test takers were affected, and they'll see an increase in scores from 10 to 30 points. The board says this is the first defective question in 14 years.

• Under President Clinton's proposed 1998 budget, several historically black colleges would share $10.4 million in federal funds to help renovate historic campus buildings. Schools that may benefit include Fisk U., Tenn., Talladega College, Ala., Tougaloo College, Miss., and Knoxville College, Tenn.

Upon close inspection, the world of music is filled with a mangled web of sex, lies and disposable parties. Here's a sampling of wild rock tales, many of which happened at a campus near you.

• Chuck Berry — His famous duck-walk wasn't marketing genius. It was the result of a dry cleaner shrinking his suit prior to a show.

• Aerosmith — Played free shows at Boston U. in exchange for practice space during their formative years.

• Stephen Stills — The Buffalo Springfield and Crosby, Stills & Nash member was a finalist for The Monkees, but lost the part to Peter Tork due to thinning hair and crooked teeth.

• Harvard U. — Hosted Janis Joplin's final performance and the first Rounder Records release was taped there. Also, two students started the rap 'zine The Source from a dorm room.

• Sterling Morrison — Left the Velvet Underground in 1971 to teach English at U. of Texas, Austin.

• Van Halen — Required venues to supply them with bowls of M&Ms with the brown ones removed. When the U. of Southern Colorado failed to meet the requirement in 1980, the band trashed the facilities to the tune of $10,000.

• "Mellow Yellow" — The lyrics to this Donovan song are rumored to have ignited a banana-peel-smoking craze.

• Young M.C. — Was a business student at U. of Southern California when he co-wrote Tone-Loc's "Wild Thing." the biggest hit of 1988.

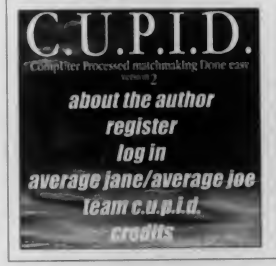
Love Bytes

FOR STUDENTS AT NORTHWESTERN U., ILL., lonely Friday nights are a thing of the past thanks to a new Internet dating service.

A couple of computer whizzes decided to play matchmaker by taking students' love lives out of sleazy singles' bars and into cyberspace. The site, called C.U.P.I.D. (http://www.ece.nwu.edu/~danm), helps pair people with complementary interests — or neuroses.

Students fill out a questionnaire of 45 character-defining questions ranging from physical appearance (75 percent rate themselves above average) to how far they might go on a first date. (News flash of the year: Guys are more willing to "hit a home run" on the first date than girls.)



According to junior Betsy Friedrich, who has used the free service, the questions are only as reliable as the users are honest.

"It's a great idea, but it sucks when people misrepresent themselves," she says.

With about 1,000 registered users "available," some students are unscrupulous about skewing the odds in their favor to get a date.

"I think it's fine to 'sell' your positive attributes, but it's not fair to round your weight down to the nearest fifty pounds or something," says sophomore Brandon Merrit, who had a couple of bad experiences with C.U.P.I.D. before finding his girlfriend of four months through the service.

One desperate and dateless student — who wishes to remain anonymous — took a test spin to find out if his soul mate was hiding somewhere at Northwestern. C.U.P.I.D. found him six female matches ranging from intriguing to psychotic, and even one match with a fraternity boy. Now that's a love connection.

Superhighway Construction

ANYONE WHO HAS SPENT TIME NAVIGATING THE information superhighway will warn you of the hellish midmorning and afternoon commutes, constant construction zones and nonstop gridlock.

But traffic jams may soon be bypassed with Internet II, the dream child of university officials who hope to connect campuses for research, digital libraries, distance learning and information sharing.

"Higher education has a new set of imperatives to change the educational environment," says Cornell U.'s Maryne Hallgren, director of the CU-SeeMe Consortium. "The new technology is needed to satisfy this demand."

Among the 98 universities with the project are Yale U.; Carnegie Mellon U., Pa.; Colorado State U.; Vanderbilt U., Tenn.; Indiana U., and the U. of New Hampshire. Officials from the colleges formed six committees to study various aspects of cyberspace.

"Colleges were responsible for much of the original Internet growth; then it became commercialized," says Les Lloyd, a Rollins College, Fla., assistant vice president for information technology. "[Internet II] will be faster and will have capabilities the current Internet doesn't."

The prospect of Internet II is thrilling for students, as well.

"An Internet designed specifically for students and faculty would be as remarkable as the transition from telegraph to telephone," says Sara Cotner, a sophomore at Stetson U., Fla.

Each participating school has invested $25,000 and verbally agreed to provide half a million dollars for three consecutive years. Schools will also seek funding from the computer industry and the government. Prototypes are expected within 18 months, although a completed version isn't expected for three to five years.

Charity begins at home

Student government officers at Gannon U., Pa., learned a lesson in creative financing when they voted to award themselves scholarships — straight out of the student activities fund.

Last May, when university officials at Gannon reallocated scholarship money to attract more freshmen, the student government officers lost their leadership scholarships, which totaled more than $18,000. On May 30, just days before the school year ended, the student government association (SGA) followed Gannon president Monsignor David Rubin's suggestion and voted to dip into the $34,000 student activities roll-over fund. SGA president Elizabeth Akers walked away with an $11,000 scholarship, and an additional $7,200 was set aside for six other scholarships.

When the vote was made public last fall, junior Brian Romito protested and drafted a petition for a referendum to overturn the vote. With 325 signatures — close to 10 percent of the student body — Romito attracted extensive media coverage and even a few death threats.

"SGA tried to hide the fact that they gave themselves more money than they'd ever given any group on campus in the history of the university," Romito says. "That's just not right."

But before the referendum vote on Dec. 5, university officials and SGA leaders met to re-evaluate the decision to take money from the student activities fund for SGA scholarships. "The university decided the students would be better served if the school awarded the leadership scholarships for the '96–'97 school year," says Dave Fabian, a Gannon spokesperson. The decision was made before any money was removed from the student activities fund.

But the damage has been done. Junior Heather Malobisky, editor in chief of the Gannon Knight, the student newspaper, says it will be a long time before the student body trusts the student government again.

"Most of the students felt that SGA should have received their scholarships, but they didn't feel they should have used our money," she says. "Two wrongs don't make a right."

U.LIFE

The Sound of Music

SINGING IN THE shower or crooning in your car is one thing. But belting out tunes without instrumental accompaniment in front of crowds of people, including Bill and Hillary Clinton, is quite another.

College a cappella groups across the nation are getting the opportunity to take their vocal talents out of their VWs, away from their shower suds and into the ears of students.

The Vassar College (N.Y.) Night Owls, one of the oldest collegiate female a cappella groups, sang during President Clinton's 1997 Inauguration.

"It was amazing," says senior Mikie Benedict. "We were singing in the east driveway of the White House. The Clintons walked by, and they were only 10 feet away."

Deke Sharon, a spokesperson for the Contemporary A Cappella Society of America (CASA), says there are almost 500 collegiate a cappella groups, and new groups are forming every semester.

Singing for the Clintons is just the icing on the cake. A cappella groups get to strut their stuff at local concerts, fundraisers and out-of-town gigs.

"We have sung everywhere from the Haight-Ashbury district in San Francisco, to Carnegie Hall, to the Great Western Forum in L.A.," says sophomore Insoo Suh, a member of the Spizzwinks(?), one of Yale U.'s a cappella groups. Yale is also home of the Whiffenpoofs, the oldest collegiate male a cappella group, which was formed in 1905.

This month, six a cappella groups will be crooning for cash at the National Championship of College A Cappella. The national finalists compete at Carnegie Hall in New York for a shot at $2,000.

That may seem like a wad of cash, but $2,000 isn't much because a cappella groups don't usually get financial support from their universities. Most groups foot their own expenses with fund-raisers, says Brock Harris, a senior at the U. of Southern California and member of the SoCal Vocals.

"For Valentine's Day, we did singing a cappellagrams for $10," Harris says. The group has also been known to toss out a hat and do street performances for donations.

Other groups dig into their own pockets.

"I personally chipped in $3,000 to make a CD," says Masi Oka, a senior from the Brown U. Bear Necessities.

Regardless of the money, a cappella singers do what they do because they love it, Suh says.

"Imagine being in a semicircle with 13 of your closest friends, making the most intricate of chords ring in perfect harmony and filling the room with its strength.

Hooked on harmonics with the SoCal VoCals.

Art Smart

AS A REQUIREMENT for her scholarship at Spelman College, Ga., Adrienne Edwards had to perform some kind of volunteer work. But instead of donning candy stripes or doing time at a soup kitchen, she stepped over a museum's velvet ropes.

She fell in love with working at the museum and decided to pursue a career in the field. With the help of a four-year pilot program through the Atlanta History Center and the Coca-Cola Foundation, she continued her practical training outside the classroom.

"It was phenomenal, and it facilitated my career — the program is that thorough and dedicated," says Edwards, who is now working on her museum studies master's at Seton Hall U., N.J.

Edwards isn't the only one who has benefited from the program. In the past three years, 16 minority students from Georgia schools like Agnes Scott College, Emory U., Morris Brown College and Oglethorpe U. have completed the 12-month, hands-on fellowship. Interns receive academic credit and a $6,000 stipend provided by the Coca-Cola grant.

"We saw a great opportunity to support a program that was the first of its kind to introduce minorities to careers in the museum field, where [they] are underrepresented," says Coca-Cola's education director, Michael Bivens.

But that's changing, according to fellow Rachelle Bouctree. "It's a field that's growing for African-Americans, and the program is designed specifically to get them involved," the Spelman junior says.

The academic year focuses on basic museum functions, including exhibition, research and fund-raising. But center program director Billie Gaines says the core concern is breaking down barriers within the profession for young people.

"To see the results and work of the fellows fulfills every dream I ever had of what [minority students] can do if given half a chance," Gaines says.

The program requires fellows to intern at a U.S. museum for the summer and take a weeklong tour of famous U.S. museums, like the Smithsonian, to network with curators.

"Every meeting puts you in contact with people who actually do the work, as opposed to professors teaching out of books," says Clark Atlanta U. senior Rinaldo Murray. "It focuses on the practical versus the theoretical."

And the rest, as they say, is history.

Electronica: the new alternative to alternative.

BY TRICIA ROMANO
U. of Washington

IN 1991, THE MUSIC charts were crowded with benign R&B acts like Paula Abdul and Mariah Carey and bland pop and country bands like Wilson Phillips and Garth Brooks. The world of popular music was safe, formulaic and incredibly dull.

Not long afterward, a trio named Nirvana released its stellar album, Nevermind, which rocketed to the number-one position on the Billboard charts. Popular music hasn't sounded the same since.

Now, five years later, the top of the charts look suspiciously the same as in '91. Bland R&B (Toni Braxton), bloated pop (Kenny G.) and generic country (LeAnn Rimes) acts are perched alongside Pearl Jam wannabes (Bush) and whiny aggro-girl rock (Alanis Morrisette). It's a period when R.E.M. and Pearl Jam turn in critically acclaimed records that flop with the fans. Music, the kids say, is not all right. And everyone from the record industry to the fans is taking a big breath and waiting for the face of popular music to metamorphose once again.

Techno revolution

They may not know it yet, but they're waiting for techno.

Techno (now called electronic) music has been ignored, denounced and ridiculed by American critics and mainstream listeners for the past decade. At the same time, electronica has quietly built a small army of fans who learn of the music mainly through underground dance parties ("raves") and electronica insider magazines like Urb and XLR8R. In the past few months, Spin, Rolling Stone, Newsweek, The New York Times and even the Wall Street Journal ran stories posing the question: Will electronic music be the next big thing?

"Electronic music is just going to explode in the next 18 months," predicts junior Jake Buffington, station manager at Arizona State U.'s KASR radio.

Many people in the music industry agree. Marco Collins, DJ and music directot at The End 107.7 radio station in Seattle, has been instrumental in getting electronic-based acts on the air. Like any other mainstream radio station, The End has a predetermined format that leaves little or no room for experimentation. But Collins gave it a whirl anyway, spinning bands like Prodigy, Chemical Brothers and Orbital on prime-time radio, unedited.

"It's a risk throwing electronic music on," he says. "But it's important for a station that is supposed to be about change — new things and new ideas — that we go there. You know, actually delving into it before it becomes a fad."

Euro stash

Funny thing. Because in England, techno has been a staple of radio for roughly a decade. Bands such as Prodigy, which is relegated to playing to audiences of less than 1,000 in the States, will play to a ctowd of 60,000 in the Mothet Country. In England, it's not uncommon to find a Chemical Brothers track charting in the Top 10 with the likes of Oasis, Elastica or Echobelly.

Nils Bernstein, a representative at the mother of all grunge labels, Sub Pop, explains the phenomenon quite succinctly: "The youth culture in England and Europe is far more centered around dance clubs than it is here," he says. "Also, England and Europe are relatively tiny markets compared to the U.S. — small enough that a simple fad can have seriously commercial consequences."

Andrea Mulrain, a regional representative for electronica front-runner London Records, agrees. "[England] is the more progressive nation when it come to dance stuff," she explains. "Our country is grounded in formatted radio. Everything is so compartmentalized."

Reborn in the U.S.A

In a country where every little nuance in music needs to be labeled and defined, is American music ready for such an extreme change?

Collins points out that traces of electronic music's influence have already made a dent on the music scene — albeit in a rock-hybrid form. Trip-hoppers Massive Attack remixed Garbage. The Chemical Brothers remixed the Chatlatans UK. Tori Amos got special treatment from Armand Van Helden and Rabbit in the Moon. And Bomb the Bass' Tim Simenon remixed Depeche Mode.

Meanwhile, other artists have been stealing stylistic snippets from electronica tracks and incorporating them into a more traditional "verse, chorus, verse" format. Spin's Artist of the Year, Beck, has been the most successful at meshing all these styles. Meanwhile, newcomers the Sneaker Pimps (from England, natch) combine Garbage-like layers of manufactured beauty with saccharine-sweet vocals and catchy melodies.

Not everyone on the campus music scene is jumping on the electronic bandwagon. "Since we're close to L.A., we're big on ska," says Tony Mayberry, KUNV assistant operations manager at the U. of Nevada, Las Vegas. But he adds that requests for electronic music have surged during the past few months.

The problem with promoting electronic music as the "next big thing" is that it could spell an inevitable doom for the art form. Longtime fans of techno are watching and listening with mixed emotions of glee and horrot as MTV installs Amp, a new show devoted entirely to electronica.

But Collins remains optimistic. He's obviously hit a nerve with his listeners. The DJ relishes stories about kids calling the station and requesting Tool, Nirvana, and... Prodigy. Collins says it doesn't matter if the music was created with guitars or with a drum machine. If kids connect with the music, then the music will survive. "I said it before, but the energy of Prodigy [and othet electronica bands] is parallel to that of Nirvana."

Only time will tell.

Don't let her fool you. Tricia still spends her Seattle nights decked out in flannel and hunting for some good grunge.

Prodigal son.

Lost in space.

Techno Lowdown

A techno-phobe's guide to electronic music:

House: Originated in Chicago and is noted for its consistent, repetitive beats — about 120 beats per minute (bpm) — and diva-style singing. Ex: Boris Dugoach, Love Tribe

Deep Dish Techno: The most common and popular format, it's also the most computer-generated. Very high-energy with different layers of sounds and high bpm. Ex: Hardfloor, Prodigy

Trance: Generally more melodic and complex than your garden-variety techno. So named because the music should guide the audience into a trancelike state. Ex: Underworld, Future Sound of London

Ambient: More soundscape and setting than a cohesive form of music. It rarely has steady beats and is sometimes mixed with other house or techno. Ex: The Orb, Brian Eno

Drum and Bass (a.k.a Jungle): Comes from London and is characterized by erratic double-layered beats and bass lines, with a second melody floating over the top. Ex: Goldie, Alex Reece

Trip Hop: Arrives straight from the Mother Country. Shifty, layered noise with slow hip-hop beats and emphasis on vocals. Ex: Tricky, Portishead

Acid Jazz: A mixture of hip-hop beats and jazz-influenced sounds that usually features lots of saxophone and some slick rapping. Ex: Guru, Courtney Pine — TR

Digging the Roots

WHEN ?UESTLOVE ARrives late for this interview, breathing hard with pick in Afro and headphones buzzing, he has an interesting excuse.

By Carrie Bell, Assistant Editor / Photo courtesy of DGC Records

Roots rock.

"I got pulled over on the way," says the drummer formerly known as Ahmir. "I didn't know it was still illegal to jaywalk in Hollywood. As if they don't have something more important to do."

With that said, ?uestlove grabs the recorder and is ready to talk about the latest successes of Philadelphia rap outfit the Roots — an organic hip hop LP (their third with another in progress) called Illadelph Halflife, an oft-requested video poking fun at the cliché rap lifestyle and a chance to be on Jenny McCarthy TV.

"I'm not gonna act nonchalant. We're excited people are listening. I like Jenny McCarthy. Every time Singled Out is on, we play like we're the contestants," he says. "It all started to pay off when MTV finally accepted the video."

MTV wasn't the only wall ?uestlove and the boys (lead lyricist Black Thought, rapper Malik B, bassist Hub, keyboardist Kamal and human percussionist Rahzel the Godfather of Noyze) hit before taking their street show to "cha-ching city." The first was cultivating fans for their nostalgic rhymes à la 1987.

"We're emulating the brand of hip hop we grew up on" ?uestlove says. "The Roots are about what we wanted to be at 12 or 13. We're not some gun-brandishing, misogynistic band. You should be responsible for how you deliver your message. But remember Dante's Inferno and the 12 circles of hell? We're only in the circle below gangsta rap, so I can't brag that much."

The second was the uphill battle of signing with Geffen Records, a company best known for its contributions to the alternative world (Nirvana, Sonic Youth, Beck).

"We chose Geffen because we had ideas traditional rap groups didn't. We figured Geffen would have more patience with us. But where do we fit in?" ?uestlove asks, mentioning to the posters of grunge's glamour girls and boys. "We were guinea pigs, and sometimes we regretted it."

But ?uestlove knows it's just one of the many things you learn after being enticed into the business by the promise of a playa's life of cars, girls and mansions.

"You find out the Yo! MTV Raps brothas were foolin' ya. Half my troubles began the day I signed on the dotted line. You think you'll be paid and it'll be cool. But shit ain't like that. Unless you're doing some mindless R&B or whatever the flavor of the second is, you're not gonna get the sales or the fantasy. Hey, didn't someone just do a video on that?"

Like Father, Like Son

JAKOB DYLAN SOUNDS homesick when he hears it's been another breezy, sun-filled afternoon in his home base of Los Angeles.

6th Avenue heartthrobs.

"It's been cold on my side of the world. But I'll be back soon enough," says the 27-year-old vocalist/guitarist of The Wallflowers (which includes Michael Ward, Mario Calire, Greg Richling and Rami Jaffee).

His "side of the world" refers to Pennsylvania, where the band is finishing a tour with Sheryl Crow. But with months of headlining gigs to follow, "soon" isn't soon enough.

"Every day we see the same five faces on the bus," he says. "We'd like to move on ... But as long as people are still buying this album, we have to keep working it."

And it seems fans and critics alike can't get enough of the quintet's sophomore effort Bringing Down the Horse, which spawned the hit "6th Avenue Heartache." The band's appeal could be due to the laundry list of talent like Adam Duritz, Michael Penn, Sam Phillips and producer T-Bone Burnett enlisted for the recording. Or maybe it's Dylan's stunning good looks and famous genealogy (Bob Dylan is his dad). Dylan thinks it has more to do with the timelessness of their sound.

"There's a better climate for a group like ours right now. The group is better. We have a company that's working harder for us. I also learned a few lessons about making records since the first one [1992's The Wallflowers]. It all comes down to experience."

The experience is all his own, but one can't help noticing the similarities between him and his legend-of-folk-rock father — the poetic colloquial lyrics, the classic sound, the artsy shy-guy image. Whether the constant comparisons get to him or not, Dylan won't say.

"I don't think who my dad is should concern people. If I write a bad song, I'm the only one responsible. If I write a good song, that's great and I deserve the pat on the back," he says. "The band has to stand on its own two feet."

Dance Hall Crashers

WHILE GOLDFINGER were watching James Bond flicks and Gwen Stefani was standing in line for teacups at the Tragic Kingdom, Dicky Barrett and seven friends were starting a band inspired by the *über*reggae movement known as ska.

Boston-baked Bosstones

"When we were younger, we were always trying to sneak into clubs to see visiting bands. We thought if we started our own band, we'd get into places for free," vocalist Barrett says. "In the course of time, we actually got pretty good at the music part."

Of course, "pretty good" is an understatement when charting the career of the Mighty Mighty Bosstones, who have five CDs, three EPs, 11 years of touring, an appearance in Clueless and a Converse commercial under their belts. Amidst all the commotion, the Bosstones focused on creating horn-filled, two-tone ska — even before the cool kids invaded their plaid, plaid world.

"The current musical climate doesn't annoy me, abuse me or affect me," Barrett says. "We drew from the bands we loved, like Madness, in hopes of creating something original. Trends come and go. We stay the Bosstones."

Although the Bosstones are known for bombastic party anthems like "Someday I Suppose," they don't mind using music as a soapbox. The serious side was most recently seen with their involvement in Safe and Sound, a CD produced in response to the Brookline clinic murders.

"I'm not a brilliant man, but I know this isn't a perfect planet. Where's the harm in writing something that will make people think and question?"

With more drinking songs and some introspective pieces on their new album, Let's Face It, the guys aren't the least bit worried about how it will fare in the skank-friendly world.

"I think the record will do fine, although I can't complain if it doesn't. I never imagined this: recording, 300 shows a year, fans. I spend my days living in a dream."

An Apple A Day

FIONA APPLE KNOWS WHY the caged bird sings. "By putting the suffering in my life into songs, I've been able to understand myself," she says from an Indiana U. tour stop.

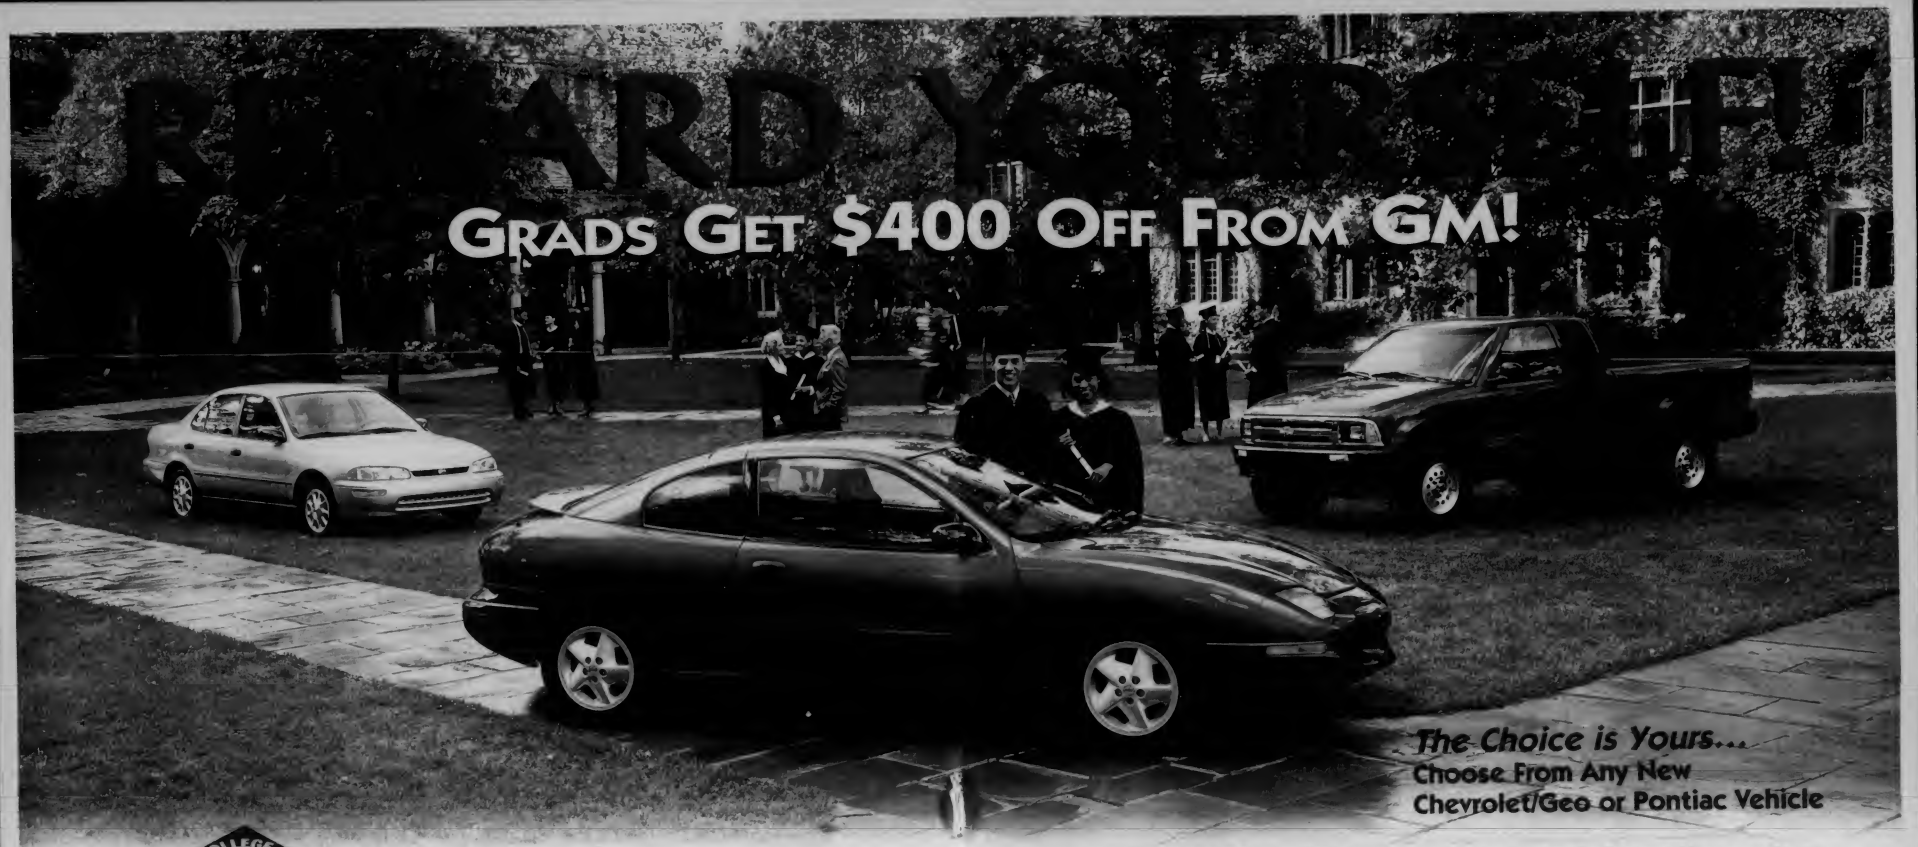
She's no Granny Smith

Reading poetry by Maya Angelou inspired Apple's introspection. "I came across her poetry when I felt like everyone hated me. She wrote about her vulnerability when she felt humiliated and ashamed."



So why is the waif-ish 19-year-old so pained?

Those who heat smoky radio hits like "Shadowboxer" and "Sleep to Dream" would say whatever her pain is, it's made her wise beyond her years. According to the song-writer/singer/pianist, she was somewhat of a loner as a kid, but she's not ailing now. "I've lived a lot in my little life, but I'm not saying I know something about relationships or life. I just say what I feel and what I know."

Apple's not concerned with being the "next big thing," either. "I don't care if what I'm doing is hip or cool. I don't want to spend the rest of my life trying to figure that out."

Compared to Apple's attention-thirsty peers, her attitude is a little unconventional. She was signed by the first record exec who heard her demo, pays little attention to SoundScan results and never attended concerts before her own. "I still don't know what I'm doing on stage."

Modest as she remains about her rise in the biz, the native New Yorker looks out for herself by letting both expetience and inexperience be her guide.

Holy rock and rollers keep the faith and gain fans.

IT WAS A NORMAL DAY IN THE '80s when Chrissy*, then attending a junior high in Fresno, Calif., came home to find her shrine to Depeche Mode missing. When she went looking for an answer, she found her mother burning posters and magazine clippings and shredding her cassettes.

Chrissy's mother was tired of the gloom-and-doom vision of David Gahan and the other DM boys and how it was affecting her daughter's attitude. She gave Chrissy an ultimatum: Christian music or no music at all.

What was a mod-rock fan to do with a musical genre dominated by the bubbly pop of Amy Grant and the Bible-tossing, big-hair metal band Stryper?

Today the decision wouldn't be so tough. Contemporary Christian music (CCM) has grown into something of an empire, with bands in every category, from rap and pop to alternative and country, to please concerned adults and avid music fans alike.

And it was good

"LIKE MAINSTREAM MUSIC, BUT IT DOESN'T compare to really good Christian bands," says Tanya Francis, a junior at Western Washington U. "Christian music is a spiritual strengthening as well as entertainment. The Lord is worshipped in many ways, and the music is reaching out to believers on their level."

By the looks of it, the God Squad is preaching to the converted and turning CCM into a multimillion-dollar industry. Hundreds of artists record thousands of CDs on dozens of religious labels for millions of passionate fans who attend a gazillion concerts a year. Bands are no longer cheap knockoffs of the secular industry's best offerings — they're groups that rise above sonically, using the same budgets, producers and video directors as the Gin Blossoms or Nine Inch Nails.

The self-sufficient world of God rock boasts its own cable network, Z Music Television, and record clubs like Word Direct. Fans can catch the latest happenings in glossy mags like CCM and Release. Some 700 stores carry the Truth clothing line — rave chic for the divinely inspired. Students at Greenville College, Ill., can take classes on the subject. Heck, CCM even has its own Jesuspalloozas, like Creation, DC/LA, Jesus Northwest and Cornerstone.

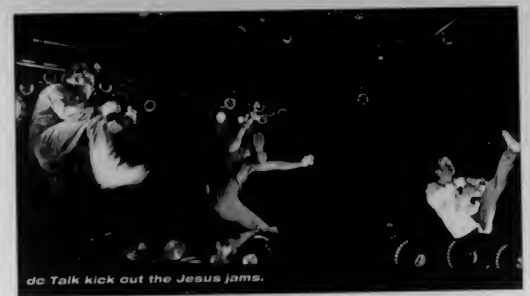
"The mainstream world wasn't very accepting of early Christian artists," says Troy Vest, EMI Christian Music Group manager of field sales and marketing. "The logic was if they were Christian, they couldn't be real rock and roll artists. So it developed as a subculture, taking care of its own."

Most of the force behind the movement stems from the Bible Belt, whose epicenter is in Nashville. Mom-and-pop bookstores have transformed into the religious equivalent of Tower Records, shelving Michael W. Smith's latest LP next to icon candles and the Jonah-and-whale play sets. Churches and Christian colleges have become scouring grounds for talent scouts looking for the next big holy thing.

Dawn of a new era

FOR YEARS, THE GENRE EXISTED IN ITS vertically integrated arena virtually ignored by general markets but happy to play in the fields of the Lord to dedicated believers. Then suddenly, a charismatic song about Noah and his ark called "Flood" made heavy rotation on the nation's top alternative radio stations, and Jars of Clay became overnight sensations.

"We never made a conscious decision to cross over," says Jars guitarist Matt Odmark. "We never expected anyone but the contemporary Christian market to be interested. But it was a pleasant surprise. What a gift to make music likable enough to challenge mindsets and build bridges between two groups who don't normally communicate."



Insiders understood the new attention paid to CCM was a long time coming. Perhaps the biggest break came when SoundScan — the market-research company that tallies weekly music sales — was installed in religious bookstores in 1995, giving Christian bands a prayer at charting. When dc Talk's Jesus Freak sold 86,000 copies its first week — beating recent chart debuts by De La Soul, Neil Young and Beck — money-hungry, major-label execs discovered a potent and relatively untapped audience.

"I don't think the general industry ever realized there was such a captive audience looking for a positive message in music," CCM managing editor April Heffner says. "Also, the bands aren't just trying to sell the Bible put to music anymore. They are more focused on the music and not caught in religious clichés."

The concern to be a valued musician as well as a minister has also had a major influence on how the genre is perceived.

Jagged little pilgrimage for Rebecca St. James.

dc Talk kick out the Jesus jams.

"The trend used to be to mirror a secular act to give people a Christian version," says Mark Harris, a singer/songwriter for the lite-FM act 4HIM. "Now people are less accepting of copycat bands, so you have to carve your own niche. It's more healthy to set your own standards, and the bigger budgets and better production help us do that."

Of course, most musicians agree that promoting the Gospel still takes priority, even for Silverchairish rockers Audio Adrenaline, whose roots are at Kentucky Christian College.

"I wanted to do something for God, but I wanted it to be radical," bassist Will McGinniss says. "It's cool that you can be in a rock band and still say something meaningful and cause-oriented. The songs are tools for the younger generation to glorify God and get some energy out."

Scoff you may at the mention of energy, but don't be fooled by stereotypes. The fans aren't sitting in pews letting their souls be saved. dc Talk's Toby McKeehan has been known to pull an Eddie Vedder by climbing the stage scaffolding to incite audiences into chanting "Jesus is the way!" McGinniss reports uncontrollable dancing, moshing and even stage diving at AA shows.

"People definitely thrash, and we get pretty wild on stage," he says. "Even the union guys — who might have worked Pantera the night before — will tell us, 'You guys rock!' I think they have the illusion that we're going to be a big sissy band."

Kevin Hart, a Colorado Christian College junior, says CCM concerts maintain a different vibe from secular shows without losing the sound's edge.

"When I saw Rush, I felt out of place. Everyone was drunk or stoned, while I tried to enjoy the music. You can tell when you're in a community of Christians. Everyone is accepted, and you feel the presence of the Lord."

"I wanted to do something for God, but I wanted it to be radical."
Audio Adrenaline bassist Will McGinniss

Practicing what they preach

DESPITE THE INCREASING musical similarities between secular and sacred acts, the two remain worlds apart when it comes to lifestyle. Most of the time it's the little things you notice — absence of the F-word, high marriage rates, heavy religious imagery and the most helpful PR reps this side of St. Peter's gate. Rebecca St. James, the evangelical equivalent of Alanis Morissette, even prayed out loud prior to her interview.

"The person behind the music and how they live their life is basically what divides people into Christian and non-Christian acts," 4HIM's Harris says. "If people know the Lord, and they want to sing music to represent him, they will perform it in whatever genre they feel most comfortable with."

Most of the bands admit that temptation remains. In 1994, CCM darling Michael English had an extramarital affair, and all hell, so to speak, broke loose. He was purged and his records yanked from shelves. Odmark says he deals with the same things any 23-year-old single male does and must remember to check himself.

"There are always things to struggle with whether you're Christian, in a band, both or neither. We all walk wounded through this world, trying to decide the best path."

Drummer and born-again Christian Peter Furler of the Newsboys explored the wild side first. He and his mates from down under formed the band to drink beer, impress girls and even smoke a little pot.

"I realized my faith was more important than my indulgences. You learn how to be in this world but not of it," Furler says. "God never puts us in situations we can't handle. Or maybe we're just too ugly and too old to get groupies."

Other problems common to the secular side exist in CCM as well. Vocalist Christine Denté of Out Of The Grey notices the same absence of females.

"I find myself in a lot of situations where I'm the only woman in the room. I have to force myself to have a voice."

Blooming stars Audio Adrenaline face the music.

Music for the masses

DISCUSSION OF CCM BEGS ONE QUESTION: Can it dwell in the house of the Lord and the palace of pop culture simultaneously?

"I don't want to be pigeonholed," dc Talk's Michael Tait says. "It's great to have music that can be enjoyed by all people, even atheists. We won't water down our message, though."

One example of cross-over strategy is EMI's No Lies campaign. EMI is working with 16 campuses (including U. of Arkansas, East Tennessee State U., U. of Kentucky and George Mason College, Va.) to get the music out, and plans to take the program nationwide this fall. A compilation CD and other products will be donated to campus Christian groups, which can use them for contests and other promotional events. There will also be a college lifestyle Web site (www.NoLies.com).

"We want the mainstream to hear what great music this is," Vest says. "I hope one day bands can exist in general categories, like ska, instead of being segregated to a Christian section at Blockbuster. They don't have a Krishna section for Live, even though that's what they sing about."

Some artists say popular acceptance is a plus, but prefer to concentrate on loyal fans.

"I would rather focus on strengthening pre-existing religious families. Music can change lives when the message is in a language they can understand, although I also pray it gets in the hands of nonbelievers and sheds some light," St. James says.

Rock of ages?

WHEN GOD TOLD PETER TO BUILD HIS church on rock, was this what he had in mind? Probably not, but the band members — who aren't out to reinvent the church — feel music is an innovative way to reach people, although the Gospel with guitar has its opponents.

"How could rock be evil if God created music?" Tait asks. "The same bricks that build a whorehouse can build a church. The message remains the same; the delivery is different."

Furler agrees fervently. "I haven't seen any Bible passage where it talks about what decibel the devil comes in."

Pocket Band

the Egg

Those looking to cautiously dip a toe into this whole electronic music hubbub can't go wrong starting out with Orbital or Chemical Brothers or, for that matter, the Egg.

This Oxford-based trance group is known in the United Kingdom for its psychedelic live performances in which the band wears white Devo-esque jumpsuits against a white backdrop. The whiteness provides a screen for their self-shot film footage, which is projected onto the stage.

"I think we may get an open-mouthed, 'What are they doing?' sort of reaction in the States," says Mark Revell, the band's guitarist.

That's right. Guitarist. This techno outfit likes the freedom of performing live, and that means guitars and drums — no computers or backup tapes allowed. Like his bandmates, Revell is a former architecture major who decided to stop designing houses and start designing house grooves.

"I was tired of that whole distorted-guitar rock sound," he says. "We're kind of a funk-based band taken off into space and into techno."

The Egg are counting on their debut album to be their big break. The title is Albumen — the proper name for the white of an egg.

HERE'S ONE COMPILATION THAT cannot be dismissed as another collection of previously recorded B-sides. After all, Melissa Etheridge wouldn't have recorded "Sin Tener A Donde Ir" if left to her own devices.

The tenth in the Red Hot series, Silencio=Muerte is an eclectic kick for those who don't know "tejano" from "me llamo." Los Lobos cheerfully start things off with the peppy "Pepe & Irene," followed by David Byrne, who continues his already entrenched Latin tendencies with "Yolanda Niguas." Los Fabulosos Cadillacs and Fishbone do a sort of Latin ska number called "What's New Pussycat?" And the hits just keep on coming with several styles of American music — from rock to hip hop to funk — successfully given a Latin treatment. Although proceeds from the album are for a serious cause and the liner is decorated with beautifully serious art, Silencio=Muerte is perfect for a serious fiesta.

Hand It Over

Reprise

★★½

If you're still not sick of grungy, feedback-riddled, distorted rock. If you're still not tired of wrist-slasher lyrics. And if J Mascis' tortured, strangled whine still rocks your world ... well then, there's absolutely nothing wrong with Dinosaur Jr.'s latest.

But for those a little bored with rock stars who are so gosh darn unhappy all the time, tracks like "I'm Insane," "Alone" and "I Know You're Insane" probably won't revive your interest in angst-rock.

Admittedly, Mascis, bassist Mike Johnson and drummer George Berz do know how to deliver the musical goods, the best parts of the album are when Mascis gives his voice a rest and lets the instruments do the talking.

Switching between two singing styles (a regular whiny voice and a whiny falsetto) Mascis grinds through 12 tracks of forlorn desperation peppered with lyrical gems like "I can't take myself / I still need a lot of help."

Sucks to be him, huh?

John Mayall and the Bluesbreakers

Blues For The Lost Days

Silvertone

★★★★½

Forty-plus albums and one Clinton Inauguration performance later, godfather of British blues John Mayall is still producing incredible music that both honors classic blues riffs and creates new standards for the next generation.

Once again taking up vocals, organ, piano, synthesizers, 12- and six-string guitars and harmonica, Mayall leads the few backup musicians he needs on this trip down memory lane. Like the title suggests, Blues For The Lost Days is a nostalgic album, with Mayall reminiscing about "All Those Heroes:" "When I was a boy about the age of 10 / Got some old records by the blues men / Found a big connection to my lonely life."

Mayall sometimes gets a bit heavy-handed when bemoaning the woes of war ("Trenches") or the evils of big city life ("Dead City." "How Can You Live Like That?"). Guess that's why they call it the blues.

Broadway & 52nd

Capitol

Following up the success of Hand On The Torch, British producer Geoff Wilkinson has once again plunged into the Blue Note jazz catalog looking for diamond samples in the rough. Finding a gem here and there, he sets his treasures into the new grooves he creates with U.S. rappers Shabaam Sahdeeq and KCB to make an original jazz/hip hop hybrid.

This time pulling riffs from songs by Lou Donaldson, Horace Silver and Bobby McFerrin, Wilkinson has produced 14 tracks that flaunt rhythmic attitude yet won't scare off the mainstream audience. The first single, "Come on Everybody," may not have the addictive bounce of their previous hit "Cantaloop (Flip Fantasia)," but it's one of the few blue notes on Broadway & 52nd that falls flat.

Otherwise, Broadway & 52nd — which refers to the address of the famous Birdland jazz club — delivers on the creative promise of the earlier album, from the spoken word poetry of "Sheep" to the eastern-tinged sax in "Snakes." Join Us3 anytime.

Our Picks

Apocalyptica
Apocalyptica Plays Metallica By Four Cellos
Mercury

Metallica hits played on cellos. Just who, you wonder, is the target audience for those hybrid ditties? Beats us, but there is a certain odd pleasure in hearing "Enter Sandman" frantically churned out on a stringed instrument. So is the album any good? It's a question only answered by another: Compared with what?

Doc Cheatham and Nicholas Payton
Verve

Put together an eager, 22-year-old trumpeter and a wizened, 91-year-old trumpeter/vocalist and what do you get? Either a really awful buddy cop movie or a cheerful jazz compilation to bring back those Mardi Gras memories. Luckily, with Doc Cheatham and Nicholas Payton, it's the latter. Here, the dynamic duo cover 14 jazz standards such as "Stardust," "Dinah" and the album's high point, "How Deep Is the Ocean."

Bobgoblin
The Twelve Point Master Plan
MCA

It's the second American Civil War, and four young soldiers go AWOL and start a rock band. Sound confusing? Pop their CD into your computer to learn more about these Devo look-alikes. (Their power-pop-driven music isn't bad, either.)

Orbit
Libido Speedway
A&M Records

Gravitate toward these luscious, progressive-rock sounds to keep your adrenaline (and other juices) churning. Atmospheric guitar- and drum-heavy alt anthems that don't lack a lick of passion fill the space around you. You may be wary of getting a little closer, but don't be shy. There's nothing scratchy here.

Baby Fox
A Normal Family
Roadrunner

Welcome to the '90s British dance hall. Inspired by '80s rock-steady artists like Lee "Scratch" Perry and trip-hoppers like Portishead, sultry Christine Leach's crystalline vocals are penetrated by slinky bass lines, a barrage of samples (from water bongs to vinyl scratchin') and dub trickery. Complicated production and deep lyrics, but liking it is so easy.

Reel

BY MELISSA GREGO

SPRING HAS SPRUNG, AND SOMEthing's fishy about the reawakening of Hollywood. Check out this month's movies. People — not birds — are singing. A fresh-legged deer leaps and lands in front of an oncoming, exploding car. Soil faithfully thaws, but volcanoes have the earth trembling. That's because this is the season of renewal, when music saves, love pours from the grave and natural disasters continue to flow into the movie market.

Roseanna's Grave

Fine Line

Roseanna (Mercedes Ruehl, The Fisher King) is dying, but her hubby Marcello (Jean Reno, Mission: Impossible) is worrying about everyone else. She wants to be buried in the local cemetery, but only a handful of plots remain — and reservations aren't accepted. So Marcello blazes around town putting out cigarettes, getting medicine to the sick and hiding bodies in order to keep would-be plot occupants out of Roseanna's grave.

Volcano

20th Century Fox

Tommy Lee Jones has been to heaven and earth chasing fugitives, avoiding natural born killers and being blown away. But can he go with the flow? If not, lava will flood Los Angeles. Jones stars as the L.A. emergency chief in charge when a volcano erupts beneath the La Brea Tar Pits. Can he save the City of Angels from yet another disaster? Anne Heche (Walking and Talking) co-stars in this natural born thriller.

Paradise Road

Fox Searchlight

Glenn Close, Frances McDormand (Fargo), Julianna Margulies (TV's ER) and Pauline Collins (Shirley Valentine) star as prisoners who can't take the oppression at a World War II Japanese concentration camp. So they do what any strong woman would do: They voice their opinions in the form of a vocal orchestra. Believe it or not, this note-toting drama is based on the true story of women captured in the Far East.

Ripe

Trimark

When the family car hits a deer and explodes, twin sisters are relieved of a sadistic, abusive father. They flee the accident scene and find a place to crash amidst young rowdies at a run-down army base. That's when one of the sisters begins to follow in her father's footsteps. Can they break the cycle in this coming-of-rage film?

Keys to Tulsa

Gramercy

Eric Stoltz and James Spader had a two-day thrill together in the valley, and now they're headed to Oklahoma. Stoltz, as the shunned son of a well-to-do Tulsa family, is lured home by blackmail, courtesy of his high school sweetheart's hubby (Spader).

That Old Feeling

Universal

Reunited and it feels so … wrong. Paula Marshall (A Family Thing) plays a bride who's crying at her own wedding, and it's not because of cold feet. Her parents have been gladly divorced for years … until they're caught heating it up at the ceremony. The divorcés, Bette Midler and Dennis Farina (Get Shorty), bicker with — and bed — each other to the dismay of their daughter, friends and spouses.

Anaconda

Columbia

An anthropologist (Eric Stoltz), a documentarian (Jennifer Lopez, Selena) and their cameraman (Ice Cube, Friday), are in for the boat ride of their lives. They not only brave the Amazon on their quest for the monstrous Anaconda, but also must thwart a villainous opportunist (Jon Voight, Mission: Impossible). It's a jungle out there.

Breakdown

Paramount

Losing an hour of drive time when the car breaks down is one thing. But losing your wife? When a yuppie couple (Kurt Russell, Escape from L.A. and Kathleen Quinlan, Apollo 13) make a cross-country trek for a new job, they break down on a deserted road. A so-called rescuer nabs the wife and hubby's high-action pursuit ensues.

Murder at 1600

Warner Bros

Snipes, camera, action! When a staffer at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. is killed, D.C.'s investigating homicide detective (Wesley Snipes) discovers — gasp! — official White House documents are missing and Secret Service agents don't always play by the book.

Kissed

Goldwyn Entertainment Company

The undertaker, the medical student and the corpse did it in the morgue with the body cloth. According to one necrophiliac undertaker's fantasies, love knows no boundaries. When a love triangle forms between her, a medical student and her "associates," she exposes the extent to which she loves to take work into her own hands.

Doubleteam

Columbia/Mandalay

Dennis Rodman's not just a free spirit — he plays one in the movies. As a makeup- and sequin-wearing CIA weapons specialist, he teams up with Jean-Claude Van Damme, who plays a world-class CIA terrorist assassin. They break every rule and explode every building, car, truck and van in their path.

B.A.P.S.

New Line

Halle Berry (Losing Isaiah) makes an executive decision to be a rich man's house guest — not wife. Berry and newcomer Natalie Desselle play Georgia glam girls who find their way to Beverly Hills and into the heart of a dying millionaire (Martin Landau, Ed Wood). When an unworthy heiress plots against their host, the divas hair-weave a counterplan of their own.

Nothing Personal

Warring factions bloody the streets of 1975 Belfast in this chillingly intense movie from Irish director Thaddeus O'Sullivan.

Nothing Personal* takes place during a single night, as a gang of Protestant street soldiers sets out to avenge a gruesome IRA bombing. An inevitable tit-for-tat cycle of violence ensues.

O'Sullivan says he chose to focus less on the politics of who's right and who's wrong in order to show the effects of war on a community.

"I wanted to give a visceral sense of what it's like when you're on the front line," O'Sullivan says. "Living in mayhem must be horrific."

To capture the reality, O'Sullivan spared none of the carnage. But the film doesn't intend to glorify or bring sentiment to the struggle. "In 1975, things were at their worst. There was more sectarian violence, more IRA violence — it was a darker period."

Although the film focuses on the Loyalists, O'Sullivan comes from a Catholic background. Nothing Personal has done well in Northern Ireland, but the director was recently berated for the film by a pastor who was once involved in the paramilitary.

"I was so flabbergasted, I didn't tell him, 'The film's about you!'"

The Reel Deal

Chasing Amy

When writer/director Kevin Smith's no-budget debut, Clerks, became a surprise hit at the 1994 Sundance Film Festival, he told everyone it was the first installment in his "New Jersey trilogy."

"It was bullshit," he confesses. "We just said it so people would give us money to do more films."

And it worked. Now he's delivered on his once-empty promise by releasing the third movie in the series. Chasing Amy is the story of Holden (Ben Affleck, Dazed and Confused), a New Jersey comic book writer who falls in love with a lesbian (Joey Lauren Adams, Mallrats). The couple's unusual relationship alienates their friends and troubles Holden, who has difficulty coming to terms with his girlfriend's wild past. "We always knew this movie would offend the lesbian community," Smith says. "There's no way around it."

Being put on the defensive is nothing new to Smith, who was trounced by critics for his last film, Mallrats. "I was last year's whipping boy," he says. "But to this day, I still think Mallrats is a fine movie."

Obviously trying to avoid future controversy, Smith played it safe with his next film, Dogma, a road movie about the Catholic Church.

A LONG TIME AGO IN A GALAXY FAR, FAR AWAY, A U. OF Southern California film student created a dehumanized world where people lived underground, emotion was outlawed and numbers replaced names.

The futuristic love story and the young director caught the eye of Francis Ford Coppola, who helped turn the 20-minute debut into a full-length feature. The film? THX-1138. The student? George Lucas.

Of course, not all cinema-obsessed college kids are launched at warp speed to fame by some Hollywood hotshot. But all filmmakers have to start somewhere, and that somewhere is often a university.

School days

Early in a career, the worst film you can make is no film, according to Colorado College film professor Tom Sanny. Although directing ability stems from natural talent, he says, a formal education and trial films build character, teach discipline and act as a therapy of sorts.

"Movies in America are like hockey in Canada," Sanny says. "We've just always done them well. My role as a professor is not to make films, but to make filmmakers."

Most students fade into the biz with short projects and theory classes. Colorado junior Vanessa Tomasello says the best way to break into the field is to try every job, no matter how small.

"Helping out older students on final projects lets me see how different directors work and how to best compensate for problems that might arise when I'm in charge," says Tomasello, who's working on a visual interpretation of a William Blake poem.

A film is born

Once the tools are mastered and the confidence raised, the adventure of filmmaking begins — often with an idea.

Most plots are inspired by everyday events. New York U. grad student and Student Academy Award winner Phil Bertelsen fictionalized his parents' interracial love story.

"The relationship was a constant source of inquiry for me," he says. "It was hard to decide how much artistic license to take. It proves life can be stranger than fiction."

Cornell U.'s Chris Spurgin wrote his film entirely around a prop. When he was younger, Spurgin bought a Moonwalk bounce house, hoping to get rich quick. After hauling it a few places and realizing how big a hassle it was, he sold it on the condition that he could use it later in a film.

"It's an absurd comedy about a guy whose life falls apart after he steals a Moonwalk. The metaphor of the plot and the prop was too good to pass up," the senior says.

Other directors aren't so gracefully inspired. In fact, it hit Albany State U., Ga., junior Keith Wade over the head. He made Chillin Till We Breathe in response to Terry McMillan's Waiting To Exhale.

"The movie is my male response to her woman's film. I wanted to pull the covers off male emotion."

Reality bytes

After hearing endless stories of actors' egos, set feuds and missed lines, it's no wonder some students opt to direct computer cursors instead of flaky thespians. And with user-friendly technology and Toy Story's success, who can blame them?

"As a computer science major, I felt the only hope I had was to program database systems," says Kiernan Holland, a U. of New Mexico senior.

Holland used his software skills to create Rise of the Thorax, a short that won $2,000 in an international animation competition.

Holland and seven other UNM students are making Malibu Hamlet, a five-minute film that's "Shakespeare with a surf-punk twist."

"It's easier in a group because everyone shares their strengths to complete a final goal," UNM senior Elizabeth Dwyer says. "The computer is a way for me to be an artist, even though I can't draw on paper."

Lights, camera, social action

Not all movie buffs turn their talents toward big money, popularity or laughs. Enter the socially responsible, politically aware director.

Chicago's Street-Level Youth Media provides a creative outlet for at-risk youth using filmmaking to address urban issues. Hampshire College, Mass., senior Andrew Bracken worked for the program last summer and hopes to use the experience for future documentaries.

"I've seen a lot of friends drop out and turn to drugs and gangs. It could've just as easily been me," he says. "Working for this group helps me do my part not to let that happen to the next generation."

Instead of shedding light on current issues, Florida State U. sophomore Michael Marcus helps people remember the past with his documentary, The Holocaust — A Deception of Truth.

The need to make it consumed him after he returned home from a journey through Polish concentration camps.

"The trip made me realize it was my responsibility as a child of this generation to help expose the horrors of the Holocaust," Marcus says. "It was more important than school, than work, than my social life. I had to share what I saw and felt."

Marcus spent months looking for the right images, writing, editing, seeking permission and raising funds to complete the film, which is now distributed as an educational tool for high schools in four states.

The money pit

Tales of Spike Lee maxing out credit cards to finish Do The Right Thing remind students of what it takes to transfer an idea from paper to reality: money, and lots of it. Depending on length, scale and quality, student movies cost anywhere from a few hundred dollars to tens of thousands to complete.

"No one wants to hear about dreams unless you have the money to make them happen," Wade says.

Money comes from jobs, grants, scholarships, parents and loans. Cornell senior and Filmmakers Club president Josh Fagin suggests making rich friends. "You should always be prepared to tack on an extra $100 to the price of everything."

James Madison U., Va., seniors Jeff Lofgren and Bill Johnson founded Gemini Entertainment to raise money for their made-for-TV movie, To Helene, and give students production experience.

"Not being at a film school forces us to be resourceful trailblazers. We want Gemini to help people realize their dreams after we're gone," Johnson says.

With everything that can go wrong, it's easy to understand how an aspiring director could get discouraged quickly. Harvard U. law student Zach Lehman, who won a Student Academy Award for his claymation film while at Dartmouth College, N.H., says your best friend is patience.

"Triple however long you think it will take. Be able to take criticism. Follow your heart. Fight for funding help. All of this is great advice, but won't help you unless you keep in mind that no matter what happens, it's all in a day's work."

Carrie Bell doesn't know much about filmmaking, except for that hidden camera she stashed in her roommate's closet.

Back to the cutting board.

Oscar Child

Limos arrive and anticipation builds. The stars have come out to play. Sharon Stone is either wearing or saying something critics will moan about tomorrow. It could be the biggest night of a student filmmaker's life — the Student Academy Awards.

Now in its 24th year, the program awards the top three films directed by full-time students in the categories of animation, alternative, dramatic and documentary; a fourth award goes to a foreign student director.

"The Academy is interested in the future of the film industry, and colleges are where new filmmakers are coming from," says Rich Miller, the SAA's administration director. "It encourages good filmmakers to keep making movies."

With more than 300 entries a year, competition is steep to say the least — just look at past winners like Robert Zemeckis, Spike Lee and Bob Saget.

"We only send the best nine films in each category to be screened by Academy members," Miller says. "The movies should be résumé pieces that show you can direct and tell stories on screen."

On top of the prestige, winners are treated to a trip to Hollywood, a cash prize, a celebrity-filled awards ceremony and power meetings.

"The Hollywood people take it very seriously. Doors open that you never knew existed," says Jon Andrews, a Yale. U. grad and Silver Award winner. "In a word, the program is affirmation."

Although star treatment felt great, Patricia Cardoso, a '96 UCLA grad who won first place for The Water Carrier, says meeting others with similar dreams was more inspiring.

"This was an amazing group of people who shared my commitment to film," says Cardoso, who is filming a romantic comedy for Ciby, a French film company. "There were many times I swore to quit, but the winners gave me hope and strength to go forward." — CB

We Got the Beat ...Again

BY ALEXANDRA KLOSTER
Northern Michigan U.
Illustration by Rob Edwards, Clemson U., S.C.

"I WENT TO A PARTY LAST SATURDAY NIGHT ..." † Can you hear those words without instantly downloading an image of a leather-clad Lita Ford railing around on her wantonly placed guitar? † Well, I can't. The music of my youth — the '70s, '80s and counting — is burrowed so deeply in my subconscious that even the most common words innocently strung together send me into a fit of flashback frenzy.

Especially the tunes of the "Me" decade, when I hit my adolescent peak, and boys and jellies were more important than careers with full benefits. Maybe I'm culturally deranged because I enjoy bands with spandex, fingerless gloves and three-times-around-the-waist-is-better-than-once belts. Bands rocked the nation's radio stations, threw fans in a tizzy with their one-hit wonders, inspired trends like unisex hair frosting and faded into obscurity.

Flock of Seagulls, Tiffany or Quiet Riot mean anything to you? Who's that little blond girl who donned crucifixes and lace? Whatever happened to the self-proclaimed Boy Toy anyway? Probably traded in fame for motherhood.

Fortunately for those who think the music went to an early grave, America's major media outlets are waking the dead. VH1's Big Eighties show, It Came From The '80s on MTV, as-seen-on-TV CD collections and local "Eighties for Ladies" bar nights are feeding the need for nostalgia.

But the love affair is, at best, bittersweet. The music excavates the most traumatic moments from a sealed tomb called memory. I embrace the musical genius of Milli Vanilli and the Nelson twins as much as the next gal, but should blue eye shadow, leg warmers and fluorescent pink fold-over socks (I admit under oath that I wore them with black pumps in hopes of just having fun like She-bopper Cyndi Lauper.) live on?

The diversity and originality represented by Color Me Badd, Menudo and the New Kids just don't make up for the reign of terror I caused. I'm barely 5 feet 2 inches now, but in high school I rose to a statuesque 5 feet 7 inches, thanks to liberal amounts of Aqua Net, a kinky perm and the talent of early-morning bathroom beauticians. I relished my newfound height until I nearly caused a major car accident. I was bouncing to Lisa Lisa and the Cult Jam when my aerodynamic hair KO'd the driver without missing a beat. Women like me are hunted down as threats to the ozone layer.

This is a dilemma. I'm a junkie. I can't even leave the house when a good Wham song comes on. I can't blame it on the rain. Soon you won't be able to find a vein. Vacation is all I ever wanted. I have to believe that someday I'll be able to listen to K-Tel records or watch an A-Team episode guest starring Boy George without wondering, "Do they really want to hurt me? Do they really want to make me cry?"

Like, omigod, Alexandra Kloster is currently in rehab. She has surrendered her boss acid-washed jeans and Sebastian Bach posters as the first step to recovery.

Double Take

You may not rule the world yet, but you can start pillaging it with the new book Cheaters Always Prosper: 50 Ways to Beat the System Without Being Caught, by U. of California, Santa Barbara, student James Brazil (not his real name). A few Brazilian hints:

- There is such a thing as a free lunch. Place shards of glass in your dessert at a fancy restaurant or plant chewing gum on the booth of a low-class joint and sit on it. Then raise hell. The manager will come running with free food and gift certificates.
- Catch a free ride. Tell a car dealer you just got an inheritance and love the newest model, but you need to drive it for a day before you make a decision. Take a joy ride and, when you bring the car back, say you'll finalize the purchase the next day. Don't go back.
- Hot new wheels. If you need a new set of tires on your car but can't bear to cough up the 400 bucks, get yourself a $35 rental car instead — and switch the tires. As long as your tires aren't bald, the rental employees won't notice when they check the car in.

Space station fumes reach danger level

MOSCOW (AP) — Antifreeze fumes leaking from a cooling pipe on the aging Mir space station have reached the maximum acceptable concentration and may become dangerous to the Russian-American crew, a news agency reported yesterday.

The crew has fixed two other leaks, but a remaining leak in the Kvant-1 research module has eluded cosmonauts trying to seal it, Mission Control Center spokesman Viktor Blagov said at a news briefing, according to Interfax.

Blagov said officials were worried about the situation, but it was not immediately clear what would happen to the station and its crew if the leak is not found soon. The Russian space agency did not answer calls from The Associated Press last night.

NASA is unaware of any new serious problems aboard the Mir and has not heard of any plans to abandon the space station, NASA spokesman Kyle Herring said yesterday. He also said that as far as NASA knows, the levels of leaking antifreeze aboard the station are allowable and safe.

About 0.4 gallons of ethylene glycol have already leaked, and the fumes have reached a concentration of 1.2 milligrams per cubic meter — the maximum acceptable, Blagov said, according to Interfax.

AZT withheld from pregnant test subjects

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is paying for experiments in poor countries that could allow 1,000 babies to die of AIDS unnecessarily by withholding a protective drug from HIV-infected pregnant women, the patient advocacy group Public Citizen charged yesterday.

The government says the studies are ethical because they are the only way to find new HIV protections that poor countries can afford. But in a letter signed by prominent bioethicists and Dr. Wilbert Jordan, head of the Black Los Angeles AIDS Consortium, Public Citizen compared the U.S.-funded foreign research to the infamous "Tuskegee experiment" in Alabama in which the government withheld syphilis treatment from poor black patients.

"We are confident that you would not wish the reputation of your department to be stained with the blood of foreign infants," said the letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala.

Shalala did not immediately respond, but the National Institutes of Health and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention vigorously defended the studies.

"In the absence of identifying some regimen that is affordable, hundreds of thousands of kids are going to die," said the CDC's Dr. Phillip Nieburg.

Mount Holyoke occupation over

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Avery Ouelette, Mount Holyoke's student government president-elect, speaks to MHC students, faculty, staff, and media presses on the lastest developments in negotiations with administrators.

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

SOUTH HADLEY — The Mount Holyoke student takeover of Mary Lyon Hall ended last night at approximately 9 p.m. when the last two of the protesters left the administrative office; at 7:30 p.m. the first 21 students left the building which had been occupied since 3 p.m. on Monday.

According to the Mount Holyoke News, the student protesters felt that their presence could be of more use to the cause if they were outside.

No student protesters were available for comment following their exit.

The takeover ended approximately five hours after College officials came forward with their first public release concerning the student's latest demands.

In an hour long session held at the campus's Amphitheater, over 300 students, faculty and staff gathered to hear the administration discuss issues of admission policies, cultural space, chaplaincy, Asian American Studies program and Assistant Dean of Students.

Avery Ouelette, Mount Holyoke's student government president–elect opened the discussion by reading "A Letter to the College community from President Joanne V. Creighton" (see page 4).

In comparison to the administration's release dated April 20, "Progress Report," the latest document featured one change in position (on cultural space) and two clarifications (on the Asian American Studies program and the Assistant Dean of Students).

Student protesters, both inside and outside of Mary Lyon, appeared surprised by the lack of additional compromise.

Yesterday's letter highlighted an administrative "change in position" on cultural space for Asian/Asian–American and lesbian/bi–sexual/transgendered students; as well as two "clarifications" on the Asian American Studies program and the Assistant Dean of Students.

Beyond these three alterations there appeared no further compromise on the part of the administration.

UM graduate awarded fellowship

By Julie Siegal
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts graduate Erin Jackson was awarded a prestigious fellowship to attend law school by the Phi Kappa Phi National Honor Society.

Jackson qualified for the fellowship in part because of her involvement in a judicial internship at the U.S. Supreme Court.

"The Phi Kappa Phi Fellowship is in some sense both a culmination and a continuation of my honors thesis," Jackson said. "As a UMass intern at the Supreme Court, I saw how most individuals are mystified by the court and don't really understand what it actually does. I want to make the law more accessible to the average citizen."

The fellowship caps Jackson's distinguished undergraduate career and attests to both her commitment and range. As a Student Government Association (SGA) member, she served as a senator and then as a chairperson of the SGA's Public Policy commitee. As founder, president and Most Valuable Player of the UMass women's rugby team, she almost singlehandedly brought the sport to campus. All the while, she pursued a double major in political science and women's studies through the University Honors Program.

"She was one of the jewels here," said English professor John Nelson, who nominated Jackson for the fellowship. "She worked hard to achieve all she could, and she didn't have a silver spoon in her mouth. She did it all while having part–time jobs."

Jackson received many honors while attending the University, including the 1996 Senior Leadership Award, the 1996 Konieczy Leadership Award and the 1996 Kathryn Furcolo Outstanding Intern Award. She was also president of the UMass chapter of the Golden Key Honor Society, member of Phi Beta Kappa and a 1995 William F. Field Alumni Scholar. In addition, her senior thesis — "Broadcasting the Supreme Court: The Implications of Audio and Video Access to Oral Arguments" — was first funded by an Honors Research Fellowship Award and then received the 1996 Honors Director's Award.

Jackson, who received her bachelor's degree in May 1996, is employed as a paralegal with Thornton, Early & Naumes in Boston, where she is currently involved in researching claims by asbestos exposure victims. She plans to attend law school in the fall.

UM budget to increase only $3M for next year

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

Currently, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is slated for a $5 million increase in its 1998 budget, far less than the $28 million increase that the University requested.

At last Thursday's Faculty Senate meeting, Chancellor David K. Scott gave an update on the 1998 budget for the UMass system, which is currently under debate in the Massachusetts State Legislature House of Representatives.

Scott said that the final budget represents a long planning process and that "we are still in the early stages," but that the most recent House budget figures showed only a .8 percent increase in the total budget for UMass Amherst.

Scott also said that the House has designated $8 million to the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education, a portion of which the Board may choose to give to UMass Amherst. Last year, the Board received $3.8 million from the House and gave $200,000 to UMass Amherst.

"We do not know how the Board will allocate the $8 million this year," Scott said.

In addition, an amendment to extend the state's program of "matching funds" in which the state pledged $.50 for every $1 the University generated in fundraising, has been defeated in the House.

Scott called the matching funds program "an important part of our work" in Campaign UMass and stated that it was "not in the budget that will go forward to the Senate."

Professor Eric Einhorn, chair of the political science department, expressed concern over the budget and asked Scott to address the chances for improvement in the budget.

"Several of my colleagues are dismayed by this. It is very disheartening," Einhorn said. "Is the case desperate or merely difficult?"

In response, Scott noted that while UMass is scheduled for a .8 percent increase, the state and community colleges will receive a 5 percent increase in their overall budgets.

"Clearly the University was being treated differently," Scott said.

Scott speculated that this difference could be because of the 5 per-

Jury selection in McVeigh trial completed

By Michael Fleeman
Associated Press

DENVER — Seven men and five women were selected yesterday to hear the Oklahoma City bombing trial, with the judge using a bingo-style system of numbers to shield the identities of the already anonymous jurors.

"I now address you as members of the jury," U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch told them as they took their assigned seats in the jury box.

"You've been selected as the jury to try this case."

Although their names, backgrounds, attitudes and races were not disclosed, sources close to the case said the jury consisted of seven men and five women, with an alternate panel of three men and three women.

The jury is blocked from the view of reporters in the courtroom by a wall, but can be partially seen by members of the public. Those in the courtroom said the panel appeared to have 16 white members and two whose race could not be determined, but who appeared to be either Hispanic or American Indian.

Those jurors who could be seen by journalists included an elderly white man who leaned over and stared at reporters; a young white man with glasses; a young white woman with curly blonde hair; a white balding man with a mustache; a man with long dark hair who appeared to be an American Indian and a white young man with a beard.

Peruvian hostages walk free after soldiers storm mansion

By Lynn Monahan
Associated Press

LIMA, Peru — In a bloody lightning assault, Peruvian troops stormed the Japanese ambassador's mansion yesterday, freed dozens of hostages and ended a four-month standoff with leftist guerrillas. All the rebels — believed to number 15 — were reported killed. President Alberto Fujimori said all 72 captives were rescued, but an undetermined number were injured in the gunfire and explosions that rocked the compound. A diplomat reported seeing one dead hostage and three or four wounded soldiers.

Peru's foreign minister, Francisco Tudela, was carried away on a stretcher. A congressman later said he had broken his leg. As smoke wafted over the compound, triumphant soldiers hauled down the guerrillas' flag, and ex-hostages and their rescuers cheered and jubilantly sang the Peruvian national anthem. A large pool of blood could be seen at the bottom of a stairway where soldiers had led hostages to freedom.

The operation by a 150-man military and police team climaxed an international ordeal that had transfixed two nations and focused global attention on a little-known Marxist guerrilla group, Tupac Amaru, and its demands that jailed comrades be freed in exchange for the captive diplomats and businessmen.

Peruvian and Japanese news media reported all the hostage-holders — including at least two teen-age girls — were dead.

Lederles give gift to equine studies

By Daniel E. Levenson
Collegian Staff

The Equine Studies program at the University of Massachusetts, at Amherst, recently received a $168,000 gift from former UMass President John Lederle and his wife Angie.

According to a recent press release, the contribution, which was given as part of Campaign UMass, will "set up a charitable remainder Unitrust, the ultimate proceeds of which will create an endowment for the benefit of the Equine Studies program."

Angie Lederle, a long–time fan of horse riding, first became seriously involved with horsemanship when she and her husband came to the University in 1960 from Michigan.

John Lederle, the University's 15th president, vastly contributed to the changes that made the Amherst campus what it is today.

While he was in charge, the number of students enrolled and the faculty and buildings on campus increased significantly.

"I was president during the building period," Lederle said.

The fund, which will be entitled the Angie K. Lederle Equine Studies Endowment, will provide funding for a variety of horse related purchases and activities, including riding equipment, horse trailers, new horses and equine breeding.

Lederle, commenting from his western Massachusetts home, said of the donation that "this is a small way of expressing appreciation.

"It was an exciting period and I think we're in exciting times now," said Lederle, referring to his tenure as president and commenting on the current state of the University.

"We love the University," he added.

While John Lederle was UMass president during the 1960's, his wife got a chance to meet and know many UMass students with whom she continues to keep in contact with.

In 1983 the Graduate Resource Center on the UMass Amherst campus was named after the former president.

According to information provided by the University, Campaign UMass has among its goals: "Increasing excellence in teaching and learning," and "creating a wiser and better world."

In University literature, the drive to improve the school is described, "Campaign UMass is intended to support the University's basic agenda. This agenda begins by providing access and opportunity for the Commonwealth and the nation's brightest and best students to receive a nationally competitive university education."

Jurors return tommorow to take their oath and hear opening statements as Timothy McVeigh stands trial in the worst act of terrorism on U.S. soil.

The 28-year-old Gulf War veteran is charged in the April 19, 1995, truck bombing of the downtown Oklahoma City federal building that killed 168 people and injured hundreds more. He could face the death penalty if convicted.

Outside of court, McVeigh lawyer Stephen Jones said: "We're ready to go." Prosecutors declined comment.

Intent on preserving jurors' privacy, Matsch concocted an unusual system of exercising peremptory challenges, in which jurors were identified by a letter and a number.

Lawyers called out the codes — D-2, A-4, E-6 and the like — of the jurors to be dismissed. In peremptory challenges, no reason must be stated to excuse a juror. The process took about a half hour.

Prosecutor Joseph Hartzler tried to make light of the system. "Like bingo, your honor," Hartzler quipped.

Matsch glared at the prosecutor and said, "It's a lot more serious than a bingo game."

By renumbering the jurors, Matsch was creating an anonymous jury because reporters and the public would not be able to link panelists with answers they gave during questioning.

Since the trial began three weeks ago, Matsch has been meeting in secret with lawyers to handle the dismissal of prospective jurors based on their beliefs about the death penalty or other views. He's even barred reporters from seeing prospects' faces and kept them from getting transcripts of court sessions.

■ rally

to voice her concern over their "clarification" of the Asian American Studies program.

"What you are proposing us to do is what we have done for five years... we want a real commitment to Asian Americans," Pham said.

Several students also screamed out their concerns for the suspended students inside Mary Lyon.

Pleas included: "Joanne Creighton you owe us an explanation on what is going to happen to those fine women in Mary Lyon," and "Are the [protesters] going to be stigmatized for caring about this institution?"

The administration offered no immediate answers concerning the students' suspension except for they were still in effect.

In her first public appearance since Monday's takeover, Creighton addressed the crowd, "I want you know that your voices have been incredibly important in developing this document... I think these last few days have been painful."

But according to many student protesters the pain and frustration was far from over.

Student negotiator Fabiola Tafolla, speaking through an open window in Mary Lyon voiced her discontent with the process citing that "this document did not address our revised demands" referring to a widely distributed list of five key demands posted by the student protesters.

"Basically this says the decision [on the change in admission policy] is made and tells us why," Tafolla said, "Basically there were no negotiations."

But the administration was adamant that their efforts were just.

"This is a clear effort by the administration to move ahead on cultural space. In fact it is a commitment," said College spokesperson Kevin McCafferty on the College's concession to grant cultural space to the Asian and Asian-American and lesbian, bisexual and transgendered communities.

"The administration was negotiating with good faith for seven hours this weekend... [But] a building takeover would represent a break off in talks with the students," McCafferty said, explaining the lack of negotiations between protesters occupying Mary Lyon and the administration.

Yesterday morning the Betty Shabazz House was the sight of a seven hour meeting between administrators and elected student officials.

McCafferty noted that student protesters inside Mary Lyon were offered the chance to leave the occupied building to take part in yesterday morning's discussions; student negotiators claimed this morning's meeting was not originally scheduled for negotiations but discussion of administration process — no students left the building.

Yesterday's events followed a long night and a mid-morning rally.

Over 40 students spent the night on the lawn of Mary Lyon in a sign of solidarity with the students inside the building.

The emotional high point of the morning rally took place as sophomore Amanda Sapir addressed the crowd from a second floor window citing all the wonderful feats that the suspended students had accomplished in their lives.

"We are not begging to come back to Mount Holyoke, We are saying that Mount Holyoke needs these women. Mount Holyoke can not lose these women," Sapir said.

cent reduction in tuition required of the University (and not the state and community colleges) by the Board of Higher Education.

"I have heard that they are not going to penalize the state colleges for tuition reduction," Scott said. "You can interpret that."

Although he did not expect the University to receive the $28 million increase it requested, Scott was hopeful for some improvement over the current House budget.

"Usually, the University does better in the Senate than in the House," Scott said.

The budget, when it is finalized, will have to include $200,000 to $800,000 to fund recruitment of valedictorians and salutatorians, the operating costs of the Massachusetts Information Highway, and a "few other significant items," according to Scott.

wounded soldiers came from Eloy Avila, Bolivia's acting ambassador to Peru, who said he had been inside the residence and seen the victims.

The low casualty toll among hostages was surprising to some. An armed forces assessment early in the 126-day siege estimated such an assault would cost the lives of 70 percent of those in the compound.

The hostages, all male, were mostly Peruvians, but also included 24 Japanese, 12 businessmen and 12 diplomats, including Japanese Ambassador Morihisa Aoki. There were no Americans among them. Less than an hour after the raid, Fujimori strapped on a bulletproof vest and victoriously entered the compound. He shook ex-hostages' hands and joined with them and soldiers in singing the national anthem.

Smiling and carrying a large red-and-white Peruvian flag, Fujimori traveled with two busloads of hostages, apparently unharmed, to a military hospital. From inside the buses, the freed men gave the thumbs-up sign and smiled.

"We've received 72 friends alive and well," an elated Fujimori said in the bus.

Other hostages were rushed off in ambulances. Friends and family gathered at the nearby hospital to look for loved ones.

"We're here to applaud the hostages and police for their bravery," said one woman at the hospital, Edith Gonzalez. "There was no other alternative but to attack."

But the sister of one hostage said she wasn't sure.

"I don't know if the attack was necessary," said Nancy Dominguez, 53. "All I know is it was a horrible shame."

In Tokyo, Japanese Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto said Peru had not told him in advance of the raid, even though the compound is technically Japanese soil.

"Our country was not informed in advance and this is very regrettable," he said. But he expressed support for Peru's leader, saying: "There should be nobody who could criticize Mr. Fujimori for his decision."

Hashimoto said all the Japanese hostages were safe, but some were slightly injured. He also expressed regrets for "several people who are injured or lost their lives."

Talks to peacefully end the crisis broke down March 12 over the rebels' demand that Peru free their jailed comrades. Fujimori repeatedly ruled that out.

Fujimori had said he would use force to end the crisis only as a last resort, but Peruvian news media repeatedly reported military plans to raid the compound.

The heavily armed guerrillas stormed the residence on Dec. 17 during a cocktail party marking the Japanese emperor's birthday and took almost 500 hostages. They quickly released most of them. Rebels had warned they had heavily mined the compound to prevent an assault, and staged drills earlier this month to prepare for raids.

Local students spend day at UM learning about science

By Juliette Doro
Collegian Correspondent

Students from local schools participated in an Engineering and Science Day on Saturday hosted by the National Society of Black Engineers at the University of Massachusetts.

The children, ages 7 to 15, were able to view some projects done by University engineering students and to participate in a model bridge building contest to sharpen their own skills.

According to Julius Randall, Associate Director of Minority Engineering and advisor to the Society, Saturday was a chance to expose the students to engineering.

"Most of them are first generation. There aren't any engineers at home. This will give them a better idea of what an engineer is," Randall said.

Each student will have a mentor from the Society, who will take them to activities throughout the year and will tutor them if they need it. The students will be tracked until college. Several companies will donate all the children's school supplies, including computer software. Randall said that the companies have chosen to remain anonymous.

"It's a great opportunity for kids to get to know some students and get to see what it's like in college and be in the engineering program," said Gayle Carvalho, whose 9-year old son Michael had attended other events with Randall in the past.

The students viewed and tested a driving simulator, which they thought was just like a video game. The simulator is a car with the engine replaced by a computer used to test reactions to different driving conditions.

Nine-year-old Tolu Onafowokan said, "It was like a game. It didn't feel real."

"It's like Sega Genesis 32X, but a bigger screen," Michael Carvalho said.

Students played a board game, Bat Quest, designed by Pierre Elysee, a senior electric and computer engineering student. The object of the game was to get the "bats" from cages on one end of the board to cages on the other, based on traffic signals.

Elysee, who designed the game in 1994, said, "It has been my dream to market the game at the end of my senior year." He is currently looking for an investor to sponsor the game.

"It [the game] was fun, but it was tough. You had to have a lot of strategy," said child participator Tosin Onafowakan.

The students were supposed to see a demonstration of a "robotic mouse," which uses infrared sensors and battery power to find its way through a maze. However, Jean-Robert Durocher, one of the seniors who designed the "mouse" told the kids it was not working.

At the end of the day, students saw a computer bridge- building demo, where they picked a bridge design and broke off into teams to build a bridge for their town. The students will come back in a few weeks with their completed bridges.

"The day gives kids some connection to what they do in school in science and math. It's a little bit more concrete," Carvalho said.

UM Prof to give lecture on polymers and their functions

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts professor in the Department of Polymer Science and Engineering will give a lecture, entitled "Strings of Life: Structure and Dynamics of Polymers" today at 4 p.m. in Memorial Hall as part of the Distinguished Faculty Lecture series.

Murugappan Muthukumar, who is considered one of the world's foremost polymer theoreticians, will deliver the fifth and final installment of the lecture series, meant to highlight some of the University's most accomplished faculty members.

According to Muthukumar, the lecture is intended for a general audience, and that a scientific background is not necessary.

The lecture will describe polymers — long strands connecting very many chemical units. These chains are on the forefront of the technological world, and can be found in medical applications such as artificial joints, heart valves and cartilage as well everyday objects like airplanes and musical instruments.

"This is about what polymers are and their functions in life and society," Muthukumar said.

Muthukumar also said that he will explore how molecular aspects of polymers lead to such diverse applications. His current research deals with "environmentally friendly" composites and methods of producing them in a controlled way. The example he uses is developing a paint that is safe in the way that it will not wash away in the rain.

The UMass Department of Polymer Science and Engineering is widely known as being the best in the world, a reputation backed up by a number one ranking from National Research Council.

The success of the program is due in large part to modern facilities of the Silvio O. Conte National Polymer Research Center, one of the most recent additions to the UMass campus.

Muthukumar's lecture is free and open to the public, and will be followed by a reception.

NPC plans day of protest

By Joseph R. Fountain
Collegian Staff

The National Peoples Campaign (NPC), along with local student activists and community organizers are set for a "National Day of Protest" on April 27. The protest will be held in Philadelphia to protest budget cuts to programs for the poor, racism and police brutality.

The NPC has targeted Philadelphia because of President Bill Clinton's planned three-day summit entitled, "The President's Summit on America's Future," which is also meeting on April 27. Vice President Al Gore and former presidents George Bush, Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford along with current congressional leaders from both parties and corporate CEO's are scheduled to attend.

The purpose of the President's Summit is to spur philanthropy to aid non-profit organizations and stimulate volunteer efforts to solve social problems.

NPC is using its own experts and has assembled a group of experts to counter the summit's message. According to Western Massachusetts NPC organizer Nick Camerota, 300 civil rights, religious, labor, women's rights, environmental and gay and lesbian organizations from across the country have endorsed the protest.

The endorsers for the protest include Noam Chomsky, political prisoners Mumia Abu-Jamal and Leonard Pelitier, author Alice Walker, academics Howard Zinn and Michael Parenti and former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark who is a founding member NPC.

"Philanthropy and volunteerism sound good but its going to take more than charity to end poverty and racism in this country," Camerota said.

Citing figures provided by Peter Edelman, former assistant secretary of Health and Human Services who resigned after Clinton signed the Welfare Reform Act, Camerota said "the legislation has put 2.6 million people, half of them children, into poverty.

"We need to stop budget cuts directed at human need and stop some of the breaks and massive subsidies that big corporations get and show opposition to these policies," Camerota said.

Those interested in attending should contact National People's Campaign at (413) 538-8537.

A mall lover's memoirs

Luke Meredith

I'm gonna freakin' die, man. I'm gonna freakin' die.

They're closing down my mall, and there's nothing you or I can do about it.

After 30 years as the heart of commerce in The City known as the Town of Methuen, the Methuen Mall is shutting down on Friday, the result of a lack of quality stores, adequate facilities and a real mall five minutes north.

All the stores are gone, and in their place will be a series of doctor's offices and cheap chiropractors.

No longer will Methuen have a hang-out for various Lawrence gangs, 13-year old suburbanites, weird old guys who look at high school girls and hang out at the Food Court and hair dressers who chant the motto, "Live by the hairspray, die by the hairspray" (The Methuen town creed, I think).

No longer will you be able to pick a fight outside Papa Gino's or get a picture put on a t-shirt with "Best Friends 4– Eva" airbrushed on the front.

No more Dream Machine.

No more Dollar Store.

No more Manchu-Wok.

It's enough to make a man lose his head.

But instead of walking around my beloved hometown muttering "Methuen's my mall" and trying to hitch rides so I can shop at Olympia one last time, I've decided to deal with it. Instead of crying about the future, I can remember the past. It's the only thing that can keep me going.

Here is a list of some of my top three favorite Methuen Mall moments. And remember, getting upset won't bring the mall back.

"Luke works at Papa Gino's," June 1991

My dad told me to either get a job or "I couldn't live under his roof anymore." So I got a job at Papa Gino's, but Marshalls offered me a job on the same day. I figured I'd try Papa Gino's first, because I could hang out at the mall after work (I was 16. Be gentle).

Well, after five hours of no break, 120 degree temperatures (dishwashers don't get to partake in the air- conditioning), piles of dirty pizza plates and having my bike thrown into the divider of the highway outside, I decided to leave Papa Gino and his little pizzeria for the upward mobility of Marshalls. When I told my manager I was leaving, he said, "It's a shame kid. You got hustle."

Thank you, sir.

(P.S. Marshalls fired me three months later. The only memories of Marshalls are the Adidas t-shirt I stole — I realize now that I was wrong, and a creepy sequence in which the old register ladies sat in the break room, jabbering about "that cute new boy who works in the stockroom." The thought of "getting it on" with the check-out lady in Aisle 3 has left permanent scars. At least now you know what makes me act the way I do).

"Luke buys obscene album," April 1990

One of the first signs of manhood is that first purchase of a "risque album." For me, that came my freshman year of high school. Myself and four friends went on our usual Friday night jaunt to the Mall. I was worried the girl at TapeWorld wouldn't let me get them, but she didn't care. I rushed home, put on my headphones, and for one night, I was in "Da Hood."

The purchase?

Nasty As They Wanna Be by 2–Live Crew, and Straight Outta Compton by N.W.A.

Thanks to the Mall, I was introduced to a world of guns, 'ho's and gangstas I never would have known without my Mall.

Thank you, girl at TapeWorld.

"Luke buys Christmas present for Mr. Meredith," December 1988

I had limited funds, so I figured a paperback from Lauriats would do the trick. When my dad opened my gift on Christmas Eve, he found a copy of Snake, the Ken Stabler Story coming his way.

I don't think Dad ever read the book.

There are tons of other stories, mostly centered around me and my friends trying to score chicks at the Dream Machine, but that's not the point. The point is that we must remember the Mall, and what it did for all those puberty-ravaged teenagers who lived in the Merrimack Valley. Without the Methuen Mall, what would we have done with our free time?

Read?

Exercise?

Screw that. Methuen's my mall, and it always will be.

Thanks for everything, kid.

A new hope for education

Seema Gangatirkar

Thirty years ago, it was possible to get a good job with only a high school diploma.

These days, in the era of corporate downsizing, just getting your foot in the door requires a college degree. But even a Bachelor's degree doesn't promise a well–paying job to pay off the mountain of debt accumulated from a college education.

Attending an institution of higher learning will put many families in debt and many students are required to work in order to meet the rising cost of attaining that degree.

At the University of Massachusetts, the total cost for an in–state resident runs about $9,641 a year. For out–of–state students, like me, attending UMass costs about $16,408 a year. Ironically, the cost of UMass is just slightly more than my own home university, the University of Vermont. Attending UVM as an in–state resident would have cost my family approximately $14,000 a year.

Why does higher education cost so much? When you look at deteriorating buildings and lecture halls on campus, it makes you wonder what the money is being used for.

Asking for more financial aid — in terms of loans — only increases debt as well as the financial burden on students who do not have any financial aid at all.

The state of Georgia though has come up with a plan that will make getting a college degree more accessible to students.

In a plan called HOPE (Helping Outstanding Pupils Educationally), Georgia Governor Zell Miller has come up with a way for students with good grades to get their degree for free.

That's right. In Georgia, in–state students with good grades get a free ride to any state school and a $3,000 grant for any Georgia private institution. In addition, students receive a book allowance.

A plan this good has to have a catch. In Georgia's case, a student needs to maintain a B average or better, in order to keep the scholarship. Even if grades are low, students can still qualify for free tuition at technical institutes.

Since its implementation three years ago, 239,000 students have received money under the HOPE program. Currently, at Georgia Tech and the University of Georgia, 97 percent of in–state freshman are not paying any tuition or fees.

The program costs about $190 million a year and is funded from an unlikely source: the state lottery.

Not only does the lottery fund tuition at colleges and universities, Zell has also used money from the lottery to make free daily pre–kindergarten classes available to every 4–year–old in the state. At a cost of $210 million, the idea behind this program is to get children ahead — before they have a chance to fall behind.

An idea like this has potential to be implemented across all 50 states. But how about nationally?

President Clinton likes Zell's idea and wants to implement something similar. Unfortunately, there is no federal lottery and so Clinton's version is less ambitious than Zell's. Under Clinton's plan, students who maintain a B average will receive a $1,500 tax credit and $10,000 tax deduction for the first two years. Families with an income of $100,000 or more don't qualify.

If you think about it, the HOPE program is truly remarkable. Anyone willing to work hard to get good grades will be able to go to college, without the financial worries. In this way, HOPE looks more at academic achievement — the ability to succeed — rather than one's ability to pay.

Education strengthens a country and increases its productivity, in terms of services and technology. Making higher education accessible to everyone should be a priority. Rather than increasing tuition and fees every year, legislators should instead focus on solutions to decrease costs.

Georgia did it. Why not Massachusetts?

A letter from inside Mary Lyon

Editor's Note: The following is a letter from the students who are currently occupying the Mary Lyon Building at Mount Holyoke College.

How to begin. We've been in this building since 2:30 p.m. yesterday afternoon. What have we seen? Well, 25 students are "presently" suspended. We received notice of our suspension roughly five hours after the initial takeover. Although we have given the administration the chance to rescind the suspension placed on us, we have heard nothing from them.

What have we been suspended for? The students here decided to takeover the Mary Lyon building because of the lack of negotiation, i.e. the breach of contract promised to us by the administration at the end of our first takeover. Stalling, indecision and unfair action have been taking place since the beginning of our time here.

Daily business in the Mary Lyon building ended when we took control of the building, and we are told that this was a violation of Mount Holyoke's Social Honor Code. A peaceful clean takeover as a last resort has been interpreted by those in authority as so dishonorable as not to warrant administrators taking action against students in Mary Lyon that will keep them from: 1) receiving credit for this semester, 2) graduating on time and 3) will limit future opportunities.

Seeing as none of our demands have been met (specifically cultural space for Asian and Asian American students, space for lesbian, bisexual and transgendered women, a year of re–evaluation regarding the change from need–blind to need–sensitive admissions and the chaplaincy), this takeover was the only action we felt we had left.

According to the letter signed by President Joanne Creighton and Dean of Students, Regina Mooney, and delivered to us last night, "the meeting scheduled for tomorrow for 9 a.m. at the Betty Shabazz Cultural Center will proceed as planned."

According to our agreement with the administration during the negotiation process, this meeting is not, nor was it ever, intended to be another negotiation meeting. Rather, the meeting was set up to discuss how to develop better processes for student concerns and complains to be dealt with in the future. As we have had no success in this vein ourselves, we feel that it is more important for us to be inside the building fighting for our demands than at Betty Shabazz talking about process.

Being inside this building and realizing and acting on what is important has made us come to know intimately what this College is all about. Our founder, Mary Lyon, was moved to establish our College on the principle of giving all women an opportunity for education, and with that the creation of space for individuals to grow, create and thrive on difference. This is the tradition that we celebrate.

We do not believe that what this College, our College, is about is human bureaucracy. Yet we here not such an administrator who has acknowledged our demands as important and positive, rather than extreme and irrational.

Women currently inside the Mary Lyon building as well as many on the outside have been active all week sacrificing everything else. All we want is some reasonable well deserved change — that the administration set their sight on how amazing this place and these women are and will be.

We will continue to occupy this building until we are confident that this time, President Creighton and the administration negotiate with us in good fair. We will not leave Mary Lyon until our list of demands are met.

Ortega and Khadafy for President?

Editor's note: On May 8, the Collegian will celebrate its 30th anniversary as a daily paper. To mark the occasion, the Collegian is reprinting an editorial from each of the last 30 years. Today, we feature an editorial from March 31, 1986.

1967-1997

I believe there are two strong candidates for President in 1988, both of who have qualities that make them desirable for the job. Who are they? Daniel Ortega and Moammar Khadafy.

Now wait, calm down, hold the uproar. Both of these men have strong backgrounds. We elected dear old Ronnie for a great part, because of his image as a tough guy cowboy. He is our strong protector, a man who will stand up and face down the bad guys. Mikhail, look out, you've met your O.K. Corral. But Reagan was only an actor. Ortega and Khadafy both have stood up and spit in the face of a tough guy who's packin' a whole more than a six–gun. It takes a lot more chutzpah to stand up to the threat of our dear, beloved Marines than the courage Reagan ever had to show in a barroom duel. Reagan always knew the outcome, and hell, if he got shot, it was no big deal. He could just get up and find a new role for next week. There's a lot more at stake in Libya and Nicaragua, and any wrong move will not only make getting up impossible, it could make next week disappear.

Both of these men have strong name recognition. In this age of electoral politics, this is necessary. After all, we knew that Ernest Hollings was running for President in '84? No one knew who he was, and even now, no one knows. Occasionally, he get credit for being a part of Gramm– Rudman–Hollings, but for the most part the reaction is, "Who is this Hollings?"

Our dear President, yes, that's right, gunslingin' Ronnie, has given these two men more name recognition than either deserve. After all, they're the leaders of small nations with relatively few people. They don't have enough military strength to make them much of a real threat. So what is Ronnie doing? Seems to point to a cover–up of some sort. While our attention is diverted, the magician does the trick.

Just look at the last week. Every major newspaper had the issue of aid to the Contras as their lead stories. Bingo. Just a missile or two later and our attention is diverted. Instead of an open debate on Nicaragua, we can pause for a little pressure through backroom politicking. And who know what Nicaragua and Libya are helping to hide. Maybe the issues surrounding nuclear disarmament. Perhaps the new right's ravaging of our environment.

Ortega has one final quality that needs mentioning. The national media keeps suggesting that the Sandinista attack on the Contras in Honduras was poorly timed. This couldn't be further from the truth. We all know that the Contras will get some sort of aid. Militarily, it was a wise decision to attack them now. It would be sheer stupidity to wait until they are fully armed. With this, Ortega has shown that he can be decisive that he can act when he should.

But the big question remains. Is this really true? Do I really believe that these two men should be our President? Perhaps the best light to view this in is by considering I am an anarchist. Given my choice, I'd do away with the government. Oh, and could one of the kind people in the UMass Republican Club, please support freedom of the press and give a copy of this to Jorge Rosales?

David Valade was a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

Another perspective on the IRA

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the letter written by Paul Doheny [and] Carl Bromley (April 15) in support of the Irish Republican Army. Yes, I do think that the IRA are terrorists, not simply because I am British, but because they have been killing innocent people for 25 years.

I do not condone all of the actions of the British government and I do not condemn the IRA for wanting to unite Ireland, but to claim that the IRA are not terrorists is ludicrous. In 1993, the IRA planted a bomb in a shopping city in Warrington, England, which injured 56 people and killed two. I would be interested, Mr. Doheny and Mr. Bromley, to hear you justify the actions of the IRA to the parents of the 3–year old and 12–year old boys killed in the explosion. Do you honestly believe that it is acceptable for a 3–year old boy to be killed because of a situation he has no comprehension of or involvement in?

The cease–fire was broken in February of last year with a bomb in London, which claimed another two innocent victims. Four months later, a bomb in Manchester injured over 200 people including a woman, who required 300 stitches to her face, an incident which President Clinton described as a "brutal and cowardly act of terrorism."

It is very easy for Mr. Doheny [and] Mr. Bromley to criticize the British when they don't have to live under the constant threat of IRA attacks we do. The simple fact of the matter is that the IRA are terrorists. The people of Britain are not against the IRA because we are anti–Irish or are against a united Ireland, we are against the IRA because we have to live our lives in fear. Perhaps you could think about this before you next try to defend them.

Jewish community celebrates Passover, a holiday full of history

Passover food is more than matzah

Sarah J. Kimmel

It is all too often that we treat life as if it is a routine. We go through the actions of each day without thinking of why we are actually doing what we are doing. Something I have recently learned is to think before I act. I find now that even the smallest actions have volumes of meaning. This includes eating.

Eating plays such a large role in our lives, yet very rarely do we really put thought into the food we put in our mouths. For instance, take this current holiday of Passover. In past years I have eaten what my parents have served me. I ate the matzot because they were the only substantial products that I could make a sandwich with.

Don't get me wrong, I went to Hebrew School and all. I'm extremely well educated in my religion, but that doesn't necessarily mean that I ever thought about the symbolism of the week. I treated this special holiday like it was just routine to eat matzah for a week in April. Like all holidays, there is a story behind it.

The history behind Passover is not any old story. It involves the mysticism of G–d, adventure, travel, death and the life of a people. It is important for people to know why we celebrate the actual holiday of Passover.

Like in every story, there is a bad guy and a good guy. The bad guy here is Pharaoh of Egypt. He held the Israelites in captivity and made them do manual labor like building pyramids and tending the agricultural land.

Now here comes the good guy, Moses. Born in Egypt, Moses was the son of a Jewish woman. In fear that her son would be tortured by Pharaoh's treatment of Jews, the woman sent her son down the river in a basket. He was found by none other than the daughter of Pharaoh. This woman took the child in to be her own and named him Moses, which in Hebrew means "she brought him out of water."

As Moses grew up, he saw how Pharaoh treated the Jews. The young man decided that he would rather live somewhere else than live in a land where the people were treated so poorly. Moses traveled to be a shepard in a far off land.

One day Moses was tending his herd when he saw a burning bush. As he approached the bush he heard the voice of G–d. This voice told him to go back to Egypt to free his people, the Jewish people.

Moses went back to Egypt and approached Pharaoh. He asked him to let his people go and Pharaoh replied that there was no way the Jews were going to be freed. Because Pharaoh denied Moses' request, G–d sent the first plague upon the people of Egypt and he turned all the water into blood.

Each time Moses asked Pharaoh to free the Jews the king ignored his request and each time G–d responded with another plague. Frogs, vermin, beasts, cattle disease, boils, hail, locusts and darkness invaded the land of Egypt. Pharaoh refused to budge. Finally, G–d plagued the people with the death of the first born of every household. In order to protect themselves from this plague, the Jews marked their doors with lamb's blood so that the angel of death would pass over their homes and spare their children. From this we get the name Passover.

After this plague Pharaoh decided to give the Israelites their freedom. Unfortunately, he also decided to send his army after them as they fled. The Jews were in such a hurry to leave Egypt that they didn't have time to let their bread rise, hence we have the unleavened Matzah.

Here we get to the part of the Red Sea. Everyone seems to love this part. The Jews are running and the Egyptian army is close behind. It's a chase that O.J. Simpson couldn't even try to compete with. There's the Red Sea in front and some angry Egyptians behind. All of a sudden the waters part and the Jews are free to cross. Just as the Egyptian army get into the parted waters the waves come crashing down around them. It would make a great movie, maybe it could star Charlton Heston.

So we don't eat leavened foods because of the Jews who didn't have time to make their bread. There are other interesting food that we eat on Passover that carry meaning as well. The Seder plate is the central focus of the first two dinners during Passover. On this plate we have maror (bitter herbs), charoset (a mixture of wine, apples and nuts), zeroah (a shank bone), betzah (a hard boiled egg) and karpas (a green vegetable dipped in salt water). The maror represesents the bitter times the Israelites endued as slaves in Egypt. The charoset represents the mortar that the slaves used to build the pyramids. The zeroah represents the lamb's blood that was put on the doors of the Jews to save them from death. The betzah represents the unity of life and the earth. The karpas represents the tears that were shed by the slaves in Egypt.

Eating is something that we do every day, yet it should not always be treated like a routine trip to the dining commons. During this week of Passover, and maybe even after the week is done, take into consideration why you are eating what you are eating. There is more to a piece of matzah than just a great big cracker.

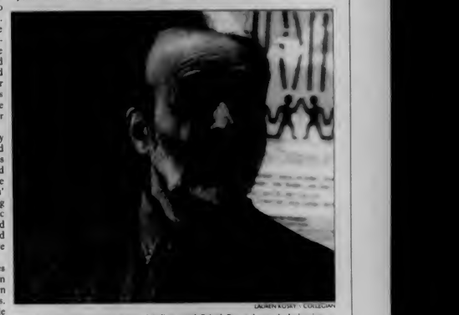
Patinkin, Sarandon scheduled to appear at Rosenberg Fund for Children event

By Sarah J. Kimmel
Collegian Staff

On Saturday, April 26 at 7:30 p.m., the Rosenberg Fund for Children and the Smith College Chapter of Amnesty International will be sponsoring a benefit event entitled, "Celebrate the Children of Resistance."



The Rosenberg Fund for Children is a public foundation which provides for the educational and emotional needs of children whose parents have been persecuted in the course of their political activities and are no longer able to fully provide for their children. This may include parents who have been imprisoned, injured or unemployed due to their progressive activities, for example, a child whose parents publicly protested the building of a nuclear power plant. The next day their pictures were in the paper and they were fired from their jobs due to their militant beliefs.

The Fund was founded by Robert Meeropol, son of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. The Rosenbergs were the only Americans executed for espionage. In 1950, they were accused of passing United States' secrets to the Soviets, including information about the atomic bomb. Meeropol was 3–years old when his parents were arrested and 6–years old when they were executed.

This one–time showing features actors Mandy Patinkin and Susan Sarandon who will read prison correspondence of the Rosenbergs. Broadway and movie actor Ossie Davis and University of Massachusetts professor Martin Espada will also give dramatic readings to benefit the Rosenberg Fund. Folk singers Pete Seeger, Toshi Reagon and Jane Sapp will provide the musical entertainment for the evening.

There will also be testimonial readings from parents and children who have benefited from the Rosenberg Fund for Children. They will read letters and essays they have written in thanks to the fund that has awarded over $200,000 to applicants.

"Celebrate the Children of Resistance" will be held at the John M. Greene Hall, Smith College in Northampton on Saturday April 26 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets for the college student section are $8 in advance, $10 at the door. For orchestra and balcony front seats, tickets are $20 and for under 18 or over 65 tickets are $14. Tickets may be purchased at the Northampton Box Office at 1–800–THE– TICK, local 586–8686, Tickets Unlimited at the UMass Student Union, Food for Thought Books in Amherst and at the Odyssey Bookshop in South HADLEY. JCA hosts benefit performance for PeaceBuilding

By Sarah J. Kimmel
Collegian Staff

The Jewish Community of Amherst will host a special benefit performance on May 3 for the Karuna Center for PeaceBuilding starring Deborah Lubar in A Story's A Story.

In A Story's A Story Lubar plays two immigrant women. One woman is Rose Solomon, a Polish Jew. The other woman is Luigina Ponzini, an Italian Catholic. These women are long time neighbors in New York's Lower East Side. Together, the two women face the obstacles in their lives with heart, humor, grit and mystical stories from the Old Countries.

Lubar has previously starred in her one–woman show, Blood and Stones, in which she portrayed three Israeli women and three Palestinians grappling in personal terms with the complexity of their shared history. She has also been seen locally in Fredrick Wiseman's Life and Fate which is about the Holocaust and in Marianne Lust's You Do What You Do, about Countess Maria von Maltzen, who risked her life to save Jews during the Holocaust.

The Karuna Center for PeaceBuilding focuses on teaching non–violent social change and conflict–transformation in Asia (Burma, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Thailand and Ladakh), Africa (Rwanda, Zaire, Zambia, Tanzania and Zimbabwe), Israel, Palestine, Russia and Bosnia. The center is under the direction of Dr. Paula Green, who designed and facilitated the 1994 Convocation at Auschwitz.

Many of the communities that the Karuna Center serves are under the pressures of ethnic violence and wars. These communities are deeply in need of social healing and peacebuilding. Hundreds of graduates of the Karuna Center's training are now assisting these communities from the United States and abroad.

The purchase of a ticket for A Story's A Story will help Karuna trainers to recruit local leaders, to train them to respond to ethnic conflict and violence and to help them to begin the healing of communities torn by hatred and animosity.

A Story's A Story will be performed at 8 p.m. on May 3 at the Jewish Community of Amherst, 742 Main Street in Amherst. For more information call Carol Drexler at 253– 2255.

Preparing food for Passover

Editor's Note: Passover is not only known as the holiday that remembers the freeing of the slaves of Egypt, it is also a time that Jews all over the world are eating gallons of chicken soup, stacks of matzah and a bowling alley full of matzah balls. The food over the week of Passover is both filling and delicious, yet there are definitely not enough Passover desserts. It is because of this, and my constant sweet–tooth, that the Jewish Affairs desk is offering up five tasty treats that you can make yourself, even in the dorm. These recipes were taken off of the Internet, so if you are still hungry you can look some up yourself. So, grab your mixing bowls and cookie pans and start cooking up some tasty Passover treats.

Oh Danny, look out! Danny (Ice Cube) struggles to free himself from the deadly grip of the eponymous Anaconda.

Anaconda: dangerously close to biting

ANACONDA
Directed by Luis Llosa with Jennifer Lopez, Ice Cube, Jon Voight
Playing at Hampshire Six Theatres

With the revival of the disaster movie genre, it was probably only a matter of time before Hollywood started cloning and repacking everything else from the 1970's. Anaconda is a repackaged Jaws, with a touch of that "look at all these different kinds of people who learn to work together in the face of hardship" disaster–movie cliche. You can almost hear Shelley Winters singing "There has to be a morning after..."

A big snake is the main threat to the boatload of documentary filmmakers who set off down the Amazon into the heart of the Brazilian rainforest. A really big, computer– generated snake. The group is lead by an anthropologist played by Eric Stoltz. For those familiar with Stoltz' career of late might notice that the godfather of indie quirk has no shame in appearing in big–budget studio pictures where he works for a week and a half, collects his paycheck and doesn't look back. It's strange that his characters never seem to live through the first 20 minutes of these films.

At the start of their journey, the film crew picks up a man named Sarone, played by Jon Voight with a strange hybrid accent that makes him sound a little more than slightly retarded, stranded on his boat. Not surprisingly, Sarone turns out to be a mysterious loner, and even less surprisingly he ends up being downright evil. Voight looks old and tired in the role, and perhaps a little guilty for stealing Robert Shaw's performance in Jaws.

Also on board for the fun cruise are Owen Wilson, one of the riotously funny trio in last years Bottle Rocket; Kari Wuhrer, MTV's answer to Vanna White; and actor/rap artist Ice Cube as Danny the camera man. Wilson and Wuhrer play young lovers who are tormented in the forest when the leave the boat to get naked — prime examples of what we learned specifically not to do in a horror film from Scream. Ice Cube is the most amusing of the bunch offering too few and infrequent one liners and amusing looks when some-

Weekend dance concert is a success

By Tricia Von Winkle
Collegian Correspondent

The "Student Dance Concert" held in Hampden Theater April 17–19 was an exceptional blend of music and dance. There were 13 dances performed. They ranged from slow and passionate to fast and humorous.

The show was put on by the Residential Arts and the Department of Music and Dance. The dances were performed and choreographed by students involved with the Alive with Dance Organization.

The lights in the theater went down and the music came up. Four dancers performed "Este Ritmo Se Baila Asi" (This Rhythm Is Danced Like This). The music was Perez Prado's "Conciero Para Bongo." Concentrated moves full of grace fused with the music to set the mood for the night. The dancers were in top form and ready to entertain.

Next came "Don't Be Shy." The music was Marvin Gaye's "Let's Get It on." This was an enthusiastic piece. The dancers were anything but "Shy," it was alluring and full of seductive positions.

The dance "Tempted" used Massive Attack's "The Hunter Gets Captured By the Game." This dance was sensual and erotic. The dancers were all women but some were in costume to look like men. The others wore long white men's dress shirts. The moves were very exact and sharp. For the finishing touch, one of the dancers went out into the audience and smoked a cigarette, it was distinguished.

The dance "Against the Odds" with music by Loreena McKennitt was graceful and full of delicate moves. The dancers costumes were beautiful gypsy style. The costumes added to the grace of their moves.

"Production Problems" with music by Bobby McFerrin was one of the highlights of the evening. It was filled with hilarious little movements — the opening scene had one of the dancers picking her nose, then a mother's outburst in the audience and a dancer being "clothes lined" are just a few examples. The dance was light hearted and entertaining. It left the audience in stitches.

The night ended with a dance called "Slide" with music by Fluke and it was fast and upbeat. The dancers looked as if they were truly enjoying themselves. Everyone was having fun with this dance.

The night was one of music, dance, color and art. The massive amounts of talent that went into this night were greatly rewarded when all was said and done. The dances were powerful, whether bringing a tear to your eye or a smile to your face each completed a different emotion.

Cannes Festival selections chosen

By Christopher Burns
Associated Press

PARIS — Six American films, including Johnny Depp's directing debut The Brave, led the list of selections announced today for the 50th Cannes Film Festival.

Also in competition in the May 7-19 festival is The Ice Storm by Ang Lee, whose last full-length feature film was Sense and Sensibility.

For the festival's milestone celebration, a panel of past Cannes Golden Palm directors voted Ingmar Bergman to receive a special Palm of Palms award.

French actress Isabelle Adjani headed the 10-member jury, which included directors Tim Burton and Mike Leigh as well as actress Mira Sorvino.

Along with Depp, other directing debuts in competition include Britain's Gary Oldman for Nil by Mouth and Australia's Samantha Lang for The Well.

Wim Wenders of Germany also is in competition with The End of Violence, while Bosnia's mark was not lost on the festival with Welcome to Sarajevo by Michael Winterbottom.

France has four films, while Britain and Italy both have three in the official selection of 28 films.

Opening the festival will be The Fifth Element by France's Luc Besson, director of the shoot 'em up picture Leon, known in the United States as The Professional. Closing out of competition is Clint Eastwood's Absolute Power, already released in the United States.

Organizers plan special celebrations marking the festival's 50th anniversary, including a birthday cake to be blown out by veteran directors and the presentation of the Palm of Palms.

The festival's delegate general, Gilles Jacob, said he doubted Bergman was coming to receive the award. "I hope he still comes, but we'll give it to someone he designates," he said.

Jacob promised major star power at the festival, including Robert De Niro, Angelica Huston, John Malkovich, Catherine Deneuve, Michael Jackson, John Travolta, Jeanne Moreau and others.

Directors expected to attend include Martin Scorsese, Claude Lelouch, Robert Altman, Michelangelo Antonioni, Constantin Costa-Gavras, Steven Soderbergh, David Lynch, Joel and Ethan Coen, and Quentin Tarantino.

The four other American films selected were Call it Love by Nick Cassavetes, L.A. Confidential by Curtis Hanson, Black Out by Abel Ferrara, and Ghosts by Stan Winston.

thing horrible happens.

Anaconda isn't a terrible movie. It simply falls into this ever–growing field of films that we can simply label as "not good." If only it tried to do something more interesting than rehash pap that once made money, then we might have something worth giving serious attention to. The tragic thing about Anaconda is that it will no doubt make its share of money and next year we'll be encroached upon by even more terrifying sequels like Doberman and Siamese. C–

They don't look too much like smack daddies, huh? The Chemical Brothers release their new album Dig Your Own hole.

Techno duo's latest is fine clip–art work

By Rob Stevens
Collegian Staff

CHEMICAL BROTHERS
Dig Your Own Hole
Virgin Records

"Back with another one of those block rockin' beats," the Chemical Brothers remind the avid music listener of just how far music has come since the Beatles and the infinitive ways in which music will advance to. On their new album, Dig Your Own Hole, the popular techno duo truly live up to their name, as their experiments in the techno–rock genre display endless amounts of sampling wizardry and lively electronic creations of sound. Uniquely, they blend samples of guitar riffs, bass lines and hip–hop beats with mixes of techno beats and other synthetic instruments and noises to create a cohesive sound of liveliness.

The two prime players in the Chemical Brothers, Tom Rowlands and Ed Simons, are listed only as "the players" inside the CD, and one can only imagine how many electronic musical devices or instruments this group has access to. At times, when first exposed to their music, one may be taken aback by the many machine–like noises. Wake up! Contemporary music has now moved way beyond the dawn of machine music.

In some way or another, everything on this disc is engineered. The Chemical Brothers manufacture party music — hands in the air, conquer the world, stomp your feet in the back seat of your jeep music. Similar to the way that the famous producing duo, the Dust Brothers, produce hip–hop artists Beck and the Beastie Boys, the duo's booming bass, entrancing resonations of sound and adrenalized changes in drum beats and tempo make this CD a perfectly produced and packaged record of rock explosions.

Although almost everything they record is in no way live, the feeling of liveliness triumphs on each track. On "Block Rockin' Beats," the first song, a fast and energetic mix of a bass beat of thumping funk and pounding techno introduces the disc and sets the tempo and anticipation for the second song as "Leave Home" does, the first song on their debut album, Exit Planet Dust.

The second track, "Dig Your Own Hole" exposes further the attitude of the album: It's a mission. Listening conjures up moments of intensity. This is the type of music that will make you feel like you are driving behind a Fortune One race car,–like Commando– running through the jungle. The Brothers make you want to jump in your shoes and run a marathon, they hit you with beat after beat, rhythm after rhythm.

"Setting Sun" stretches its sampled beats over music like the sun sets across a desert plane. Very much like the Beatles, incorporated electric devices over the music in "Tomorrow Never Knows," in "Setting Sun," Oasis' Noel Gallagher replicates the eeriness and mystique of the hypnotic and soulful John Lennon.

The Chemical Brothers borrow from the old school (they sample from Schooly D), but their songs are completely original. They use commercialistic styles to entice the listener, but at the same time never stray too far from the boundaries of techno. Instead of singing a story, like a drill sergeant, they command you to dance such as the songs "Don't Stop the Rock" and "Get On Up li like This." They rock the house with their transitions in tempo and beat, not by changes in verse or lyrics.

The Chemical Brothers are an injection, they can super– charge your atmosphere. Their creations of sound voice expression, impression

With Carr leaving Celts, Brown is possible successor

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON — In a way, M.L. Carr has done a fine job as coach of the Boston Celtics. He kept a lid on bickering while guiding his team into position for the best chance at the top draft pick. Now his work appears done.

Carr, known for waving a towel to fire up the crowd when he played for the Celtics, reportedly will throw it in on his dual jobs as coach and basketball boss and, possibly, take an ownership role.

That's because the teams he led were much worse than the ones he played for in six seasons with the Celtics. Their 48 wins in Carr's two years as coach are fewer than he had in any one season as a Boston player.

Their 15-67 record this season was the worst in their 51 years and seventh-worst in NBA history. They also gave up more points than any other team.

"It's obvious how (terrible) they were," Celtics president Red Auerbach said Monday. "We all know that, but they were competitive. I think they were only blown out about 10 times."

Yet the unshakably upbeat Carr kept his players happy, joked with referees and opponents and absorbed criticism with a smile and a snappy reply while shielding his players from such blows. No team officials would confirm a report in Monday's Boston Globe that a decision already has been made for Carr to give up his jobs as coach and director of basketball operations.

"That's premature," Carr told the newspaper.

"It's been decided by whom?" Auerbach said from his office in Washington. "There's nothing I can even comment on until we meet."

General manager Jan Volk said no decision has been made. However, Auerbach has said one man can't handle both jobs. It's been expected for some time that Carr, who had no coaching experience when he took over the team, would give up at least one of his positions. The Globe reported that Carr might become involved in ownership of the team.

The newspaper also said that a front-office successor already has been determined and that it would not be surprising if Larry Bird got the job that Carr has held for three seasons.

Bird said if that's true, it's news to him.

"Paul Gaston has always told me that if I wanted a more active role, then we could sit down and talk about it," he told the Globe. "But we haven't."

Bird said he doesn't want to take Carr's job. As a Celtics special assistant, he is continuing to talk with prospective coaches about the position.

Three weeks ago, Bird talked with Rick Pitino to see if he'd be interested in coaching, but Pitino said he wants to remain as coach of Kentucky.

threw to a covering Barnsby to save the no-hitter. For his pari, Barnsby induced 13 ground ball outs on the afternoon.

"Thistle got that ball that was destined for the hole, and he made a great play," Samela said. "And Clark ends up making a great catch. Everybody played well defensively."

The biggest threat to Barnsby's no-no came in the seventh. After striking out the lead-off hitter, he walked Pena and then hit Northeastern catcher Patrick Mason to put runners on first and second with only one out. But Samela caught Pena sleeping off the bag, and threw down to second to pick him off. Husky Scott Bouchie then hit a ball straight up the middle, but Brad Gorrie scooped it up and tossed to second to end the Husky threat.

According to many of the UMass players, they didn't know the no-hitter was going on until the very end.

"I didn't know until the seventh or eighth inning, when the umpire told me that there was a lot of zeros up on the scoreboard," Samela said.

"Scott is a self-motivated player, and he doesn't let things like this get to him," Clark said. "I'm sure those hitters will remember his name."

stuff. We are taught to stay focused and play the next point.

"They were a pretty good team, but they did not have the right attitude on the court," he said.

The next matchup was against first seeded Virginia Tech. The Minutemen knew what they were up against from the start. Tech, last year's defending A–10 Champs, is easily the best team in the conference.

The end result was predictable, with the Hokies steamrolling to a 6–1 match victory.

No UMass singles player won a set, but they did take the doubles point.

Assistant coach Doug Knuth stressed just how big of an accomplishment this was.

"To take any match over Virginia Tech was unbelievable. They are still at a higher level than we are at, but some of our guys proved to be very competitive," Knuth said.

Indeed, both Cheney and Bo Navarro played very well in their first sets, before falling prey to inexperience against such a high caliber player. In the end, Tech rolled on to win the tournament.

UMass had one more chance to make its mark on the A– 10, against third seeded George Washington.

Their performance was admirable, but they let chances slip away and fell by a count of 4–2 in matches.

Cheney won his first match of the tournament at No. 1 singles beating Kent Wright, and Parsa Samii held on in the No. 6 slot, defeating Rob Frankel. However, Slyman, Manchester and Navarro all lost tough three set matches.

Alex Aller, who lost in straight sets came away with a positive feeling.

"The win over St. Bonaventure was terrific. We knew Virginia Tech was a step ahead of us. But it would have been really satisfying to knock off GW," Aller said.

"If a couple of those close matches had gone our way, we would have pulled it off. Overall, it was a great experience for us."

Coach Knuth sees tomorrow's match against Hartford as adequate preparation for the upcoming New England Tournament.

"We have beaten several of our rivals this year such as Tufts and UConn. The guys all want to take down Hartford as well, which will really prepare them for this weekend. The University of Hartford team is not always the most talented, but they always come to play hard."

upcoming season], will be big games as well."

• It's official, with the work starting on the turfing of Garber Field this summer, UMass will be making the switch to Totman Field. Their premiere will not be next season, though, but this spring. After the completion of the women's lacrosse team's schedule against Boston University on April 29th, the field will be set up for soccer season in the fall.

The Minutewomen will do a dry run for next season on Saturday, May 3rd, facing the Connecticut Lady Wolves of the W–USISL at 2 p.m. The team is stocked with former Hartford and UConn players, and will impose a tough test for the team. A tougher test will be to replace the history of Garber for women's soccer, where they held a 118–14–8 alltime record.

"The Lady Wolves are one of the better teams around, either college or club," Rudy said. "And we want to start the move to Totman already. Garber was tremendous for us, with its history, environment and our winning record there. We want to develop that same environment at Totman.

"We want to take a look at it before next fall, break everything in, and introduce it to all the people who come to watch our games."

The next scrimmage for UMass is against Yale, and will be somewhere amidst all of the Mardi Gras festivities this Saturday on campus. But, more specifically, the game against one of the Northeast region's top teams will be at 3 p.m. at Lower Boyden Field. The Minutewomen already hold a 5–1 win over Syracuse from a scrimmage two weeks ago at Longmeadow High School.

great things, I forgot something. While this well–crafted team is a proto–typical NHL playoff monster, the Stars still have Andy Moog in net — a great regular–season goalie who has done squat for his career in the playoffs, pulling a trio of disappearing acts while in Boston (Edmonton, 1990; Pittsburgh, 1991, 1992).

His renounced "one bad goal a game" syndrome turned to a horror show a few nights ago, when the Stars set an ugly NHL watershed mark. Up 3–0 at Edmonton with 4:00 to play, Dallas lost 4–3 in overtime, and became the first team in the 104–year history of the Stanley Cup to blow a three goal lead with less than five minutes to play.

• Some people forsaw Pittsburgh pulling together, pulling a "win one for Mario" thing and knocking off perfectly balanced Philadelphia. Fat chance. The Flyers stormed out to a 3–0 series lead and tonight's game at the Igloo could be the last of Lemieux's storied career.

Garth Snow, while no Martin Brodeur or Patrick Roy, has proven to be more than adequate in the Flyer net. The former Maine standout made 35 saves in Monday's 5–3 win in Pittsburgh and has supplanted Broad Street legend Ron Hextall from the starting role.

Like Snow and the Devil's Mike Dunham teamed up at Maine to lead the Black Bears to a 42–1–2 record in 1993, Snow and Hextall form the best one–two punch in the NHL, literally. The two are one and two in the NHL for penalty minutes by goalies.

While Philly has clearly supplanted Pittsburgh for Keystone State dominance, the question for the next month and a half though, is whether the Flyers' one–two punch can top several teams' number one. Only one of them can be on the ice at one time (minus a massive bench clearing brawl) after all.

freshmen, especially with Rebecca who's a walk–on, she's showing everyone so much that your just like "wow," and you almost drop your jaw."

Similar, yet different

The two freshmen prospects travelled two separate roads to UMass, that on the other hand, seem to be so similar. Yeah, Young probably got to Amherst by taking the New York Turnpike south from Saratoga; while Minaker probably took the secret backroad at Exit 8 on the Pike from Newton (that says go through Palmer), but that might be getting a little too literal. But, literally speaking, the two came to UMass with similar, yet different, personal conceptions of what they would become as lacrosse players.

Minaker was a two–sport athlete, soccer and basketball, before her introduction to lacrosse her freshman year at Newton North, the alma mater of fellow Minutewoman Stephanie Walsh. A letterwinner in all three sports, she somehow slipped through the cracks, and was not offered a scholarship. Actually, McClellan did not meet Minaker until fall workouts, but her talent spoke for itself. The walk–on will walk on the field today in Burlington as UMass' third leading scorer (10 goals, 3 assists).

"I wasn't recruited, but I wanted to play, because I played all the way through high school," Minaker said. "UMass is relatively new compared to other programs, and I thought that would be a good thing to help build it back up.

"I thought I would have more of a chance to play, and my high school program was a lot like that, too. From my sophomore to senior year, the program changed so much, so I kind of know about that experience."

Luck has been as fickle as this spring's weather for McClellan since the reinstatement of the program, but luck personified walked out on the field for her last fall.

"The first time I saw Rebecca was last fall at tryouts, and on a daily basis she's had steady, up–hill improvement," McClellan said. "You teach her something, and she learns it, period. She really absorbs information, absorbs it all, processes it and puts it out there. As a walk–on, we certainly could not have asked for a bigger surprise."

On the other hand, Young was also a two–sport athlete, soccer and basketball, before her introduction to lacrosse in her freshman year at Saratoga Catholic. Like Minaker, she was a letterwinner in those same three sports, but she did not slip through the cracks. After a national tournament in her junior year, Young was recruited by many schools, including today's opponent, Vermont, in addition to Boston University and George Mason. McClellan kept in contact with her, and next thing you know, the Pioneer Valley replaced the Hudson River Valley as her new home.

"I watched a couple of my sister's lacrosse games, and her coach said it was all about speed," Young said. "A lot of my coaches had said that speed was what I was blessed with, and it just looked like fun. I didn't play a sport in the spring, and I was looking for something to do, and it just happened to be the strong sport for me."

The new love of lacrosse attracted both players to the game, and their love of the game has helped McClellan develop a young, and steadying, base of talent.

"As soon as we got Lynne on the field, like Rebecca, she just kept stepping up and stepping up," McClellan said "We had her stability and consistency, but now, its getting consistently stronger and stronger."

One hand shakes the other

The addition of Minaker and Young to the offense and defense, has helped the team on a overall basis. The fact of the matter, though, is the relationship between talent and winning has not been consistently combined. It's like the lottery — you think you have the right numbers, but you can't seem to win the big prize.

One of the reasons is the series of hot goaltenders the Minutewomen have faced this season. From Rutgers' Paula Chamoun to Hofstra's Stephanie Clarke, the last few weeks have held better fortunes for the visitors to Totman Field. But, last weekend against New Hampshire, the offense paid dividends off of goalie Shelby "Money" Hodgkins, with 10 different scorers tallying for UMass in their 15–8 win, including two goals by Minaker. Added to her four–goal performance against Hofstra, the freshman attacker has begun to feel the flow, but not without the hard work.

"Yeah, [a 4–goal game] helps out a little bit," Minaker kidded. "Yeah, we've run into some good goalies, but we still need to execute. I think we have everything, but one thing that we're lacking is finishing."

McClellan wanted Minaker on the field just for her other skills, like passing and defense, but now the offense has begun to develop in her young lacrosse student.

"We're pleased with her whole game," McClellan said. "She did everything else, except finish, and we worked really hard with that. Now, she's put that into her game. Really, she was on the field for everything else, and now she can do it all."

The departure of most of the defense this year in seniors Erica Bryan and Kristen Hocker will leave a big hole for the Minutewomen to fill. Those experienced vets have helped, with Young not just stepping into a starting spot, but as a leader and a talker on the backline. She's trying to keep everything in front of her, but now, it's a matter of keeping things in line behind her.

"I think I have a good game sense, and I'm always opening my mouth in the backfield," Young said. "Just recently, I've been stepping up more, staying on my player, and I've been a little strong in that sense.

"I still need to stay on the ball, though, because I keep my eye on my player. So, occasionally I'll lose the ball, and it'll go right behind me, which kind of sucks, but..."

The graduation of a senior defense means responsibility will lie on the shoulders of defenders like Young next season, and distinctly concerning her freshman defender, McClellan sees no problem with that. The way the two freshmen have started, combined with next season's recruiting class, the coach can not foresee too many other problems in the near future, either. Her fingers are crossed, but that is another cliche, altogether.

"Lynne's a natural leader," McClellan said. "Among the freshman class, she steps up among her peers as a personality, and the kids are really looking to her. Her and Rebecca have those same characteristics."

Barnsby no-hits Huskies; 1-0

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

BOSTON— Given the way Northeastern starter John Burns was throwing in yesterday's Beanpot opener, the Massachusetts baseball team knew it was going to need a special performance from junior righthander Scott Barnsby if they were going to reach the finals.

What they got was pure magic.

Nine days after losing his spot in the weekend rotation, Barnsby pitched the game of his life, tossing the first no- hitter in Fenway Park in 32 years and the first UMass no- hitter in 40 years, to lead the Minutemen past Northeastern 1-0 in the Beanpot semi-finals yesterday at Fenway Park.

COLLEGIAN FILE

Yesterday Scott Barnsby pitched a no-hitter to shutout Northeastern 1-0 in Fenway Park in the first round of the Baseball Beanpot.

Barnsby followed up on his shutout performance in the 1996 Beanpot championship by allowing only four baserunners, none past second base, to improve to 3-0 on the year. Despite managing only seven hits off Burns, who pitched a gem himself, the Minutemen (21-6, 9-3 A-10) won their 11th straight ballgame and will now face Harvard in the finals on Thursday. Harvard beat Boston College in the opener 9-2.

"It's real nice to see [Barnsby] pitch like that, since he's struggled in his last few outings," UMass head coach Mike Stone said. "He was relaxed and in the groove."

After letting up six runs in only 1.2 innings in his last start, Barnsby was moved out of the weekend rotation for Jeff Puleri. According to Stone, Barnsby got the start in part because of his great effort in last year's Beanpot championship. Barnsby threw a complete game four hitter, striking out 11 to lead UMass past NU by an identical 1-0 score.

"The key for me was to stay within myself," Barnsby said. "I came [to Fenway] with nothing to lose, because I didn't think I could get any worse than I was after last week. I had the adrenaline pumping for the last couple innings."

Barnsby had to rely on the help of a stellar defense to complete the no-no, culminating in a running catch by UMass centerfielder Doug Clark to end the ballgame. Barnsby tried to waste a slider in the dirt, but Huskies clean- up hitter Carlos Pena lunged for the ball and spanked it towards the Green Monster. Clark got a great jump on the ball and snagged it just before the warning track, shoring up the no-hitter and sending an ecstatic Barnsby straight out to greet his centerfielder.

"I was hoping that either it would be a strikeout or hit to me, because I didn't want it to fall, [After the catch], I saw him running out there and I knew he was going to tackle me," Clark said.

UMass got all the runs it would need in the fifth. David Giglio singled to right, stole second and scored on a single by third baseman Adam Correa. For the day, the Minutemen would get seven hits off hard luck loser Burns, who went the distance, striking out five. Correa went 2-for-3 to lead the offense.

"We wanted to score more runs, especially after scoring 17 yesterday [in the win against Fordham]," Clark said. "Some days it's just not happening at the plate."

The offense struggled to mount much of anything against Burns, but time and time again Barnsby was saved by his defense. In the sixth, Ryan Thistle made perhaps the play of the game when he made a diving stop of a Kevin Kim shot destined for rightfield, and

UMass' 14-game streak ends abruptly in Philly

By Corey Peter Goodman
Collegian Staff

Winning only one of four games last weekend in Philadelphia against A-10 foes St. Joseph's and Temple, the Massachusetts softball team saw their 14-game unbeaten streak end rather abruptly. But head coach Elaine Sortino and the Minutewomen had little time to mope before heading south to Storrs yesterday to wage war against a powerful UConn team.

UMass (21-19-1) split the twinbill with the Huskies (24- 16), dropping the first game in dramatic fashion 2-1, and blowing out UConn in game two, 11-3.

A brilliant performance by pitcher Danielle Henderson went for not in Game No. 1 for the Minutewomen. Henderson went six innings, surrendering just five hits, no walks and no earned runs in a losing effort.

Unfortunately. Huskies hurler Bridgett McCaffery matched Henderson's effort going the full seven innings, allowing just four hits, one walk and no earned runs.

Trailing 2-0 In the seventh, UMass' comeback attempt began when Nicole Faessler doubled in Buckley. But Chris Martens grounded out with two on, ending the game.

UMass rebounded perfectly in Game No. 2, lighting up three UConn pitchers for a season-high 19 hits.

Massachusetts	11
Connecticut	3

Senior Sam Cardenas had quite a second game. She scored five runs in the contest, a new UMass record. She knocked in three RBI's, now placing her one short in her career of a new UMass record. And now Cardenas holds team bests in 11 different categories, you guessed it, a new UMass record. Not that anyone is counting, but Cardenas also had four hits in the game, including a 3-run blast in the fifth.

Junior Kelly Buckley was another shining star in Game No. 2 for UMass. Buckley went 4-4, with five RBI's, two of which coming on a seventh-inning homer.

Liz Wagner went the distance for UMass, giving up just eight hits, two walks and two earned runs. Wagner pushed her season record up to 10-7.

UMass returns to action Thursday when they host Hofstra at Totman Field at 3 p.m.

Great goalie key in NHL

OK, no more fun and games. No more comparing the Buffalo Sabres and Florida Panthers to the Spice Girls in relation to New Jersey being Abba. No more KC and the Sunshine band references to describe the Detroit-St. Louis series. I'm even willing to concede that we just might be better off because Def Leppard did not perform at the Dallas-Edmonton opener.

Even for this wise-ass, there is a time to be serious, and that comes this time of year when the hockey world is churning, burning and heading for the Cup. So, who's going the distance?

• Buffalo got dealt possibly a fatal blow Monday night when Dominik Hasek sprained his right knee and, by his own estimation, could be out for the series. Several people picked Ottawa for their first-round upset special despite the presence of the deserved NHL MVP. When Dixon Ward scored to win the game with 20 seconds to play Monday night, Hasek's presence was made... behind the bench in street clothes.

Michigan product Steve Shields filled in admirably for Hasek, stopping 14 of 15 shots in a come-from-behind 3-2 Sabre win, but some doubt if the 1994 Hobey Baker finalist can take the overachieving team past the fired up Senators.

In his defense, he backboned the Rochester Americans to last year's Calder Cup Championship, as the Amerks came back from a 3-2 deficit against Portland to win games six and seven for the title. Shields, who led the maize and blue to final four appearances in 1992 and 1993, has proven himself under playoff intensity.

The knock on the netminder though is that the Sabres are 3-11-2 this year with "the dominator" out of the lineup. Buffalo is a collection of no-names and has-beens (Garry Galley is their top defenseman) that relied on the capable Hasek like few teams in NHL history counted on their goalie.

With Hasek's completely unorthodox style (hello, John Blue), he needs to be in perfect health with every nanosecond of reaction time being the difference between making the great saves section and the Blue's Bloopers section of next year's Don Cherry highlight film.

Since cracking a rib while making an over-zealous poke check in Montréal on March 8, Hasek has been slowed and consequently beaten more frequently. Rushing back with a knee injury might be valiant, but wouldn't stop Ottawa from advancing.

• The better team does not always win a Stanley Cup Playoff game. The smarter team wins. Case in point Saturday's New Jersey-Montréal game two. The Habs' Dave Manson pulled a playoff hockey taboo by being whistled off for four separate minors. The Devils scored three goals on those chances, cruising to a win and soon a second round date with the Senators.

• When I predicted Dallas to do

Around pitch with UM women's soccer

JORMA KANSANEN

With warmer weather slowly, and painfully, emerging, thoughts drift past the winter that can't get its bloody grip off of us, and towards warmer realms of consciousness.

Like, soccer, for example.

The offseason has been a busy one for coach Jim Rudy and the Massachusetts women's soccer team, with a stellar class of six athletes graduating from UMass, and a class of five top prospects moving in to fill their inimitable cleats. One of those six seniors, who helped the team to four consecutive NCAA Tournament appearances and a Sweet Sixteen berth this past season, has found herself a job already — her home country's national team.

Midfielder Tina Lightning was selected to the English National Team this past week, and will compete in the Nike Victory Tour against Team USA in the first weeks of May. Training will start in San Jose, Ca from May 5-10, with games against the reigning gold medal winners, and former UMass keeper Briana Scurry, following on the 9th and 11th. The first match will be at Spartan Stadium in San Jose, with the second match at the University of Portland.

"This is very meaningful, and it's not only great for Tina, but for UMass," Rudy said. "This is what we try to do here at UMass — get these kids a great education, both academically and soccer-wise, and instill the will to move forward in life."

• Another one of Rudy's graduating seniors has found herself a good job, too. All-time leading scorer Rebecca Myers has landed an assistant coaching position at the University of Dayton. Myers has bounced back from a season-ending knee injury suffered against Atlantic 10 opponent La Salle, and will help another A-10 opponent make the jump from regional to national respectability.

That jump already started in the stunning upset of UMass in the A-10 Conference Final last November, and to Rudy, will continue with the help of one of the best players he's coached. Myers will join former Minutewomen like Heidi Kocher (assistant at Colorado), Paula Wilkins (assistant at Penn State) and Hermann Trophy winner April Kater (head coach at Syracuse) as coaches at the Division I level.

"We are very pleased with this situation as well," Rudy said. "Rebecca can only help make Dayton better, and they are already good at this point, as we found out last November. She'll be a great role model for those Dayton kids, and will give them someone to look up to."

• Initial schedules for the 1997 and 1998 regular seasons have been released, and the return of the UMass-Reebok Classic is one of the highlights of the home slate for the Minutewomen in 1998.

Two possible top 20 opponents, Dartmouth and William and Mary, will join Syracuse for the four-team tournament occurring at a yet undeveloped location on campus. This past season, Connecticut, Georgia and Southern Methodist University came to Richard F. Garber Field for the Reebok Classic, with UMass coming out with wins over both SMU and the Bulldogs.

The home opener in 1998 will be against Arizona State University, which will be making its first-ever appearance in the Pioneer Valley with a game that will be played on campus, or at Agawam High School. With a still less-than- extremely competitive A-10 conference schedule, the addition of possible top twenty teams to the non-conference schedule will be key for national power rankings.

Next season, former Hartford coach Austin Daniela will be making his own return to Amherst with his newly instated Colorado program. Also, on the home slate will be the maize and blue of Michigan. The Minutewomen will travel to Georgia and SMU for tournaments later in the fall.

"Well, [the boosting of our non-conference schedule in 1998 is] the intent," Rudy said. "And the replays with Colorado and Michigan [from this

Men's tennis takes fourth; goes to Hartford tomorrow

The Massachusetts' men's tennis team continued its remarkable season this past weekend at the Atlantic 10 tournament in Virginia.

UMass had its best finish in the tournament since 1980, when they finished in third place.

The Minutemen finished in fourth place in the 12 team tournament.

They played three matches altogether, winning one.

However, this was good enough for the fourth place finish, because of the way the event was structured.

UMass came into the tournament with the fourth seed, and as it turned out, lived up to that expectation.

Coming into the event with a 14-1 record, the goals were very high. However, realistically, the players and coaches knew that Virginia Tech and George Washington were extremely high rated teams, with an abundance of talent.

UMass opened up the event on Friday against the fifth seed St. Bonaventure. The match was pushed indoors because of cold weather and high winds. The Minutemen finally expected to have weather conditions on their side, but it was not to be.

St. Bonaventure posed a decent threat, because they have a similar amount of talent on their team. However, the focused UMass team was up to the challenge, and prevailed. The match score was 4-2, indicating it was a hard fought victory.

Todd Cheney, who has struggled in recent matches, fell in first singles to Jean Paul Gingras 2-6, 4-6. However, numbers two through five won their singles matches, to ensure that UMass posted the win. Pat Slyman, Rob Manchester, Alex Aller and Bo Navarro earned the victories.

Cheney, who bounced back well against George Washington, was pleased with the team performance against St. Bonnies.

"The main reason for beating St. Bonaventure was a better discipline on our part," Cheney said. "They were out there throwing their rackets after points. Our coaches do not allow that kind of

Freshmen futures brighten the season

By Jorma Kansanen

The silver lining — darkest before the dawn — light at the end of the tunnel — the cooler side of the pillow.

These are some of those dandy clichés we make up in our cranial cavity to represent hope in the midst of apparent hopelessness. Life gets better, but at that time, hope appears to be gone, and that little metaphorical pick-me-up keeps you going. Ain't it nice? — Yeah, it is.

In a season where the highs have often been overshadowed by the lows, there are some bright prospects for the future of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (3-6). This season, the graduation of four seniors will induct a freshmen class that has already begun to build on their foundation.

Today at 4 p.m. in Burlington, Vt., two of those freshmen will be counted upon to continue their good start against the Catamounts of the University of Vermont. Midfielder Rebecca Minaker and defender Lynne Young have already stepped into the UMass starting lineup, making their presence felt in a key transitional year for both themselves and the team.

Life has not been metaphorically, or mentally, kind to the Minutewomen this season. No matter what cliche you use, high expectations have often been overshadowed by missed opportunities. But Minaker and Young have both provided that silver lining — that certain little pick-me-up — for the team. The two have combined to keep up thoughts of bright prospects for the future; especially in a time where darkness has not yet let in the light of dawn.

For coach Francesca McClellan, one of her scholarship players, Young, and one of her walk-ons, Minaker, have combined with an entire class that hopefully will walk on together for the next four years.

"We've worked very hard on this freshmen class, for both the scholarship players and the walk-ons," McClellan said. "We didn't want to turn away anybody from coming here. The freshmen that have started have been doing tremendous, better than we imagined, and the freshmen coming off the bench go in and do their job. They really add a lot of depth and support to our team."

Minaker and Young have those same concerns for the future, and are already looking toward a brighter one.

"It is a good thing now, and it will be for the next few years, too," Minaker said. "If we can take advantage of the rest of our schedule, forget about what has happened, and just come out with a whole new 'us,' then we can play how we can play."

"We need to find the spark, the thing that makes us want to play lacrosse, and just let that take us through," Young said. "When we started out, everyone was kind of shy, and it was just the upperclassmen that were showing through everyone. But now with the

Dalai Lama says China is changing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Welcomed by President Clinton as an inspiration for religious freedom, the Dalai Lama expressed hope yesterday for winning Tibetan autonomy from a China beset by internal doubts and outside pressures. The Clinton administration urged direct China-Tibet talks.

"The self-confidence among Chinese leaders is no longer there," said the Dalai Lama, draped in a traditional maroon Buddhist robe and yellow sash.

The spiritual leader of Tibet contrasted today's China, with its democracy movements and dissent, to past decades when Communist leaders had "genuine conviction that their system could achieve some happy society."

"I think the Chinese leadership themselves are in some sort of state of dilemma," the Dalai Lama said in a speech to the World Parliamentarians Convention on Tibet, which was meeting for two days on Capitol Hill. "The People's Republic of China is in the process of changing."

At the same time, he added, "The spirit of Tibet is strong. We are really determined. We never give up our hope."

Rockies wreckage is confirmed as A-10's

EAGLE, Colo. (AP) — Two pieces of wreckage found on a snowy Rocky Mountain peak are from the Air Force warplane that vanished on a training mission over Arizona three weeks ago, the military confirmed yesterday. The search for the plane's missing pilot continued.

"I can tell you now that through the efforts of maintenance personnel at Davis-Monthan Air Force Base...we have made positive identification that these are pieces of the A-10 (Thunderbolt) aircraft," Air Force Maj. Gen. Niels Running told reporters last night.

But he said there was no sign of the plane's pilot, Capt. Craig Button.

"I don't know if Captain Button was with the aircraft or was not with the aircraft so I cannot talk about remains," Running said. "The search continues."

Col. Denver Pletcher said two Army National Guard helicopters made trips up to the mountain's 11,500-foot level yesterday and dropped off four members of a search team.

"They plan to spend the night out there," Pletcher continued. "Their mission is to go up and see if they can find any remains."

The weather on the mountain is better than was anticipated, Pletcher said, and the searchers should have no trouble staying there overnight. The plan was to fly them out Thursday, but if they had to they could walk to Interstate 70, he said.

Students and administration will brief civil rights committee

Advisory Committees help U.S. commission

State Advisory Committees to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights are established in each State to advise the Commission on matters pertinent to discrimination or denials of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, age, handicap, or in the administration of justice, and to aid the Commission in its statuary obligation to serve as a national clearinghouse for information on those subjects.

Commission regulations call for each Advisory Committee to:

• Advise the Commission, in writing, of any information it may have regarding any alleged deprivation of citizens' right to vote and to have the vote counted by reason of color, race, religion, sex national origin, age or handicap, or that citizens are being accorded or denied the right to vote in Federal elections as a result of patterns or practices of fraud or discrimination;

• Advise the Commission concerning legal developments constituting discrimination or a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution because of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, age, or handicap or in the administration of justice; and as to the effect of the laws and policies of the Federal Government with respect to equal protection of the laws;

• Advise the Commission upon matters of mutual concern in the preparation of reports of the Commission to the President and the Congress;

• Receive reports, suggestions, and recommendations from individuals, public and private organizations, and public officials about matters pertinent to inquiries conducted by the State Advisory Committee;

• Initiate and forward advice and recommendations to the Commission about matters that the Advisory Committee has studied; and

• Assist the Commission in the exercise of its clearinghouse function.

The first meeting of the Massachusetts State Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights will take place at 1 p.m. in the Board of Director's room at the Smith College alumni house in Northampton. This meeting is open to the public.

By Lisa Chiu

Both University of Massachusetts students and administration will step out of the current negotiations confrontations to face yet another result of the takeover earlier this semester.

Tomorrow, two students and one administrator have been invited to brief the Massachusetts State Advisory Committee for the United States Commission on Civil Rights on issues and events surrounding the Goodell takeover.

The State Advisory Committee (SAC) will be holding its annual meeting at 1 p.m. in the Board of Director's room at the Smith College alumni house in Northampton. This meeting is open to the public. Transportation will be provided to UMass students, a bus will leave the Student Union at 12 p.m. for Northampton.

According to the chair of the committee, and Smith College professor of psychology, Fletcher Blanchard, the committee serves as a "conduit between citizens and the United States Commission on Civil Rights."

The Commission is an "independent, bipartisan fact-finding agency," and not an enforcement agency. It has no power to apply specific remedies in individual cases. Complaints about denials of rights are referred to appropriate Federal agencies for action.

The SAC, which will be meeting on Friday, advises the Commission "on matters pertaining to discrimination or denials of equal protection of the laws because of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, age, handicap or the administration of justice." Another goal of the committee is "to aid the Commission in its statuary obligation to serve as a national clearinghouse for information on those subjects." (See sidebar)

Blanchard said, "What it does is simply give advice to the Commission, and provide a chance for people to speak. It has no powers or jurisdiction over law or propriety. It really is an advisory committee that is organized around helping the United States Commission get information."

According to Blanchard, one of the actions the SAC can take is to hold hearings. Blanchard noted that the meeting on Friday will not be an official hearing; it was scheduled to be the first business meeting of the committee, which has been inactive for more than a year. It is at this meeting where the agenda for the next two years will be set.

Representing the UMass administration will be Ombudsman, Robert Ackermann, and representing the students will be one undergraduate and one graduate student.

Students from area colleges meet to hear about nursing

By Victoria Groves
Collegian Staff

Nursing students from across western Massachusetts met yesterday to discuss the profession at a conference of the Massachusetts Nursing Association (MNA).

Approximately 100 nursing students from the University of Massachusetts, Holyoke Community College, Greenfield Community College, Elms College, Bay State College and Springfield Technical Community College gathered in the Campus Center.

The main goal of the conference was to let students know the benefits of belonging to the MNA and the legislation that the MNA is currently focusing on.

"We want to let people know that the MNA is here to support you... and to show students how healthcare is legislated in Massachusetts," said Pat Brigham, director of Membership for the MNA and staff advisor of the Student Nurses Association.

Doctor Leda McKenry, associate professor and director of the undergraduate program in nursing, showed the group slides of a recent trip to Ghana, in Western Africa. The nursing program at UMass gives students the opportunity to participate in different cross cultural experiences in areas such as Northern Ireland, England, Jamaica and Ghana, where they administer care to the underprivileged.

The clinic had to shut down on three occasions because people were leaping over boundaries to be seen by the nurses.

"They really desired healthcare," McKenry said.

Many of the students felt uncomfortable arriving in Ghana at first, but soon became attached to the patients that they were treating.

"The environment is so foreign, there is the initial culture shock but the community is so welcoming that they cried when they left," McKenry said.

Mary Manning, executive director for MNA also spoke to the students about the future of the nursing profession.

"You are entering the profession that really is the caring profession... more focus needs to be put on primary healthcare, communities, schools, and the workplace," Manning said.

Senior nursing major and co-president of the UMass Nursing Association, Robin Levallee was one of five students from UMass to attend the National Nursing Association (NNA) conference in Phoenix, Ariz., earlier this month.

"I think we learned leadership skills and empowerment... an understanding of the capabilities that a national organization can have, how it can provide for students and enhance the transition for students to practicing the professional role of a nurse," Levallee said.

National Conference attendees were chosen based on an essay and selected by faculty members of the School of Nursing. These students were sponsored by MNA, the School of Nursing, and the Alumni School of Nursing organization.

Catherina Saich, another UMass attendee, was also elected to the executive board of the NNA.

Forum to discuss effects of welfare reform laws

By Julliette Doro
Collegian Correspondent

A forum on welfare reform will be held in the Campus Center tonight to discuss recent welfare reform legislation and its effects on access to education.

The night will begin with an explanation of the history of welfare. Susan Kirby, of the Human Rights Monitoring Project will talk about "lawlessness" in welfare offices throughout the state.

According to Mary Sutherland, one of the forum's organizers, "Anything goes in a welfare office. Social workers are confused on what the policies are. You might be denied child care while someone else gets it, and yet your situations are similar."

Sutherland said when the Human Rights Monitoring Project did a study on welfare the group discovered that the situation of lawlessness is state-wide.

The forum will also discuss basic human needs and rights and access to education for families receiving welfare. Several student families will talk about these issues on campus and how the University can retain lower income students.

Fujimori: quick response needed

By Harold Olmos
Associated Press

LIMA, Peru — President Alberto Fujimori approved a daring daylight rescue operation because negotiations with rebels holding 72 hostages were "deteriorating very quickly," he said yesterday. The raid on the Japanese ambassador's residence Tuesday left one hostage and two soldiers dead. All 14 Tupac Amaru rebels were killed as well.

Fujimori told reporters yesterday that quick action was needed because one Tupac Amaru rebel leader Nestor Cerpa had said he would allow doctors to visit the hostages only once a week. With several hostages said to be suffering from health problems, Fujimori said he interpreted Cerpa's statement as a threat.

"We thought that the situation was deteriorating very quickly — so that at any time anything could happen," Fujimori said. Fujimori said commandoes had been in a tunnel dug underneath the compound since Sunday, awaiting the order to attack. He said Cerpa was among a half-dozen surprised guerrillas who were gunned down after they grabbed their weapons and began to run up stairs inside the residence.

"There was a shootout a little more intense than we expected," Fujimori said.

The president said he would not have risked the attack had he believed that even two or four of the hostages would have died. The goal was to get all out alive. "We almost made it," he said. The Catholic archbishop who tried in vain to mediate a peaceful end to the four-month crisis wept yesterday for the dead, including the slain rebels.

"In truth, I carry with me a great suffering and I pray to God for their souls and for their families," the Rev. Juan Luis Cipriani said, breaking into tears at a news conference.

All those who died were human beings, Peruvians and "our brothers," he said. He asked forgiveness for all "so our society can learn to walk in peace and respect human life."

Cipriani, a frequent visitor to the residence of the Japanese ambassador during the 126-day standoff, was comforted by fellow mediator Anthony Vincent, who is Canada's ambassador to Peru and was among the original hostages freed shortly after the crisis began.

Justice Carlos Giusti, the lone hostage to die in the rescue. Giusti, 54, reportedly suffered a fatal heart attack after being wounded.

Elsewhere, Cerpa's mother mourned for her son and angrily accused Fujimori of deception.

"History will be the judge of what happened," Felicita Cartolini Cerpa said from Nantes, France, where she lives in exile and cares for her son's two small children.

She said her son's "courage and generosity will become an example to his country."

"I can assure you that, knowing my son, he preferred to face death before killing a prisoner, keeping his word," she said.

The bodies of the guerrillas were carried out of the residence in black body bags yesterday afternoon. Fujimori said the remains would be turned over to their families.

Fujimori visited wounded hostages, including Foreign Minister Francisco Tudela, at a military hospital in the morning. Tudela, shot in an ankle, and another Supreme Court justice suffered, along with Giusti, the most serious wounds. Another 25 received minor injuries, mostly shrapnel wounds, cuts and scrapes.

Later yesterday, Fujimori again toured the burned-out residence, inspecting the building and apparently retracing the movements of soldiers and hostages during the rescue.

Bomb experts gingerly searched the battered residence for remaining explosives. Fire Chief Rafael Calvo said there was a danger of leftover booby traps set by the rebels.

The white brick mansion suffered considerable damage from a fire caused by explosions during the raid, Calvo said.

■ Goodell

Both parties have been invited by the committee to inform the group about the recent situation involving Goodell, the current negotiation process, as well as events in 1992 which led up to the 1992 ALANA (Asian, Latino, African and Native American) Agreements.

"The results will be really interesting. I know which way I'd like it to go, but it'll be interesting because there is a big area of grey when we're talking about Civil Rights issues. You never know which way it will go. It will be exciting and I encourage everyone to go," said junior student negotiator, Angela Oyola.

According to Ki-taek Chun, director of the Eastern Regional Office in the United States Commission on Civil Rights, who will be flying up from Washington D.C. to attend this meeting, the SAC has called the two groups from UMass for a briefing session, not an interview.

"An official has to be present at the advisory meeting, and the situation at Amherst is of interest to me. I'd like to know what is happening... we hear that the students are unhappy and concerned, and we would like to find out why, and see [what steps] the administration has taken at UMass in the past, with such problems," Chun said.

According to Chun, the committee will decide, when briefed by both sides, whether or not to take their observations under advisement.

"They may say there are other pressing issues and than this [Goodell] should have priority, and give priority to the UMass Amherst situation... it may just be a student and administration dispute, rather than a Civil Rights violation... As to what the committee decides, it's in the air," Chun said.

Chun, who holds a doctorate in psychology from the University of California at Berkeley, stressed the importance of being well grounded and informed as to what Civil Rights issues might be alleged. According to Chun, the law prohibits discrimination based on race, color, national origin, religion, and disabilities.

Students involved in the Goodell takeover and the current negotiations said they see this as a positive sign despite the fact that this meeting is only a briefing and not an investigation.

"I think it's about time that there is federal intervention, its obvious that the administration of UMass lacks the capacity to take responsibility for meeting the needs of all students at this university. Its a travesty that our school is drawing the attention of the government," said senior student negotiator, Viraphanh Douangmany.

"As far as I'm concerned, I think we made our point, they are coming here because we made an impact on the campus. Hopefully they'll come to a conclusion and students will continue to build pressure and that's the key to our survival," said graduate student Mahmood Ketabchi.

Several other issues will be discussed at this meeting, including introducing several newly appointed members to the committee. Other groups and individuals invited to speak will be the president of the Springfield NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) on allegations of police and voting discrimination, and, possibly, the chair of the Springfield Human Relations Committee.

According to Blanchard, the committee's prior inaction was due to situations which occurred during the Bush administration, when certain political appointments made it difficult for the commission to do its work. He said it was because of changes in staffing, that the advisory committee was not called to order for so long.

tinuous are transportation and vouchers for child care," Sutherland said. She said the focus will be on the recent welfare reform's effect on access to education and the high number of students that colleges will lose because of the reform.

Community colleges have been especially effected by the new reforms.

Rep. Ellen Story will also be present to talk about current legislation. Common Ground, the group organizing the event, has three bills in the State House of Representatives.

Story will discuss how that legislation is doing.

Common Ground is a group located on college campuses state-wide organized around issues of access to education and poverty.

"Common Ground means that no matter whether we are middle class, on welfare, or working poor we have something in common," Sutherland said.

The event is co-sponsored by the departments of social thought and political economy and women's studies, the Graduate Employee Organization, the Everywoman's Center and Student Legal Services.

The event will be held in Room 804 Campus Center at 7 p.m. Child care will be provided.

Renowned Irish history prof. visits UMass

By Joseph Fountain
Collegian Staff

World renown Irish historian and possible presidential candidate in the Republic of Ireland, Margaret MacCurtain, Emeritus Statutory Lecturer and Senior Fellow at University College–Dublin Women's Studies Department spoke in front of a packed audience in Herter Hall on Tuesday.

The lecture, entitled, "The Minority Seeks a Voice: Woman Historians Woman's History and the Canon of Irish History in the 1990's," was made possible by professor Bruce Laurie, chair of the University of Massachusetts history department, and Catherine Shannon of the Westfield State history department.

Shannon introduced MacCurtain by telling the audience of their long friendship. They meet in Ireland while in graduate school and always kept in touch. MacCurtain, a pioneer in the study of women's history, also started an all-female school in one of Dublin's poorest areas. She wrote a book on the Stuarts and Tudors that would become the foundation for secondary school classes in history in Ireland. Shannon said that MacCurtain, in her work, "lifted the vail from Irish history about women and their roles."

MacCurtain began by telling the audience that this was not a lecture but a talk. She spoke of the work that Shannon has done in Irish history. MacCurtain said "[Shannon] was one of the changing generation. The student revolution in the '60s and '70s that were very important."

According to MacCurtain, during this time much debate was going on about history of the 1916 Revolution in Ireland and they were beginning the debate on revisionism and Nationalist bias.

"People were once very anti-women's history even though revisionism had already started," MacCurtain said.

In history, revisionism has gone hand and hand with the writing of women's history. Very little is written on the women who worked on the Revolt of 1916.

MacCurtain told the story of Mary Galway, a woman that led a strike in textile factory where she was then fired from her job. Galway went on to learn how to print and actually printed the proclamation starting the revolt of 1916. The young woman even delivered the proclamation to James Conolly at the Dublin Post Office, yet almost nothing is written of Galway.

According to MacCurtain, women's history is not enough, feminist history is needed and different forms of oppression need to be written about. Women's history needs to show oppression of minorities.

MacCurtain finished her talk by saying, "it is important that women continue to write feminist history."

"It was a great moment and we look forward to the these sorts of things in the future," Laurie said of MacCurtain's discussion. "Given student demand to a good number of our students for Irish history, we would welcome the opportunity to hire a full-time professor of Irish History."

Professor Kewin Boyle, of the UMass history department, who was recently named Mary Ball Washington (Fullbright) Scholar at University College–Dublin had a glowing review of MacCurtain's talk.

"It is very exciting to hear a scholar as distinguished as Professor MacCurtain. She provided a wonderful introduction to the vitality of Irish Women's History and to Irish Scholarship," Boyle said.

Time's most influential?

C. Taylor Connor

Who are our most 25 influential Americans?

Time takes on this admirable, if not arduous task each year, attempting to determine in one week's issue what many of us would hard-pressed to figure out even if given a month's time. The magazine deepens its challenge by its definition of "influential," opting to eschew the power we normally associate with influence (the Clinton, Eisner, Gates, etc. type) for the might of mass societal imprint (the Tiger Woods, Dilbert, Trent Reznor, etc. type).

Wait a minute. Trent Reznor?

I ask — nay, demand — that someone out there give me a break. This second-rate Alice Cooper, this post-Robert Smith purveyor of dorky clothing noir is one of the big guns of American culture?

At best this guy ensures another generation of self-pitying, sulking geeks the chance to have a self-pitying, sulking hero, as well as providing them with basic fashion sensibility — black on black on black isn't exactly matching of Dolce and Gabbana's caliber.

But at worst, Reznor, who is also the culprit responsible for the crime that is Marilyn Manson, ensures that the new generation of thuggish high school bullies will have someone to beat the tar out of. Though you'd hardly notice the tar since the victims would probably be wearing all black anyway.

However Reznor is not the only questionable character in the Time article. Consider the presence of Robert Earl, Planet Hollywood's CEO, amongst folks like Colin Powell and Henry Louis Gates, Jr. What has Earl done other than riff on the original tune to pop restaurant success, the Hard Rock Cafe?

For that matter, the only thing that distinguishes him from any other head honchos of mid-line theme chains is his investors, 20 percent of whom are celebrities. But when stockholders including Bruce Willis, Demi Moore and Sylvester Stallone (whose egos in America avoid serious hemorrhaging only when their recent overseas box office tallies are considered) are your promotion people, this crass, slick corporate entity probably couldn't go belly up even if Clinton, Foster and McDougal were running the show.

Perhaps the worst inclusion on the list is Steve Coz, the editor of the National Enquirer. Refrain from adjusting your glasses — you did just read the information above correctly. Time asserts that the rag's coverage of current events — from the O.J. civil case to the Cosby son murder — has stepped up in quality and accuracy, thus giving the major media outlets a run for their money.

What Time conveniently forgets to add is that for every remotely relevant piece of information the Enquirer prints, we are forced to endure at least 10 stories about Elvis' affairs with lesbian aliens; the mating habits of the Reptile people of the Southwest; the incestuous secrets of Siamese twins; or whoever (or whatever) Michael Jackson is messing with this week.

And for the record, it was the Star, Enquirer's big rival, that may have cracked the year's most shattering story — the scandal involving former Clinton adviser Dick Morris (who, ironically enough, was one of the previous year's selections for the influence list). This blow-up undoubtedly further impacted the population's notions of the Presiden's character, which was already nose-deep in Whitewater and steeped in the mire of alleged T&A lust.

Unlike the depth of Clinton's role in Whitewater, what cannot be denied is that influence is not necessarily a positive or proactive thing; the three list-makers above may offer some proof of that assessment. But I do believe that in order for someone to truly make a mark on our society, the general populous must know exactly who the hell they are.

We all can, for better or worse, point out Rosie O'Donnell in a crowd. But I'm almost certain you would find it extremely difficult to even trip over Robert Thurman and recognize him. Would saying you met Paul Romer draw interest from anyone other than an economics buff?

How about Marcia Angell? Michael Price? Kim Polese? In spite of their accomplishments, if you rambled on about these "influential" folks in most arenas, your peers might think you a bit Cliff Claven-esque for possessing such random knowledge.

But as I said at the start of this column, it is an admirable, if not arduous task Time has undertaken. Maybe they just need to re-evaluate their concept of what "influence" is.

No news is good news for me...

Bob Dunn

Do you have one of those friends?

You know which ones I mean. The ones who everything seems to work out for all the time? The guy who's stoned all the time and still makes Dean's list. The one who finds out about this great party at the last minute, can't get a hold of you, goes without you, has a great time, doesn't get busted by the cops and hooks up. The one who gets phone calls from their parents full of nothing but praise, good news and/or the promise of a check.

If you haven't guessed, I am not one of these fortunate few. I'm the guy with the busted "looky."

Not only are these people unendingly annoying, but they're screwing it up for the rest of us. Let me explain.

There's only so much good fortune to go around. The planet is operating on a "Karma Curve" where the average would be represented by people who have as many good days as bad days and so on. With any curve, however, there's always someone who blows it for the rest of us. You remember the kid in class who would always score too high on the test, blowing the curve for everyone else? Well, they're out there in spades, collecting an altogether too large piece of the good-fortune pie, leaving the rest of us to scramble for the little congealed chunks left clinging to the side of the tin.

Don't get me wrong, I wish the best for the friends of mine who were fortunate enough to be born under the proverbial good sign, but there comes a time when they have to step out from underneath it. Not a lot, just once in a while. Every now and then you have to lean into the strike zone and take one for the team. Have a crappy week, so the rest of us can reap the benefits of a level playing field.

For instance, I have this one friend whose entire year is going so well, the only way she could be doing better is if she had the Midas touch and lived next door to a gold merchant.

Every time we talk, it's "I've got this terrific job for next year, my internship is going great, I'm going overseas, blah blah, blah." This, in itself, isn't a problem, I'm happy for her. The problem is people whose month has been spending all of its time on the South side of crappy, certainly don't want to hear an unceasing stream of happy tales and positive energy. I mean, would it kill these people to have the bumper of their car fall off on the highway during an ice- storm? Would it be too much to ask to have them get a parking ticket and a lousy grade in the same week? Just once in a while?

But that never happens. The blessed few who park illegally all day and don't get a ticket. The ones who waltz into a fantastic post-graduation job with an inadequate resume and no experience. These people just effortlessly glide through life while the rest of us keep taking that futile running kick at Lucy's football.

It's not like I have a deep dislike for people who have got their stuff together and do well for themselves, I don't. What is it, though, about great news that compels people to share it with people who don't want to hear it? You don't tell people with the stomach flu about a great restaurant you just ate at the night before, why would you tell someone whose week (month, year, etc) has degenerated into a steaming pile of poodle poop about the friggin' oyster that comprises your little world, effectively rubbing their nose in it?

The best advice I can give those of you out there whose kites never get stuck in trees, whose cars always pass inspection the first time and the ones who pick up a loose scrap of paper on the ground only to find that it's a twenty dollar bill is from Broadcast News.

"What do you do when your real life exceeds your wildest expectations?"

"Keep it to yourself."

Xenophobic proposal

1967 - 1997
1987

Editor's note: On May 8, the Collegian will celebrate its 30th anniversary as a daily paper. To mark the occasion the Collegian is reprinting an editorial from each of the last 30 years. Today, we feature an editorial from Sept. 11, 1987.

The spirit of Massachusetts is no longer the spirit of Massachusetts.

The United States used to be known as a land of opportunity, where people from other lands were welcome to live and to learn. That may still be true in the other 49 states.

Over the summer, a bill was introduced to the state Legislature, requiring non-resident aliens to pay the "full cost" of their education at Massachusetts state colleges and universities. The proposal, signed by Governor Michael Dukakis Tuesday, is dangerous and xenophobic.

The point of public institutions is public support — In this case a partial subsidy. Asking foreign students to "pay their own way" while everyone else, including out-of-state students, pays a rate based on state support, is unfair.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey has pointed out that the new law will save each state resident about 50 cents. And while we are enjoying the candy bars we bought with our bounty, some student is not receiving an education, or at least not at a Massachusetts institution.

Totally aside from the injustice done to foreign students, there is injustice to the state system of higher education included in this bill. The message it sends is "Go away, we don't want you here." It smacks of turn-of-the-century fears that inspired signs like "No Irish need apply." That was in Boston.

The University of Massachusetts has begun to achieve the reputation it has long deserved as an institution offering opportunity to those who wish to learn, and this [law] is an unneeded hindrance.

At a time when we are trying to emphasize diversity, our laws are trying to enforce homogeneity. As one member of the Board of Regents of Higher Education put it, "This is not the kind of legislation that mold great institutions."

Chancellor Duffey, Rep. Stan Rosenberg and others are fighting the new measure, in the interests of the University and its students. But the students whom it will really affect are not yet here, and they need others to fight for their right to a public education. It is one of the great principles of American society.

Shame on Goodell

Sam McAfee

I am furious. Throughout the last four years that I have attended UMass, I have been a rabid student activist. There are times when I am excited to be involved because it seems like things are being accomplished by the many diverse groups engaged in the struggles at this institution.

Then there are days like today. This morning I awoke to discover two struggles in the world had been crushed overnight. Far south of us, in Lima, the butcher, autocrat and president of Peru, Fujimori, instructed his paramilitary forces to end the four month stand-off with the MRTA rebels, by rushing the Japanese Embassy and killing all 15 guerrillas. The action also sacrificed one hostage and two Peruvian soldiers.

Shortly after turning off CNN and heading for campus, I learned that the Mount Holyoke takeover at Mary Lyon had caved in and the Administration will likely take disciplinary action against the students involved. It is my suspicion that the occupiers were not able to maintain their position because of a lack of support from the Five College community.

In Peru, the MRTA had taken the compound in protest of Fujimori's neoliberal economic policies which are slowly starving the majority of the population. The rebels were also fighting against Peruvian military rule which ruthlessly punishes civilians just for being associated with an opposition group or labor organization. The international press claims that neither of the two rebel organization has support from the population. This blatant lie promoted by the U.S. press, which can be exposed by the mildest amount of research, makes it easier to justify the use of force without drawing criticism from the international community.

When the Goodell building was being occupied, there were roughly 50 or so people calling rallies, contacting the press, building local support for the protest which forced the administration to consider at least some of the demands. If it were not for the several hundred supporters gathered outside the building by those 50 organizers, the occupiers would have been dragged out before day three. At least 100 of the supporters were Mt. Holyoke students.

The failure of the struggle at Mt. Holyoke this weekend can be blamed squarely on those involved in the Goodell situation who largely owe their academic amnesty to the women of Mt. Holyoke. Where MHC women came in full force the first week of March, the Goodell protesters did not move to support the Mary Lyon takeover, and as a result the protesters have been suspended, pending appeals and could have been expelled. Calls for solidarity that ring empty because of a lack of actions have no place in the movement for social change.

At the Goodell info-social, an event intended to further the bonds forged during six intense days of action, much was said about maintaining alliances, supporting each other and building a movement. Well, that must have been lip service, for only the most hardcore activists from the Goodell event were on the scene at MHC. Much thanks to those comrades! Shame on the rest of you.

Last week, I listened with great enthusiasm to Kwame Ture, the great Stokely Carmichael of SNCC (Student Non- violent Coordinating Committee), as he encouraged the attendants of his talk to continue to work for the people. The revolution did not die with SNCC, nor did it die with the Black Panthers, nor did the fall of the false communism of the USSR in any way delegitimize the class struggle which forever rages within the capitalist system.

Others present at the event seemed to agree with Ture, showing their support in applause and standing ovations (three of 'em). Where were those people this weekend? Where were the young revolutionaries who dutifully attend their STPEC and Afro-Am classes, talking about changing the world and never lifting a finger to do something about it?

If you call yourself an organizer, activist or revolutionary, you must understand that if you expect support from other groups for your cause, you must reciprocate such support. As Ture said, you do not have to look far in order to find struggles that need your support. Is GEO raising awareness about the Chrysler strike being organized by the United Auto Workers, GEO's own union? I haven't seen it. Was the AFANA community calling their forces together to help efforts to secure funds for cultural programs at Mt. Holyoke? If so, not enough.

I am graduating in about five weeks, and until this weekend, I was hopeful that after the Goodell takeover, the struggle would continue to gain momentum bringing together more and more diverse groups until they can put some real pressure on the administration. But perhaps instead things will end up analogous to Peru, and the movement will be crushed, partly by the system which seeks not to change, but mostly by the selfishness of activists who also seek not to change.

Animal cloning at UMass

Kimberly Wilson

In November 1996 the University of Massachusetts announced its acceptance of a two year grant for $1,156,000 from Advanced Cell Technology, Inc. (ACT) a transgenic and animal cloning research company. Since UMass faculty founded ACT, they essentially granted themselves and their department over one-million dollars to continue their animal cloning research and further their company interests.

At first glance it appears that ACT was merely saving the interests of their parent company by genetically altering chickens in UMass Paige Laboratory to promote "early growth, exceptional livability and special characteristics for K.F.C. type and 8-10 piece cut-up operations." (See http://www.avainfarams.com/english/text/pr.html for product description.) However, increasing the proportion of edible flesh and efficiency of "cut-up" operations for cows, chickens and pigs is not the only purpose of ACT — they also hope to develop biomedical applications like xenotransplantation, which is the process by which animal organs can be transplanted into humans. Payoffs include "rejection proof [animal] hearts for transplant, grown using techniques like the ones Scottish researchers used to clone an adult sheep."

Questions such as "Is it right to use animals as spare parts for humans?" And how might such transplants alter our view of what is to be human?" pose serious challenges to current research projects. According to Florianne Koechlin in the May/June 1996 Economist, "An animal organ transplanted into a human recipient is not like a new radiator in a car: as a living body part if it affects the entire body, leading to animal cells being dispersed throughout the body."

Why would ACT and Avian Farms invest millions, start a private company and negotiate patent rights if they were not interested in profits? The Springfield Sunday Republican summed up the UMass research well with their headline, "Cashing In On Cloning."

ACT is funded by Avian Farms international, a poultry breeding company with a long history of sponsoring activities on campus. According to the UMass Annual Report of Sponsored Projects, FY93-FY95, from 1993 to 1995, Avian has awarded approximately $840,000 to various projects including $600,000 for "Genetic Modification in Domestic Animals."

The project summary states that, "It will be possible to economically and efficiently produce transgenic animals expressing proteins of interest in a variety of different tissues resulting in animals with greatly enhanced economic value."

If the University of Massachusetts was in the business of producing animals with "proteins of interest" this might be a valuable scientific effort. However, the University of Massachusetts in not in this business of producing animals for market, and therefore the relevance and benefits of continuing to serve corporate interests are unclear. It is also unclear why the University chose to renew this agreement in 1996. This time the research description involved cloning. In addition to the production of transgenic chickens, cattle and swine. Biohazardous substances, use of vertebrate animals, radioactive materials, recombinant DNA and carcinogenic substances are also involved in the research. In addition, this same type research, without University regulations, is happening in downtown Amherst at ACT's lab on 534 Main Street.

The University fails to serve in its mission to provide diverse public higher education every time it accepts funding from industrial sources — student tuition and public tax funds are co-opted by private interests. UMass faculty are working for ACT, thereby compromising the integrity of UMass as a public institution for higher education by hastily accepting industry funding without examining the implications of that industry's technology. Due to the growing concern about the invasive nature of this research, its dangerous biomedical application, and the moral problems concerning the ownership of life forms, we, the Undergraduate Employment Organization, believe transgenic animal research must be stopped until those issues are addressed by the University community.

- We oppose transgenic animal research and animal cloning as uncontrolled human intervention into nature and animal life.
- We oppose ownership of life forms.
- We question the reductionist science that allows animals to be "invented" and defined only hy their genetic structure.
- We oppose the biotechnological imperialism that ACT, Inc. and the University of Massachusetts are engaged in with this cloning and transgenic research initiative.
- We demand a moratorium on transgenic animal researching and cloning at UMass.
- We demand the affiliations between University resources and ACT, Inc. be discontinued until public assessments of this technology can be made.
- We demand more student and community involvement in grant and contract negotiations that involve the biotechnology industry or research projects with industrial application or industry presence on campus.

BOXED IN.
Music to the ears of the record industry

In 1979, the Sex Pistols released the film The Great Rock N' Roll Swindle. They also released a soundtrack album and a home video. However, the Pistols never fully realized the ultimate potential of the concept of the word "swindle." That's because they never released a boxed set.

The concept of the boxed set is simple; a multi-disc (at least three, though usually four or five CDs) retrospective of an artist's work which is "digitally remastered" and spiced up with some previously unreleased tracks. Throw in a booklet long on pictures and short on text, package it all in a spiffy little box, and usually price it at no less than $45. And there you have it; the ultimate collectors' item for the fan who must have everything. At least that's what the conniving greed-heads in the music business would like you to believe.

In reality, though, boxed sets very rarely live up to the idealistic concept of musical integrity detailed above. Instead, they are simply one part of a larger, darker marketing scheme. The set itself is geared towards two types of fans. The first is the casual listener who wants a general overview of the artist's entire catalogue without having to buy every individual album. Thus, most of the known tracks are liberally sprinkled within, enticing the consumer with something that amounts to little more than a glorified "greatest hits" collection.

The second type of customer is the hard-core music geek. This is the person who will immediately buy the collection just because they have to own it. These people are generally the victims, myself included. For example, in 1991 Rhino Records issued the Monkees' Listen To The Band box. At that point, all of the Monkees' original albums were out of print, so I bought the box willingly. Of course, a couple of years later Rhino reissued the entire Monkees catalogue, thus rendering the Listen To The Band box utterly useless. Incidentally, MCA just pulled the same trick with the Who's Thirty Years Of Maximum R&B box and their subsequent individual album reissues. Pretty sneaky, if you ask me.

Another example of a great idea gone awry is the Rolling Stones' The London Years: 1964-71 (ABCKO) collection. Compiling all of the band's singles during their '60s heyday, ABCKO's quest for authenticity ultimately ruins the collection. All of the Stones' singles from this era were originally released in mono and thus are presented in that form on The London Years. The only reason the original singles weren't released in stereo was because most people still had monophonic record players and thus could not play vinyl recorded in stereo. However, it is safe to assume that anyone with a CD player has stereo capability, so why release the substantially inferior mono mixes when stereo ones exist? Easy — so when ABCKO releases the presently unavailable stereo versions of these songs, chumps like me will rush out and buy them.

Perhaps the most egregiously insulting box

THE COLLEGIAN'S Recommendations on classic box sets.

By far, the definitive Clash collection, chronicling the career of one of rock's most important bands. On Broadway includes the majority of The Clash's material from 1977 up until guitarist Mick Jones left in 1983. Also, some live tracks and previously unreleased rarities make up this amazing three disc set. The first two discs portray the Clash as one of punk's most prominent pioneers, while the third pays more attention to the band's later, more reggae- influenced material, which served as the prime influence for many of today's ska-punk bands. On Broadway also contains a complete book of Clash lyrics and impressive liner notes with some insightful information about the band's history.

RAY CHARLES — The Birth of Soul (1951-1954) (Atco/Atlantic Records, 1990) — Shortly before Chuck Berry got folks rocking and bopping or James Brown made the house roll and grind, there was Ray Charles. His label, the Atlantic subsidiary, Atco, was home to many of the prata-soul artists of the time. A funky package of blues, jazz and what would become rock 'n' roll, Charles' early recorded material was chock full of stomping, sexy rhythms, anchored by his rollicking piana lines. Every single released by the blind, gruff-voiced artist is here, from the song that boosted his career, "What I Say (Part One)," to lesser known tunes like "Herd Times" (which Eric Clapton covered on his Journeyman album). For those who know Charles only from his later, less inspired hits ("America" and "Georgia on My Mind," to name a few) or his Diet Pepsi ads, this is an essential insight into the man who helped spawn the soul genre. To add to the fun, contrast this box set with his wark with Betty Carter in order to better grasp the scope of Charles' talent.

Galaxie 500 — Box Set (Rykodisc, 1996) — Fragile, Breathtaking, Beautiful. Box Set captures the entire Galaxie 500 back catalog, including their three long-out-of-print albums: Today, On Fire and This Is Our Music. Rykodisc includes -a bonus disc of rarities and unreleased recordings including covers of the Beatles and Joy

Bob Dylan — Biograph (Columbia, 1985) — Dylan's career is so vast that it's impossible to encapsulate it in a single collection. Nevertheless, this box set comes pretty close. Spanning 30 years of Dylan's career, Biograph includes 53 songs on five discs, including rarities, live tracks and alternate versions. Also included is a 144-page booklet with rare photos and liner notes by Cameron Crowe. Dylan's voice may not be to everyone's liking, but his songwriting is undeniable. Whether you're a fan or not, this is a must-have.

set is Elvis Costello's 2 1/2 Years (Rykodisc). This simply features Costello's first three albums and a fourth disc consisting of a 1978 concert in Toronto. So basically, in order to get the live album, the consumer has to also buy the other three. And if said consumer already has one or all of the other albums in the box? Too bad.

Dodgy marketing techniques and inferior sound aside, there are some box sets which are truly worth their large price tag. RCA/BMG's The King Of Rock N' Roll — The Complete '50s Masters collects everything Elvis Presley recorded from 1954 to 1959. Of the five discs contained within, four contain previously released material. However, the historical significance of these recordings as well as a 100-page booklet with a full sessionography and a disc full of unreleased material, live tracks, and interviews make this collection essential. The chronological track listing also shows the evolution of Presley as an artist and, as his popularity exploded, an icon. The equally impressive From Nashville To Memphis and Walk A Mile In My Shoes collections document Elvis' career in the 1960s and '70s, respectively.

Perhaps the most dynamic rock event of the 1960s was 1967's Monterey Pop Festival. Featuring Otis Redding, the Who, and the Jimi Hendrix Experience among dozens of acts, Rhino Records' four-disc Monterey Pop box captures all of the festival's highlights. For other essential documents of the most fabled decade in rock history, Rhino's Otis! box devotes itself to soul great Redding and Capitol's Good Vibrations Beach Boys collection features cuts from the legendary Smile, Brian Wilson's aborted "teenage symphony to God."

Two collections from the late-'70s punk/new wave boom offer the multiple treats for the avid fan. Caroline Records has given punk legends the Misfits the royal treatment, with a coffin-shaped box featuring four discs of almost exclusively out-of-print and unreleased material as well as a really cool lapel pin to boot. Cheap Trick have also recently been immortalized with Sex, America, Cheap Trick (Legacy), a bonanza of studio demos and alternate takes for the serious Trick fanatic.

As far as the '80s and '90s are concerned, there's really nothing to report. Most artists don't get the boxed treatment until about 15-20 years after their commercial peak or career demise, although it wouldn't be too surprising if Nirvana gets a heart-shaped box in a couple of years to commemorate the fifth anniversary of Kurt Cobain's death. Egocentric alt-rock superstars Oasis and Smashing Pumpkins are already issuing boxed collections of their B-sides at exorbitant sums (by compiling their singles in their original form instead of cramming them all on one disc, like the decidedly non-greedy, fan-friendly R.E.M. did with 1987's Dead Letter Office.)

The bottom line, though, is that the consumer should seriously consider the worth and value of the enticing package high on the shelf behind the cash register. Make sure you like the artist enough to want to hear their "unreleased" tracks, because odds are they've remained unreleased for a reason. Don't get boxed in by record company marketing ploys and look in the used bins to see how many box sets have been resold. That should be a pretty good indicator of whether the quality of the music contained within carries more weight than the quantity of consumer lures listed on the back of the package.

Division. Few bands before or after have been able to produce the sheer fragility of Galaxie 500 as on songs such as "Strange," "Sorry" and "Blue Thunder."

Aerosmith — Pandora's Box (Columbia, 1991) — If you're like me (a bitter crank who thinks that Aerosmith are now boring middle-aged corporate whores, recycling the same album to keep up their million-dollar appeal) then old Aerosmith is the definition of what rock and roll should be: sex, drugs and Steven Tyler in an old lady outfit. This three CD collection captures Aerosmith in all their decadent glory of the '70s. It contains unreleased nuggets like "Rattlesnake Shake" and "I Live in Connecticut" along with songs like "Lick and a Promise" and "Kings and Queens" that made Aerosmith the rock and roll powerhouse of yesterday. It has the hits and the song lyrics to all your old favorites, cool quotes on the band from other stars and awesome photographs of the band living it up in rock and roll hedonism.

Led Zeppelin — Led Zeppelin (Atlantic, 1990) — Led Zeppelin is still one of the most influential groups in rock and roll history. Zep's box set contains all the good stuff. From "Travelling Riverside Blues," Jimmy Page's ode to the sliding rock guitar, to "Lemon Song," to date the most incredible bass performance ever by John Paul Jones, the box set does a great job of covering the Zep classics.

Bob Dunn
Collegian Columnist

Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band — Live 1975–85 (Columbia, 1986) — One of the best live albums ever recorded and an effective compilation of Springsteen's career from Greetings from Asbury Park, New Jersey through Born in the U.S.A. The songs are recorded in venues ranging from The Roxy to Olympic Stadium and reflect Springsteen's meteoric rise from bar-band frontman to worldwide superstar. Highlights of the three-disc set include raw, down and dirty versions of Springsteen classics like "Adam Raised a Cain" and "Candy's Room," but also contains previously unreleased versions of songs he penned for other artists like "Fire" and "Because the Night" as well as a couple of cover tunes, most notably Woody Guthrie's "This Land is Your Land" and Tom Waits' "Jersey Girl." What sets this box set apart, though, is the decision to include several of Springsteen's talks to the audience before and during some songs, including a touching story about his father which precedes "The River." The accompanying booklet contains complete lyrics and rare photos, both of which are well worth a look.

ABBA — Thank You for the Music — This is the definitive collection for any ABBA fan. It chronicles the band from their early days of songs like "S.O.S." through the early '80s. This four CD set includes a lot of material that can be found on any one of their recordings, and also has a bunch of songs that were B-sides or that were never released. Until just recently, any ABBA CD sold in the United States was an import and therefore expensive, so this box set was a nice way to hear high quality ABBA tunes. Also included in the box set is a detailed booklet which explains why certain songs were recorded and also included a discography of the band. I have every CD or record that ABBA has ever released, but I still listen to this all the time, it's definitely worth picking up.

'Amy' is a fine 1990s film

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

CHASING AMY
Directed By Kevin Smith with Ben Affleck, Joey Lauren Adams, Jason Lee Playing at Academy of Music

At the central core of his new film, director Kevin Smith attempts to create a striking and provocative statement concerning human sexuality. His claim being that relationships are too contrived within the framework of straight vs. gay and that somewhere we are all missing the point.

According to the circumstances in which his characters partake, Smith's view appears to be that each of us are in search of that magnificent concept of true love. His theory however, is about how much emphasis should we place on the smaller details, like, for example — the gender of our potential significant other.

Chasing Amy explores a new side to Kevin Smith's take on his generation. Of course the primary elements still exist, such as our bored-with-nothing-to-really-believe-in attitudes. However, these concepts were more apparent in Clerks and Mallrats which portrayed the post high school age level in a humorous but very critical light. Chasing Amy is a more personal and sensitive project for Smith. Although many of his comical trademarks are apparent, Smith's new film is both so endearing and anti-P.C. that many will be completely shocked and moved by his subject matter.

In many ways, Chasing Amy, is still familiar territory, containing the cynicism that allowed Smith's first two features to be taken seriously. It is this blunt conversational style and familiar characters which allow Smith's situations to remain hilarious yet, identifiable at the same time. Amy still includes the raunchy humor, comic book fixations and bizarre Star Wars antics that have become synonymous with Smith's script writing. Not only does he make references to his other films in Amy, Smith also continues to build up a strong cast of stock actors and even reoccurring characters, including the infamous Jay and Smith's own alter-ego Silent Bob.

Chasing Amy is really a story about not how difficult it is to find true love, but rather trying to secure it. Holden (Ben Affleck) is your typical nice guy who falls in love with the cute and spirited girl-next-door type Alyssa (Joey Lauren Adams). Holden's world becomes crushed when he finds out Alyssa is actually a lesbian and has nothing more than friendship intentions. Regardless of how unbelievable it may seem, Holden persists with his courtship and very shortly into the story Alyssa realizes her affection for him.

Many of the situations and characters in Chasing Amy are borderline ridiculous, such as when Alyssa explains to Holden that he is the first guy she has ever met that doesn't adhere to specific stereotypes. Also, much of the film's naive cutesiness becomes a bit agitating and the narrative at times seems to force conflict in order to keep the story from becoming too light. The film's entire finale is so far fetched and unwarranted that much of the integrity is sacrificed. It appeared that Smith felt the need to throw in some last shot of drama instead of merely allowing his characters to just be happy.

Chasing Amy is an interesting film nonetheless, and has many intriguing insights about the complexity of relationships. The supporting rolls more than make up for the flaws of the story's leads. Jason Lee (Mallrats) is the epitome of comic relief, playing Holden's bitter best friend. New

Strangefolk will get the audience moving at their show at the Northampton Center For The Arts tonight.

Strangefolk shaking in Northampton tonight

By Jean Sienkewicz
Collegian Staff

Strangefolk is home. Not Burlington, Vt., home, but relatively close. After spending much of March and April criss-crossing and hopping around the southern and western parts of the country in no particular order (a date with moe. in North Carolina, some shows in Montana, a week all over Colorado, a gig in the nation's capital, and a ton of various shows up and down the East coast), it's nice to see these New England boys hanging around for awhile — or three days, at least.

Tonight's show at the Northampton Center for the Arts kicks off the first of three theater shows in the region, followed by the Somerville Theater tomorrow night and then a show at the notable Waterville Opera House in Waterville, Maine, on Saturday. Each night has much to offer Folk fans, but this Northampton gig promises perhaps to be the best of the three. Although the much-publicized Somerville show, part of Road Trip '97, boasts the announcement of the winning dream setlist from SF's contest (if they pick your setlist randomly from the pool of others sent in, they play the songs you wanted to hear in the order you wanted to hear 'em during the second set), tonight is 3 sets of live music, not just two! With no opening band, a huge dance floor in the elegant, spacious Center for the Arts in Noho, and the room's high ceilings and sweet acoustics, not much is left to be desired when it comes to going to a show. Except, perhaps, a description of the band...

Many UMass students may have checked Strangefolk out, either last November or back in January, when they played Butterfield. But they've gotten too big for dorm basements; their blend of rock, folk, bluegrass and a little bit of country (good old Willie Nelson!) drew so many people, a good number were turned away at the door. So what makes Strangefolk so good?

It's gotta be the power of the lyrics: the emotions that issue forth, the characters they create, the stories they tell, etc. Or maybe it's the harmonies: with rhythm guitarist Reid Genauer's taking the reins on many songs and both lead guitarist Jon Trafton's and bassist Erik Glockler's backing vocals (or twist it and toss Glockler in the lead, or even Trafton — that's not so rare anymore), it's unthinkable to imagine Strangefolk's sound any other way. But then again, rhythm is a solid, more-than-necessary contribution to the big picture as well: just watching drummer Luke Smith do his thing is enough to send waves of dancing energy rushing through and over your body.

Ah yes, that's it — the energy! You dance. There's nothing left to do at a Strangefolk show but close your eyes, listen to those boys jam out, let yourself be carried away, move your feet and let the music take control.

Tickets for tonight's all-ages Strangefolk show at the Northampton Center for the Arts, 150 Main St., Noho, are $10. You can buy them in advance by calling 1-800-THE-TICK, or get them at the door (for a slight additional charge). Doors open at 8 p.m., and the three set show begins at 8:45.

Numerous web sites touch on current political topics

World Wide Activism: Hack the Planet Man.

For this week's column I thought I would do something a bit serious. Then I thought to myself, hmmm, what should I write about? Then it occurred to me that I should do something involving activism. Why? I am not really sure. I think it is because of the recent editorials contained in this paper last week about the IRA. It made me think of other radical groups that people may identify with and maybe want to know more about so that they could have articulate and educated conversations and not spit out idle banter on the topic. Trust me, many of us do it. I know I used to when it came the IRA. Now, however, I am able to use my head instead of my heart when entering into heated debate over such issues.

At any rate, I felt that I should give people the information regarding web sites that are up their political alley. Not all of these sites are radical groups. American politics need not apply.

Sinn Fein
www.irlnet.com/sinnfein

With all politics aside, this is a very well designed and good looking web site. This is the homepage of the political arm of the IRA. Contained within is a very good explanation of the party and its goals as well as the troubles presently occurring in Northern Ireland. There are, however, no references to the military extension of IRA made here.

MRTA Solidarity Page

Do you remember the guys who seized the home of a Japanese ambassador in Peru and held 380 hostages? That's right, they have a home page. The page is another that is put together quite well. There is a lot of documentation on the group's struggle including communiques, press releases and news articles. There are also a bunch of links to other revolutionary movements around the world.

Free Tibet
www.munymedia.com/tibet/index.htm#centralindex

This text-driven site offers insight into the continual struggle of the exiled Dalai Lama, the continual repression of the Tibetan people, and what happens to those dissidents who oppose the uncompromising Chinese government. Not very many people know too much about the struggle in Tibet. This is a great site, with links to other resources, that can help you become knowledgeable about and involved in the cause. Some cool people who are involved in this cause include Zach Delarocha from Rage Against the Machine and Ad Rock from the Beastie Boys.

The Blacklands
www.pinkl.com/BL/BL_Power

This is the home of the Blacklands political party which is much like the Black Panther Party. They promote self–awareness, knowledge, and economic self–sufficiency as the keys to Black autonomy. This page has been put together quite well and its main focus relies on role models and also examines the desire to return the ancestral homeland of Africa. This page is really educational and put together well. Definitely a must see.

As we all may guess, opposing the government can be a very dangerous thing in certain areas of the world. A few topics covered on this page include human rights violations and the repression of women. Definitely check this one out.

FAREED HAQUE, COURTESY GEOFF STEIN

Young jazzmen take stab at classic '70s albums

Deja vu. That odd feeling you are doing something that you oddly remember doing shortly beforehand. It's a feeling that could be brought on by things like hearing Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young's 1970 masterpiece Deja Vu as a new release in 1997, yet not as a re–issue. Blue Note Records is cashing in on this sensation, putting out classic albums such as Deja Vu, Marvin Gaye's What's Going On and Bob Marley & The Wailers' Natty Dread with new interpretations by three young jazzmen.

Half–Chilean, half–Pakistani guitarist Fareed Haque, spurred on by childhood memories of hearing the sensational harmonies of CSN&Y's mesmerizing singing and song– writing, has decided to cast his rendition of Deja Vu in an all new, eclectic perspective. Having set his reputation as a classical guitar master on past albums such as Opaque and Sacred Addiction, he decided to go all–out on this disc, mixing his classical sounds with jabbing electronics of the Fender Rhodes electric piano, plenty of electric funk guitar and varied percussion, all relaxing on the bed of some of rock's craziest compositions.

Haque employs the above funky lineup on Stills' "Carry On," before laying back, and chilling on Neil Young's "Helpless," on which he plays slide with a 69–cent Bic lighter, and is accompanied by earthy accordion in this fine example of acoustic jazz with a south–of–the–border flavor. Elizabeth Conant's accordion also brings out the homeliness of "Teach Your Children." Joni Mitchell's "Woodstock" is taken in a real straight Latin–jazz vein, with a three–guitar attack complimenting the upbeat nature of the original. The rest of the album, including Nash's "Our House," (done with dueling acoustics by Haque and Dave Onderdonk), and Young's "Country Girl" (real sharp performance by Haque and Ron Perillo on Rhodes with subdued rhythm) bring out the dusty desert feel of Deja Vu.

Less engaging is R&B–oriented jazz saxophonist Everett Harp's run–through of Gaye's classic soul social commentary album, What's Going On. It doesn't seem like Harp did much to the original album, in terms of re–inventing it in a new style. He sticks to straight–up R&B to change the dark mood of the original album into an almost bouncy performance all the way through. The mood of disturbing social problems is lost for the sake of R&B noodling.

Indeed, a lot of the songs just melt right into each other, but not in the way an album from The Beatles or Funkadelic or even Gaye himself would have, with variations in between the seamless composition of a collection. Harp even adds the overly–glam backing vocals "ooh"–ing and "aah"–ing over Harp's breezy performances. There's not many standout performances on here. There is some nice flute touches by Najee on "Right On" and there are silky vocals lent by Yolanda Adams on the gospelly "Wholy Holy" that are also a little bit of a nice change from Harp's over–produced new jazz swing.

Charlie Hunter, his 8–string guitar (which sounds at times like a Hammond organ), and his San Francisco–based quartet get down and feel the vibrations of one of Hunter's personal favorite albums, Natty Dread, made by Bob Marley & The Wailers in 1975 and yielding some timeless hits, like "No Woman No Cry," which is done on Hunter's Blue Note cover version with slide guitar weeping Marley's vocal line and horn harmonies giving it that Marley soul.

Other highlights of this new Natty Dread is the opener "Lively Up Yourself," which at first sounds like soulful organ jazz, until you find out that ain't no organ — it's Hunter's unique tone. You find a raw Latin essence flowing through "Dem Belly Full" complemented by Calder Spanier's flying alto sax. "So Jah Seh" and "Natty Dread" both move along with a rock–steady shuffle with perfect chemistry in the former by Hunter, drummer Scott Amendola and tenor sax player Kenny Brooks. Hunter closes a sweet interpretation of the album with his loose, mellow version of "Revolution."

Cover versions are one thing one usually finds in abundance on albums by jazz vocalists. Abbey Lincoln breaks that mold with her slow and low songwriting that makes it sound like every song she writes is a standard. Unfortunately, we find another vein of repetition in her new album, Who Used To Dance (Gitanes/Verve).

Lincoln is not without dense emotion as is shown in the opener "Love Has Gone Away," "Love What You Doin'," and the fine lyrical structure of "I Sing A Song." However, with all her guests on the album, including Steve Coleman, Oliver Lake and a few other sax slingers, the album doesn't seem to vary much between somber songs. The upbeat version of Bob Dylan's "Mr. Tambourine Man" and the surrealism of "The River" break up the blues a bit, but this is certainly mood music primarily.

Fantasy, Inc. is back with their amazing and ever–lasting Original Jazz Classics re–issue series. The first sample of the latest batch I shall take on in these last three weeks will be Mose Allison's upbeat piano trio compilation Down Home Piano, originally issued in the late '50s, before Allison took on more blues influence.

If Down Home Piano is mood music it is certainly good mood music. Morning music, even. Allison's sweet but soulful skill spreads over this whole mix. He is always accompanied by either Ronnie Free or Nick Stabulas on drums and Addison Farmer on bass. "Crepuscular Air" moves on over rising hills but settles into a few low valleys as well. "Devil In The Cane Field" captures one fresh trio jam, and "Mojo Woman" is a flirt with the blues. "Moon And Cypress," seems to bring out the same Southern swampy but romantic feeling as the title, earning itself the position as the best track on the disc. Next Week: Some blues for a change!

Actress takes Zelda role

By Alex Iglesias
Collegian Correspondent

ZELDA: THE LAST FLAPPER
The Curtain Theater
April 25, 1997

As far as theatrical roles are concerned, Wendy Remington has taken on an endeavor which will test her range in the fine art of acting. For two consecutive nights, Remington will be performing William Luce's Zelda: The Last Flapper, a one–woman play based on the writings of Mrs. F. Scott Fitzgerald.

A theater major, Remington will be using this performance as her senior thesis project, not to mention the enormous learning experience she will gain. So why this show in particular?

"I'm interested in the expatriates..." she said.

Remington said she had been researching one–woman plays for a while and this was the show that definitely grabbed her attention. One–woman plays — like many other female roles — have been in the shadow of a male dominated theater and this was a chance to break out of it, she said.

Zelda is ground–breaking theater as far as Remington's career is concerned. She is nowhere near an amateur level of acting, with various UMass Theater Department plays under her belt. Remington is faced with the challenge of portraying the eccentric and passionate life of Zelda Fitzgerald, wife of the famous writer F. Scott Fitzgerald. Not to mention the zany, role–reversals she conjures up in the snap of a finger. Zelda is a schizophrenic whose life has turned into a constant battle between fantasy and reality. Remington seemed to become Zelda during her pre–rehearsal warm–ups as she spoke to her cast in her sweet, southern belle character tone.

Friendship and fun are the rehearsal's fortes.

"If you aren't having fun, you shouldn't be in theater," said Stage Manager Brian Sparrow.

Zelda has a cast and crew of 12 in total, with everyone the direct choice of Remington. The show is under the production of Smoking Gun Productions who are making their producing debut, and direction is in the hands of Genevieve McLallan, also a senior theater major. Music accompaniment tends to fall towards our new modernized–speaker control with a small intermission surprise selection of music for you '70s movie fans.

All in all, this show is a huge step in the career of Remington, whose typical college roles of a "little girl in piggy tails..." as one cast member put it, are over with. At Remington's career level, her role as Zelda Fitzgerald, reaches the equivalence of Dustin Huffman's Broadway performance in The Death of a Salesman. Remington will take you with her into character as she performs with great conviction. So what lies ahead in the near future was asked of Remington in a recent rehearsal?

"I'm moving to New York... Brooklyn. It's cheaper," said Remington.

A captivating performance indeed that you must not miss!

Zelda: The Last Flapper will be playing at The Curtain Theater. April 25 & 26 at 8 p.m. Free Admission.

Don't dis the young Scots in Bis

Teen trio arrives in US on the catchy back of stellar debut EP

By Martin J. Keane
Collegian Correspondent

The eclectic Scottish trio Bis' debut U.S. release, the startlingly good EP This Is Teen–C Power! (Grand Royal), is a bold and confident statement that youthful exuberance and d.i.y. mentality are still a vital part of the rock equation these days.

In this day and age of self–depreciating (Pearl Jam) and self–important (U2) pseudo–heroes, Bis' carefree attitude and punk spirit shine through like a lonely beacon of light on the otherwise desolate plain in current rock music. Think of Bis as a good kick in the pants to all the corporate, mass– produced garbage being forced down the throat of music consumers by overzealous record companies.

The three teenagers that comprise Bis look like average, unexceptional teens growing up in middle America — Kansas City perhaps. However, instead of hopelessly being relegated to an adolescence where Gwen Stefani and Marilyn Manson are their "voices," Bis have gleefully taken on the job of generational spokespeople unto themselves. Who knew such enthusiasm could come out of the barren dreariness of Glasgow, Scotland?

After a heavy courtship on the part of seemingly every record label, Bis has signed on with Grand Royal, known to most as the home of the ubiquitous NYC smart–alecks, the Beastie Boys. According to label honcho Mike D, the "kids" in Bis will be granted "full artistic freedom" which should help to develop an already present sardonic wit in their lyricism even further on their forthcoming full–length album, The New Transistor Heroes.

With an average age of 18, Bis clearly have a leg up on their competition. Their message flows with an incontrivable urgency that is dearly lacking in music today. They sincerely have no pretenses, yet are unwavering in their assessment that they are "the future nobody knows." The majority of the lyrics consist of Sci–Fi Steven and John Disco letting loose on essential teen topics ranging from boyfriends ("Kill Yr Boyfriend") to the ever–present teen social scene in "School Disco."

From the first sonic blast on the tongue–in–cheek "Kill Yr Boyfriend," This Is Teen–C Power! oozes a wave of unnerving energy that never lets up and the hit–and–run style of the songs suit their rambunctious nature brilliantly. Each of the six songs are built around quirky machine–driven beats and curious catchphrases that redefine kitsch; "Sugar, sugar, kandy pop, just don't let the music stop" being one such example.

The most astonishing aspect of This Is Teen–C Power! is the depth and intellect with which Bis voice their concerns. Their wit and cynicism, combined with an undeniable "Kandy Pop" charm make this a truly unforgettable release.

Escape the daily grind with weekend hiking expeditions

If you find your heart beating and lungs breathing when sitting in a classroom, trekking along campus sidewalks, or riding a PVTA bus, but do not feel alive, then dance with the west winds, feel mighty mountain tops, and climb through sweeping valleys up to the sky.

Join the Holyoke and Hadley Eastern Mountain Sports (EMS) Stores for an outdoor adventure on the Appalachian Trail. Beginning in Connecticut the EMS hiking series will travel through the state of Massachusetts. This intense wilderness clinic takes place on 12 Saturdays over the course of the summer.

Alfresco News with Liz Anderson

Participants will have the opportunity to learn the most advance techniques in how to navigate with a compass, wilderness cooking, water sanitation, and how to prepare for overnight backpacking trips. The EMS Outdoor Skills series begins this weekend on April 25, with a hike that will descend into the Sages Ravine.

Surrounded by enchanted trees and wild waterfalls, the hike will cross over Race Mountain to Race Brook Cascade enveloped by beautiful views of the valley below. The total hike will cover 5.5 miles and will include a seminar on water filtration.

On May 10, EMS will conduct the Outdoor Skills Clinic on Mount Everett. This hike will follow Race to Everett Ridge along vast panoramic views of the region. During this hike the clinic will focus on backcountry cooking. The hike is a total of 6.6 miles.

The third hike of the EMS Outdoor Skills Clinic is on May 24 along the Housatonic River. This gentle ramble will travel through beautiful fields and meadows offering great views of Mount Everett. The 7.6 mile hike will pass by the Shay Rebellion Monument, which marks the revolutionary battle of 1787.

On May 31, EMS will take its participants to Ice Gulch. On this leg of the EMS Outdoor Skills Clinic the hike will trek along a ridge to East Monumtain. This 5.3 mile section offers great views of the Catskills and Taconic Range. Most of the terrain is rolling and the hike descends over ledges with views onto the Ice Gulch.

The lesson of this journey will cover the basics of the Global Positioning System (GPS). Originally developed by the United States military to enable troops in the field to pinpoint their exact location anywhere in the world, the GPS' trickle down technology and low cost electronics have made it possible for ordinary folks to benefit from its system.

The fifth hike of the EMS Outdoor Skills Clinic is on June 21 and is the longest hike in the series with a total of 12.1 miles. This hike will travel through scenic marshlands up into an area called the Ledges. From the summit–tops of the Ledges there are beautiful views of East Mountain, Warner Mountain, Mount Everett, and the distant Catskills.

The EMS Outdoor Skills Clinic will begin to wrap up its hiking series with an overnight prepatory meeting on July 10 at 6 p.m. to review wilderness camping skills for the final overnight hike on July 19–20. This ultimate hike will climb up to Upper Goose Pond, named for the abundant goose population found there. The campsite and cabin will be at mile seven of the hike and will take 3 1/2 hours to reach.

All outdoor enthusiasts who are interested in improving their wilderness techniques in the EMS Outdoor Skills Clinic are asked to sign up at the Eastern Mountain Sport Stores in Holyoke or Hadley three days in advance of each trip. Each clinic is free of charge and participants are required to bring food and appropriate footwear for hiking.

For more information call the Eastern Mountain Sports Stores in Holyoke at (413) 532–1662 or in Hadley at (413)548–3554.

Attention! All outdoor sportsmen and women. You must beware of dehydration before considering this wild clinic or any form of strenuous outdoor activity. Hydration is the replacement of body fluids lost through sweating, exhaling and elimination. It is an old wives' tale that 6–8 glasses of water per day is enough water to support intense workouts. Water intake depends on your size. It is crucial to be alert and listen to your body when participating in outdoor recreation continuously replenishing your muscles with water.

Release pent up energy and feel alive through Massachusetts' fantastic peaks. Participate in the Eastern Mountain Sports Outdoor Skills Clinic and learn how to maximize your energy in New England's wild backcountry woods.

Bonds' inside–the–park homer lifts Giants

By Rob Gloster
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds and the San Francisco Giants have built the best record in the majors not with towering homers, but with a pinch of luck and a large dose of late-inning heroics.

Bonds' slicing popup turned into a three-run inside-the-park homer and Bill Mueller singled in the winning run in the ninth as the Giants beat the Atlanta Braves 4-3 yesterday for their 10th win in 11 games.

The Giants have won four games in the past week in their last at-bat — including one in which the tying and winning runs scored when Florida outfielder Gary Sheffield lost a routine fly ball in the sun.

"We know we're not a power team like the Braves or Marlins, so we have to do the little things," Bonds said. "Our pitching has been outstanding. Our bullpen has been outstanding. And we've been getting clutch hitting."

The Giants' 14-4 mark matches that of the 1971 team for the best start since the club moved to San Francisco in 1958.

Bonds got only his second homer of the year when he blooped a ball down the left-field line in the first inning and it bounced just out of the reach of a diving Ryan Klesko, who tumbled into the wall.

As a stunned Klesko slowly retrieved the ball from the left-field corner, Bonds sped around the bases and scored standing up.

"The ball kind of faded on me. I stretched out and dove for it, and then I hit that rubber mat. I felt it in my head, my neck and my shoulders. It kind of dazed me," Klesko said. "I just kind of sat there. By the time I realized it was down the line, it was too late."

Atlanta manager Bobby Cox said the blustery afternoon made life miserable for outfielders, but did not absolve Klesko of blame.

"The ball Barry hit was a routine fly ball. That ball should be caught," Cox said.

Atlanta starter Tom Glavine settled down after that. He allowed three runs on nine hits in eight innings, and the Braves rallied for three runs in the seventh to tie the game.

Klesko hit a two-run homer, his second of the season, to knock out starter Kirk Rueter. With two outs, Glavine drew a walk off Julian Tavarez. Rich Rodriguez came in to pitch and allowed Kenny Lofton's single and Mark Lemke's game-tying RBI double.

But the Giants, who are 7-1 in one-run games this season, scored off Alan Embree (1-1) in the ninth for the win.

Marcus Jensen opened the ninth by walking on four pitches. Dante Powell ran for Jensen and moved to second on a sacrifice. Mueller then grounded a single between first and second, and Powell slid around the tag of catcher Javy Lopez for the winning run.

"The first couple of weeks, if you get some wins in the ninth inning it makes you more confident," Mueller said. "The later innings are becoming the best part of our game."

Doug Henry (2-0) pitched the ninth. Rueter allowed two runs on four hits in 6 1-3 innings.

"There's that feeling in the eighth or ninth that, if we're down, we know we're come back before and we can do it again," Rueter said.

Notes: Bonds' inside-the-park homer was the second of his career. His first was July 28, 1987, during his first full season with the Pittsburgh Pirates... Andrew Jones went 0-for-3 for the Braves, including a strikeout and two grounders to the mound, on his 20th birthday... Bonds surpassed 1,000 RBIs for his career. He had been stuck on 999 RBIs for the previous eight games... The Giants' bullpen is 6-0 with 10 saves in its last 17 appearances.

including her team–high 13 doubles.

Alicia tips the batting scales at .374. She's got the team lead with 52 hits and 34 RBIs, and she's also hit two homeruns.

On the rubber, Jen's 19 wins and minuscule 1.82 ERA lead the team. And Alicia's 9 wins and 3.07 ERA serve well in her side saddle role.

Also contributing at the plate for Hofstra is Chris Aigotti. Starting all 41 games, Aigotti is batting a robust .360.

Jen Pawol leads the Flying Dutchwomen with 4 taters, and hits at a .358 clip. Marisa Semmel has a couple of dingers herself, and a .342 average.

And Nicole Newhart is yet another one of Hofstra's many weapons, hitting at a torrid .341 pace.

In addition to this, Hofstra has fared well against some top–caliber teams. The Flying Dutchwomen dropped close decisions to No. 25 Michigan State and No. 12 Arizona State, but upset No. 17 Florida State.

Still the Minutewomen have one leg up on Hofstra. Pitchers Liz Wagner and Danielle Henderson, possibly the top pitching duo in New England, have proven themselves capable of stopping high–powered offenses dead in their tracks.

And if knocking off a top team, and greeting themselves back on track isn't enough motivation, try this one on for size. The last time these two teams saw each other, Hofstra was on the Princeton field celebrating after a 1995 Regional win eliminated the Minutewomen.

Despite being held to just one run in Tuesday's win over the Huskies, the UMass bats have been on fire all year. Leading the charge has been sophomore Doug Clark, who saved Tuesday's no–hitter with a diving catch at the foot of Fenway Park's Green Monster. Clark is hitting .418 this season, with nine home runs and 43 RBIs, and was named A–10 Player of the Week on April 13th.

Leading the team in home runs is sophomore leftfielder Aaron Braunstein, who has 10. Braunstein, who is a transfer from South Florida, is hitting .312 with 23 RBIs. Fellow South Florida defectee Matt Wolcott has worked his way into playing time by going 6–for–12 in his last four games, with two home runs.

Today's final will be broadcast live on WHMP 1400 AM, with Mark Vandermeer on play–by–play and Mike Reiss on color.

defeated Holly Huntly 6–4, 7–5.

"She was very impressive going 3–0 this weekend," Lowry said. "She made some key adjustments in the GW match and was the first one off the courts against St. Bonaventure and Xavier."

The other lone point of the match for UMass came in the No. 3 doubles match where Braunstein and Lana Gorodetskaya were winners 8–2.

For the Xavier match, which closed out the weekend, the Minutewomen came away with the 4–3 win. They were powered by Gorodetskaya's play at No. 6 singles in a win over Kristen Wolf 6–2, 3–6, 6–2, which tied things up at three–all before the doubles point.

Gerisomova won her set 6–2, 6–1, and Braunstein blasted Lindsay Weber of Xavier in straight shutout sets to account for two of the first three points.

In the doubles, all three teams won their matches for the doubles point and UMass took the win, 4–3. Gerasimova and Steele won 8–2, Caron and Durant 8–3, and Braunstein and Gorodetskaya 8–4.

The Minutewomen finish the year off at 14–5, 9–3 in the spring.

This past season was one of dramatic improvement, and one which will help the confidence and level of playing ability for UMass next year. The schedule becomes even tougher with negotiations already on the way with teams like Syracuse and Rutgers.

UMass loses only one player, but an important one ir senior Liz Durant, one of the cornerstones of the program whose presence will definitely be missed.

Rain, wind and opponents can't stop UM men's track

By Matthew Perrault
Collegian Staff

There is something special about a team that can perform under adverse conditions. This past weekend, the Massachusetts men's track and field team had more of an opponent in Mother Nature than in Northeastern, Dartmouth and Rhode Island and showed that even the weather can't keep it from victory.

During the nasty rain and wind Saturday, the Minutemen traveled to Boston in hopes of securing their second straight, undefeated regular season. The meet was supposed to be close — last year the Minutemen barely defeated Dartmouth by one point.

The final results were UMass 87, Dartmouth 41.5, Northeastern 37, and Rhode Island 28.5. The Minutemen finished the regular season 8–0, undefeated for the second straight year.

Once again, the big names stepped up for the Minutemen in the clutch. Senior Christian Abbot recorded his first ever collegiate victory in the 100m dash (11.68) and was also on the first place 4x100m team.

Sophomore Tom Toye won the 400m (49.58) and junior Scott Price won the 200m (22.50), and both were also part of the winning 4x100m team with fellow teammate junior Neil Concepcion.

In the field events, freshmen Vic Morency had a great day throwing the javelin, breaking 200 feet with a throw of 200– 9. Sophomore Jan Stevens also threw the shot put well, with a winning toss of 51–1.

"We had a great effort from everybody. Everyone was solid and Coach [Ken O'Brien] was very pleased, especially because the weather was so bad," sophomore Albie Vasquez said.

Next up for UMass is the Penn Relays at the University of Pennsylvania. The meet is being held today and Friday, starting at 11 a.m. both days.

The Minutemen will get a good test at the relays and are sending a very good team down to compete. The record breaking 4x100m team of Toye, Abbott, Concepcion, and Price will be in competition and also will be tackling the 4x200m as well.

Vic Morency will get to measure himself in the javelin and discus. Morency is slowly closing in on UMass' throwing records and these big meets coming up may be the showcase for him to break a few.

Others to watch at the Penn Relays for UMass are Stevens on the shot, junior Andre Roache on the triple jump, and senior Matt Behl on the 10,000m.

feated, undaunted Minutewoman.

Unfortunately, their positive attitudes and confidence could not be carried over into Sunday. UMass' only home regatta was a washout, literally. With snow melting and rain further inducing the problem, the Connecticut River's currents were deemed too fast and flooded for a fair race. It will not be rescheduled.

This weekend UMass looks forward to the Atlantic 10 Championships in Philadelphia. Last year the Minutewomen captured their first championship since being reinstated three years ago.

Coach Jim Dietz said he feels optimistic about the weekend, though the team will have to look out for their competition.

"George Washington will be a lot faster; they were second in points overall last year," he said.

Glass approaching end of college career

First, though, he wants a crack at NCAAs

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

This season has been different from previous years for Brendan Glass for several reasons. While most of those reasons are in his scoring numbers and health, the biggest difference is that this is Glass' final year in collegiate lacrosse.

Saturday, Glass will close out the home portion of his career, but he does not expect a curtain call on his playing days until several weeks down the road.

"To be honest with you, [Saturday being the last home game] hasn't even really hit me that much. It probably will Saturday, but I'm just looking forward to the game," Glass said.

"I don't plan on ending my career until another three or four weeks from now."

Three of four weeks from now will put UMass securely in the NCAA Tournament, something Glass wants with a passion.

"I work lacrosse camps all summer and it's like someone said, 'You're only as good as your last game.' That's what people remember," he said.

"I want to be remembered for going to the NCAA Tournament. People aren't going to remember the games in March. Everyone knows about being in the tournament. I don't want to go to camp this summer and say 'We shoulda, woulda, coulda.'"

Glass is trying to ensure he won't be asking "what if" this summer by not only providing a consistent force on attack, but by helping the younger players develop.

"Being a senior, my role is helping the younger guys along. My scoring has obviously been way down from years past, it doesn't matter as long as we're winning," he said.

It is obvious to UMass coach Greg Cannella that Glass wants to pass his knowledge on to the younger players.

"He's sort of taken Jason Heinze under his wing," Cannella said. "He talks to him all the time out on the field. What I like about the way he goes about things, is he tries to push those guys and make them understand they're good enough to play here now."

Being able to make the freshmen understand that they are ready to play at the collegiate level comes from Glass' personal experience. He saw game action immediately in his freshman season, and he responded with the third highest point production and the most goals on the team.

He continued that success in his sophomore campaign. Playing in every game, he became only the second person in UMass history to lead the team in goals as both a freshman and a sophomore.

Junior year continued the trend for Glass, who also added the honor of leading the team in points.

But senior year was a slight change. His shin splints acted up in preseason practice, aggravating him and hindering his goal production. It did not help that several of the early season games were on astroturf fields.

Though the lack of scoring was difficult to adjust to, Glass bided his time. When the team began playing on grass every day, Glass — and opposing teams —noticed the improvement.

"I didn't use the shins as an excuse, but as soon as we got back on grass my game changed. My game is all running and it took over me mentally," Glass said. "Coach really noticed that the most, he knew I didn't want to make my shins the big excuse.

"My legs are feeling a lot better, they're getting there. But, if I have fewer goals this year than in my freshman year, I could care less. As long as we're winning games."

Despite the injury, Cannella said Glass was still a big factor in those early games.

"Everybody expects so much of Brendan and Brendan expects so much of Brendan. He was still out there on the field and did a lot of the things that helps the team win," Cannella said. "Overall, I think it helped our team. It doesn't help while he's hurt, but it helps because other guys realize they have to step up."

Step up they have, as the Minutemen have jumped to a No. 9 ranking, a 7–4 record and Saturday's date with the Orangemen — Glass' senior day.

Glass knows his days of collegiate lacrosse are drawing to a close, and while he is focusing on his upcoming games, he is also looking ahead to life after college.

An English major, Glass hopes to go into teaching fifth or sixth grade, a decision he said he made while coaching kids in a summer lacrosse camp.

"I work all summer with the kids," he said. "It keeps you young. I also like the fact that with teaching I can do other things in the summer like lacrosse camps."

He reinforced that notion this year, when he did a practicum at Hadley Elementary.

"It makes me feel good, because I was only there once a week, but I guess I had an influence on the kids, being an athlete and all," he said.

With his lacrosse background and the training he has received, Glass also has not ruled out the idea of some day going into coaching.

"I just plan on teaching now and go into coaching if it's there. I'm sure I'll help on in youth organizations or town leagues," he said.

Before he can concentrate on lesson plans or even summer vacation, Glass must first attend to the business at hand — finishing his collegiate career.

"I want to go to the NCAA Tournament," he said. "That's how it should end, in the tournament."

Women's tennis takes third place in A-10 Tourney

By Mike Corey
Collegian Staff

This past weekend at the Atlantic 10 Tournament in Blacksburg, Va., the Massachusetts women's tennis team lived up to the expectations by finishing in third place, the highest finish in school history.

The Minutewomen were ranked No. 3 going into the tournament, and they held their seed en route to improving last year's performance of fourth place.

"The women are feeling good because they definitely made some history," assistant coach Tom Lowry said. "In terms of a UMass standpoint, it's tremendous what they've done."

The Minutewomen started the tournament out with a bye In the first round, then beat St. Bonaventure 4–0, before losing to George Washington 5–2 in the semi-finals. Playing for third place the Minutewomen then edged out Xavier 4–3 for the win.

Even with the strong finish, second place was not far out of reach in the match against GW, although UMass came up a little short in the loss.

"Second place was definitely a possibility," Lowry said. "The GW coach said it was the best match they played all year. It could have easily been 5–2 the other way."

With the third place finish though, it shows an increasing improvement which has been a trend with the program in the five years since it was reinstated. From the beginning of the rebuilding process, the Minutewomen have only gotten better, and the result this past weekend gives them something to aim for and continue to improve on in the future.

"Getting to the final might have been a little premature, because then we'd always expect that," Lowry said. "It's a gradual improvement, and it gives us room for next year. They're very happy with what they did, and I think they're still hungry to go back."

On day 1 of the tournament this past Friday, the Minutewomen were hoping that they might have escaped the horrid New England weather down in Virginia, and were ready to get down to playing some serious tennis. However that was not the case.

A windy and snowy afternoon forced the availability of courts to be cut down from 24 to only six and then divided among the men's and women's teams. Finally, getting on the courts at 9 p.m. instead of the scheduled start of noon, the Minutewomen wasted no time in escaping the harsh reality of nature once more, as they played four straight singles matches and won them all to end the match 4–0.

No. 1 singles player Ola Gerasomiva, No. 2 singles junior Marie-Christine Caron, No. 3 sophomore Jackie Braunstein, and No. 5 junior Caroline Steele all won their respective matches, not allowing their competitors any more than two total points in either match on their way to straight set victories.

The semifinal match against GW the following day was a 5–2 decision in favor of the Colonials. The Minutewomen put up a strong battle in the match though, as Gerasomova played hard against Helen Andrews, who was named Atlantic 10 performer of the year, but lost 6–3, 6–1.

"She played a great first set, but didn't quite have the energy to stay in it the second set," Lowry said.

Braunstein at No. 3 singles played brilliantly, as she did all weekend, going 3–0 in the singles matches to close out the year in style. She extremely fast but they ended up pretty far behind, but we expected that."

She attributed the team's success to its conditioning.

"We train [our women] to be prepared for every condition. All crews rowed in the same conditions and all our women had to row well to prove their speed."

The second varsity crew proved victorious as well, with a winning time of 7:07.9 while Columbia took second 7:15.8 and Northeastern a distant third at 7:22.5.

A valiant effort was put forth by the UMass first novice team which ended up trailing Columbia by a tenth of a second with a time of 6:52.7, while Columbia won at 6:52.6 and Northeastern took third at 7:10.2.

During the first 100m of the race, UMass experienced equipment difficulties but still almost overcame their adversities to win. UMass's second novice crew cruised to a 6:49.5 victory over Northeastern whose time was 7:01.9.

Senior rower Mary Kate Ferrante said she was happy with the win.

"It was a great win considering the conditions. Both varsity and JV being really confident proves how strong that we can be."

According to Hubbard, Saturday proved to be,"a great overall team effort, it proved the depth of our program."

It was especially gratifying because, while the Connecticut River is no dumping ground, it isn't quite comparable to the Charles River where Northeastern trains. But that doesn't seem to matter to the unde-

Baseball drops CCSU in Beanpot prelude

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

After being selected for CNN's "Play of the Day," getting airtime on all the Boston TV stations and most major newspapers, an even eliciting a "You're not gonna get 'em," from SportsCenter's Keith Olbermann, you would think the least the Massachusetts baseball team could get was a day off before today's Beanpot final with Harvard.

But that just wasn't the case.

The Minutemen were back at it yesterday, taking on Central Connecticut State, a team they destroyed 20–1 two weeks ago. Despite having to sweat it out in the late innings, UMass beat the Blue Devils 8–6, extending their winning streak to 12 games. Massachusetts is now 22–6 on the year.

Freshman pitcher Travis Veracka almost made it two straight no-hitters, but his bid was stopped in the fifth. Still, he picked up his third win of the year, pitching seven strong innings. Righfielder Pete Gautreau had three hits, including a home run to lead the offense. Ryan Cameron put out the Blue Devil fire in the ninth for his first save.

The Minutemen face Harvard this afternoon for the Beanpot Championship in a 2 p.m. start. Last year, Harvard stopped UMass's 18 game–winning streak with an 11–10 win in Amherst.

This is the eighth year of the Beanpot baseball tournament. The field also includes Northeastern, Boston College and Harvard. Massachusetts stepped in for Boston University in 1996, after BU dropped its baseball program.

Last year, Scott Barnsby tossed a complete game four–hitter, striking out 11, to lead UMass past Northeastern University 1–0. But since Barnsby might be a little tired after pitching a no–hitter and running around the outfield in celebration, the start will go to Northampton sophomore Adam Robinson.

Yesterday's no–hitter was the first no–hitter in 40 years for any Minuteman. Ralph Lumenti was the last UMass hurler to turn the trick, shutting down Rhode Island 2–0 in Amherst on April 13, 1957. Lumenti struck out 18 Rams that day. It was also the first no–hitter in Fenway Park in 32 years. Former Red Sox pitcher Dave Morehead blanked Cleveland 2–0 on September 16, 1965.

Robinson is 1–0 on the year, with a 6.30 ERA and 11 strikeouts in 10 innings pitched. After beating Central Connecticut in their first meeting, Robinson was shelled by Maine for five runs in the first inning of April 16's 9–8 Minuteman victory.

Varsity and novice crews roll to wins over weekend

By Kathleen Ralls
Collegian Correspondent

If Cal Ripken is a posterboy for milk, then the Massachusetts women's crew was a posterteam for drive and hard work this past weekend.

On Saturday, the Minutewoman took it to formerly undefeated rival Northeastern and Columbia, capturing first place in two of the three races.

The varsity eight crew rowed in at a time of 6:59.5 while Northeastern logged a second place finish of 7:10.2 with Columbia rounding out the field at 7:29.6. That 10.7 second lead equals four lengths of a boat, a decisive lead for the Minutewomen.

Assistant coach Kate Hubbard said, "Northeastern would be

Hofstra poses stiff softball challenge

MIR GAO / COLLEGIAN

Sam Cardenas, UMass' record holder for most records, will be called on to produce at the plate when the Minutewomen face Hofstra today.

By Corey Peter Goodman

Someone once said that all good things must come to an end. Unfortunately for the Massachusetts softball team, whose 14–game unbeaten streak was shattered last weekend in Philadelphia, the idiot was right.

UMass is on a bit of a slide of late, dropping four of six since the streak came to an end. But hopefully the bitter taste of defeat is gone for the Minutewomen, after swiftly disposing of the University of Connecticut, 11–3 in their last game.

However, when the Flying Dutchwomen of Hofstra land on Totman Field today at 3 p.m., UMass will face one of its stiffest challenges of the season.

Though the nine Hofstra isn't a huge one in the college softball world, the team is enjoying an excellent campaign, and is most likely NCAA tournament–bound.

The Dutchwomen (28–13, 8–0) fly in with one of the most potent lineups in the northeast. They bat .321 as a team, including six players with .340 or better, and they've hit 12 long–balls so far.

Highlighted in this lineup are the Smiths, Jen and Alicia. Though not related, and both just freshmen, the Smiths are the one–two punch in both the starting lineup and the pitching rotation.

Offensively, Jen's .400 batting average is tops on the team,

Review by Israel Prize committee ordered

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Israel Prize committee must review its decision to honor a journalist accused of racism by Ethiopian Jewish leaders, the Supreme Court ruled yesterday.

Shmuel Schnitzer, an editor and senior columnist at the Maariv newspaper, wrote in 1994 that Ethiopian Jews who have converted to Christianity should not be allowed to immigrate to Israel. He claimed they were not Jews and had a higher–than–average rate of AIDS infection.

Schnitzer was selected for the 1997 Israel Prize for his life's work as a journalist. Six Israel Prizes, each worth $7,500, are awarded annually; past winners have excelled in philosophy, nuclear physics, poetry and other areas.

The Supreme Court said yesterday that Israel Prize judges had not been given a copy of Schnitzer's 1994 article or an Israeli Press Council ruling criticizing it as likely to offend members of the Ethiopian community.

It ordered both be submitted to the prize committee, overruling Education Minister Zevulun Hammler's decision not to interfere with the panel's choice.

"I can live without the prize if I have to," Schnitzer said, refusing to comment further on the ruling.

Closing arguments herd in Army sex case

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. (AP) — The former drill instructor on trial for rape used fear and intimidation to force female trainees to have sex, a prosecutor said yesterday in closing arguments. Staff Sgt. Delmar Simpson is charged with raping six women a total of 19 times and could face life in prison if convicted of even one rape charge.

The jury was expected to get the case this afternoon after the defense gave its closing arguments.

Simpson, 32, is the central figure in the biggest sex scandal in Army history. The investigation of sexual misconduct has resulted in criminal charges against 12 at Aberdeen Proving Ground and prompted an investigation of Army bases worldwide.

"This is a case of the accused using his power, his easy access and his ability to control — an unscrupulous drill sergeant grossly misusing his position to force his attentions on trainees," said Capt. Theresa Gallagher, the prosecutor.

Ms. Gallagher said Simpson frightened his trainees so badly that some were afraid to protest the rapes.

One 20–year–old private who never told Simpson she did not want to have sex "was screaming at the top of her lungs inside of herself," Ms. Gallagher said.

"He manipulated his command. He manipulated his fellow drill sergeants and his trainees. He created an environment of fear, intimidation and control," she said.

Mike Barnacle to speak at 1997 senior commencement ceremony

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

Boston Globe editorialist Mike Barnacle will deliver the main address, as well as receive an honorary doctor of humane letters degree at this year's University of Massachusetts commencement ceremonies.

The ceremonies will be held on Sunday, May 25 at 10:30 a.m. in Warren P. McGuirk Stadium and will be attended by about 4,000 bachelor's degree candidates, friends and family members.

Barnicle, who has been writing editorial columns for the Globe since 1973, is a graduate of Boston University and a native of Fitchburg. He has become well–known for what many call his "witty perspective" on social and political issues of the region and nation.

Barnicle's columns appear three times weekly in the Globe; and he is also a featured commentator on "Chronicle," one of Boston's nightly newsmagazine shows.

Stephen Simurda, a lecturer in the UMass Journalism Department, said that Barnicle is one of the great local columnists in America.

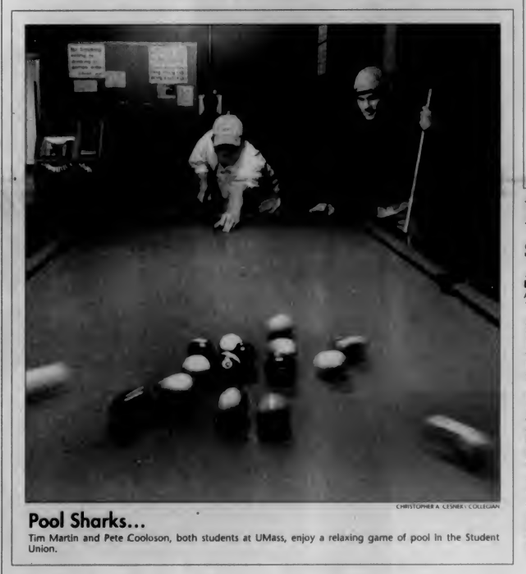
"To write a local news–oriented column is challenging. He's one of the best for doing that," Simurda said. "He's extremely productive and he's extremely good.... And he's a supporter of public education. Maybe he'll even trash [UMass President] Billy Bulger."

Associate Chancellor James Leheny, coordinator of the commencement committee, said that Barnicle was chosen because he has been a backer of public education.

"He was endorsed by the Board as an outspoken proponent of public education," Leheny said. "He was unanimously approved by the committee."

Student Government Association (SGA) President Lia Wong said that while she has nothing against Barnicle, she thinks It would be great to have a UMass alumnus speak to UMass graduates.

"I think it would be nice to have a UMass alumnus who has achieved. It would reflect on how good the education is here," Wong said, "so students know alumni can achieve."



Sean Carter, Student Trustee, said he thinks Barnicle will do a good job and that he will be entertaining.

"I'm sure graduation will be an amazing event for everyone involved," Carter said.

Also slated for the graduation weekend are a number of other ceremonies, including a separate Commencement ceremony for master's and doctoral students, Phi Kappa Beta Installation, the School of Nursing Pinning Ceremony and the ROTC Joint Commissioning Ceremony.

Final provost candidate interviewed by students

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts provost candidate Cora Marrett declared her support of Chancellor Scott's Strategic Action plan at last night's meeting with students.

"No leading university works for anything but a balance of areas," Marrett said. "That is exactly what I read the Strategic Action Plan as doing."

Marrett, who is currently a professor of sociology and African–American studies at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, spoke to a group of five students in the Campus Center last night, addressing their questions on a variety of subjects.

Marrett began the meeting by introducing herself and stating that she was interested in hearing what the students had to say.

"I come with a profound interest in general learning," Marret said. "I am especially concerned with student experiences and student learning. I really appreciate the chance to meet with people at the ground level who can give me a perspective."

The first question addressed to Marrett concerned issues of access to the University for disabled students.

"You should provide everyone the opportunity for achievement in the academic environment," Marret responded. "You should make learning possible for everyone."

Continuing education student Jenniffer Restle asked Marret to be more specific about what she would do for disabled students.

"As provost, I would work to make this [difficulties for disabled students] become a rarity by fostering an environment of learning," Marret answered.

Marret was then asked to explain why she was interested in coming to UMass.

"I thought here is an institution on the move," Marret replied. "I am pleased about what I do see as possibilities for this institution."

The conversation then shifted to the budget issues facing UMass and how the budget is being allocated.

Marrett said that "the budget issues are serious ones" and that "there just isn't money" to fund everything. She said that restructuring was a necessity in order to provide funding for new initiatives.

"As new things are proposed, the only way you can do that it through reallocation," Marrett said. "Otherwise, there is not possibility for growth."

Marret went on to discuss increasing the amount of research conducted on campus and said that she thought undergraduates should be involved in research opportunities.

"Let me try to allay this concern of the conflict between research and teaching," Marret said. "They should not be thought of as incompatible."

In response to further questions on the issue by junior social thought and political economy major Nikki Morse, Marret said that she believed the objective of the University to be learning, both through classes and research.

"The goal is learning," Marrett said. "It is more than just what will take place in

Rebel leaders repeatedly shot in the head and body

By Paul Haven
Associated Press

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A rebel leader and several other guerrillas who died in the government raid on the Japanese ambassador's residence were repeatedly shot in the head and body, a Lima newspaper reported yesterday.

"We surrender! We surrender!" La Republica quoted two young rebel women as shouting when commandos stormed the residence Tuesday to end the 126–day hostage crisis. Seventy–one hostages were freed in the raid, which left one hostage, two army soldiers and all 14 rebels dead.

The opposition newspaper said Tupac Amaru leader Nestor Cerpa, who lay on top of another dead rebel on the stairway of the mansion, was shot in the face and body several times. He also had a bullet wound in his forehead, and other rebels had similar wounds, the newspaper said.

La Republica cited an unidentified intelligence agent who was monitoring electronic eavesdropping equipment during the raid, as well as military sources.

El Comercio newspaper said the tunnels used by commandos to begin the raid were 10 feet under ground, equipped with electricity and ventilation systems. Commandos used about nine pounds of plastic explosives to blow holes in the floor and ground to stun the rebels above them.

The commandos had been waiting beneath the dipkomatic compound for two days when President Alberto Fujimori, angered by rebel threats, gave the order that triggered the explosion under a large reception area where eight of the rebels had been playing soccer for 20 minutes.

Using a pointer and a model of the compound, Fujimori on Wednesday, described the network of tunnels and other battle plans that enabled troops to surprise the rebels, who had taken

Safey of refugees unknown as thousands flee Rawandan camp

By Hrvoje Hranjski
Associated Press

KASESE, Zaire — Only days ago, this squalid refugee camp held 55,000 Rwandan Hutus, many of them sick with cholera and malaria. Yesterday, the camp was deserted, and the fate of the refugees a mystery.

"I'm absolutely shocked. There was a camp here four days ago. People were sick, hungry and too weak to walk. Where are they?" asked Filippo Grandi, an official with the U.N. refugee agency.

Anti–government rebels who have captured half of Zaire since September sealed off the area around the Kasese camp on Monday, after villagers living nearby went on a rampage because they blamed refugees for the murder of six locals. Zairian mobs — long resentful of Hutu refugees receiving food and other aid — looted U.N. warehouses and attacked aid workers, journalists and refugees. Yesterday, rebels accompanied U.N. human rights workers, Rwandan government officials and reporters into Kasese.

There was no one left.

"We're very concerned about their lives. And we need answers from rebels about their fate," Grandi said.

The rebels said they, too, were puzzled.

"I know as much as you do. I have to find out what's going on," said Moise Nyarugabo Muhizi, an aide to rebel leader Laurent Kabila who accompanied the group.

The eerie emptiness of Kasese contrasted with flights from other Rwandan camps where hundreds — sometimes thousands — were left behind because they were too old, weak or ill to run.

At Kasese there was no one, even though at least 5,000 hospital patients and 3,000 unaccompanied children had been waiting for help that never came.

When the team arrived at Kasese, there were gunshots and the occasional whistle of bullets over the palm–frond huts and crushed plastic fence.

Moise blamed the shooting on "a front line nearby," although there was little sign of combat.

When the team approached a mass grave where Zairian Red Cross workers had been burying about 60 refugees a day — victims of malaria, dysentery and cholera — the shooting intensified and the rebels ordered

Master's thesis displayed in Herter

By Laura Forster
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Herter Gallery will be opening a week–long Masters of Fine Arts in Painting thesis exhibition beginning this Sunday, April 27 at 2 p.m.

The exhibit, entitled "In Gourd We Trust," is three years of work done by international artist, Nnamudi Mokwuyne, known mostly as "Nam."

Nigerian–born Nam, who has lived in the United States for the past 17 years, said he combines his cultural backgrounds in his creations.

"I am a synthesis of two cultures and I think this comes out in my art work," Nam said.

For the last six years, Nam's work has featured the bottle gourd, (Lagenaria Siceraria) in representing the individual human being. The gourd, a fruit of African origin, holds practical, religious and symbolic significance in African, Latin American and Asian cultures.

Around this gourd, Nam uses supporting and often repeating, visual symbols to create pictographs. These pictographs embody Nam's thesis that individual mobile liberty (IML) is an intangible natural resource which is easier accessed by individuals who have socio–political and financial influence.

Nam draws the IML from his own "fortunate" ability to travel outside of Nigeria which, he said, was due to his parents' occupations and the resources available to him, which are not available to many Nigerians.

"Moving across borders gives an individual a greater chance for success and of achieving their dreams... [as well as] a greater ability to process information and a greater amount of opportunities which are available to you," Nam said.

Nam's work reflects both his reaction and sensitivity to the limited progress his people have had access to and his bright hope for the future. Nam's sensitive reaction is in response to Nigeria's annulled democratic elections, the Ogoni tragedy, rising crime level, youth vagrancy, changing immigration policies, and exploitation of Nigeria by foreign oil companies and collaborators.

Prior to coming to UMass, Nam received his BA in Studio Arts and completing a pre–med curriculum at Dartmouth College. In addition, Nam designed sportswear for two years in Boston before he came to UMass for his artistic and entrepreneurial studies.

Nam has made a number of various accomplishments while at UMass which include: teaching undergraduate courses under an Assistantship; a nomination for a Distinguished Teacher's Award; a community service award from the Student Union Commission; and a listing in the company of accomplished artists in the French international journal L'Art African Contemporain.

After he has finished the oral defense and written portion of his thesis evaluation, Nam plans to work towards his MBA for next year. Nam said he would like to work in business eventually.

"I am a realist... I adjust to whatever situations come about," Nam said.

In celebration of his accomplishment, Nam will be having a club party tomorrow at 9 p.m. at Club Metro in Northampton. The party will feature a new Diaspora club mix with DJ Hiro and DJ Rich Nunez and is open to all.

over the compound during a cocktail party on Dec. 17.

The leftist rebels were demanding the release of hundreds of their colleagues jailed in Peru and Bolivian prisons, something Fujimori adamantly refused to do.

Fujimori said in a news conference Wednesday that hostages helped pull off the raid by opening a door onto a second-floor roof to escape and let the soldiers in. A guerrilla closed the door, forcing the commandos to blow it up and rush in to conclude the lightning-style raid.

Police, meanwhile, removed the bodies of the rebel hostage-takers killed in the raid, while the 71 freed hostages returned home. The other hostage, Supreme Court Justice Carlos Giusti, died of a heart attack after being shot during the takeover.

Television footage Wednesday showed Fujimori touring the Japanese ambassador's residence and stopping for a moment over the body of Cerpa, lying face-up on a curved staircase in the mansion's main hall.

The extraordinary strike ends a crisis that was an embarrassment to Fujimori, who often boasted of having rid the country of terrorist activity that primarily centered on the Shining Path rebels.

It also is a catastrophic blow for the leftist Tupac Amaru, most of whose leaders are jailed with membership steadily dwindling. The government said it is still searching for Hugo Avellaneda, believed to be the most powerful Tupac Amaru rebel at large. Cerpa's threat to restrict doctors' visits to the hostages was the final straw, Fujimori said. The presi-

Low picture taking turnout for new student I.D. card

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

Administrators of the new University of Massachusetts student I.D. card, scheduled to be issued this September, are worried about the low student turnout for taking photos, although the I.D. Office has set up alternate locations across campus.

According to Linda Overing, manager of the I.D. Office, time is an important factor because the end of the semester is approaching and new I.D.s for next year cannot be processed over the summer without the digitized picture of the student taken before leaving campus.

"What's going to happen is the old I.D. will no longer work [next semester] for such things as the meal plan and dorm access," Overing said. "We need photos on file so we can mail new cards to students over the summer."

In addition to problems accessing the meal plan or passing through dorm security, Overing said, students will not be able to utilize new features of the card, such as the debit account for use at on-campus vendors.

The I.D. Office, which is located in Franklin Dining Hall in Central Residence Area, has been taking pictures during normal business hours (9 a.m. – 5 p.m.) since February. Satellite locations for photography were set-up on the Campus Center Concourse for three weeks last month, and one is currently operating in the Hampden Lobby for Southwest residents.

Overing said the I.D. office did well the three weeks they spent in the Campus Center, but are concerned about turnout from students living in Southwest Area.

"This is the second week that the I.D. Office has been operating out of Hampden," Overing said. "Unfortunately, to this point, we have a disappointing turnout from students, despite numerous ads, posters and personalized mailings."

An incentive consisting of coupons for Antonio's pizza and soda the Hampden Snack Bar has been offered to those students who take their picture in Southwest as well.

The I.D. office has taken over 6,000 pictures so far, Overing said, but that is out of the some 20,000 members of the University community who will need photos for the new I.D.

"Our emphasis is to get primarily those students living on campus and using the meal plan," Overing said. "Incoming students will have their photos taken during orientation."

Overing said the I.D. office is looking into returning to the Campus Center for the rest of the semester, in addition to the Franklin Dining Hall hours. She stressed that students must come in before they leave campus in May.

"Otherwise, we anticipate enormous lines next semester," Overing said.

the team to leave after just 30 minutes.

Peter Kessler, a U.N. human rights spokesman based in Nairobi, Kenya, said the team found a fresh dirt mound in the camp, but didn't have time to examine it.

The refugees — among an estimated 100,000 camped south of the eastern Zairian regional capital of Kisangani — are among more than 1 million Rwandans who fled their country in 1994 after a Tutsi guerrilla movement ousted the Hutu government. They feared reprisals for the slaughter by Hutus of at least 500,000 Tutsis and Hutu moderates.

classrooms."

Marrett concluded the meeting by asking the students what they liked most about UMass and inviting them to give her suggestions of topics to bring up in her meetings with President Bulger's office today.

"Let me again say what is valuable is that you have brought a real concern about academics to this meeting," Marrett said. "What I have gained from this is that there is a community of students dedicated to these issues. I will be as open as possible, always willing to hear."

Cora Marrett was the final provost candidate to be interviewed. The search committee will be making its recommendations to Chancellor Scott in the next two weeks. Scott will then make the final decision to appoint the new provost.

Should police be able to obtain search warrants based on photographic evidence provided by photo shops?

Middle East: a U.S. problem

Will the seeds of rational thinking ever take root and spring forth in the Middle East? That tinderbox region has already exploded with five wars since 1948. There are now foreboding signs that another hair-trigger point is threatening the region again.

Even though there is no longer the fear of a "superpower" confrontation, the peaceful resolution of the multi-dimensional problems in the Middle East remains a primary concern to the United States. The pivotal point of contention that must be settled, once and for all, before all other issues throughout the Middle East can be addressed, is the decades-long battle of wills over the contested land that some call Israel and others call Palestine.

Charolett Rhoads

For a brief while — immediately following the signing of the Oslo Peace Awards on the White House Lawn in September 1993 — the world had high hopes that at long last the two peoples, the Israelis and the Palestinians, were coming to their senses. That euphoric hope was short lived and, in spite of all the efforts to keep the agreement on track, there has been one tragedy or violation after another to stall the peace process.

The latest setback, churning up another round of fury, is Israel's decision to build yet another housing development in East Jerusalem where the Palestinians hope to have their future capital. What is particularly shocking to some of us, to say nothing of the provocation to the Palestinian people, is that Israel is going back on its word to the United States. Israel agreed not to build anymore settlements in the occupied territories if the United States provided a $10 billion loan guarantee. Then President Bush and Secretary of State Baker made it perfectly clear to Israel that the loan grantee was totally contingent upon the cessation of building further settlements on the land they occupied following the '67 War. (Israel has been in violation of international law since 1967 because it was supposed to return the land captured.)

Back in 1990, I travelled to several Middle East countries with a diverse 48-member delegation organized by Washington-based Pax World Service, of which I was then president. During our three week journey, we met with highly placed Israeli government officials, including Moshe Arens and Shimon Peres, members of the Palestinian leadership inside and outside the Occupied Territories, Syria's President Asad, Jordan's King Hussein, and Egypt's then Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, Boutros-Boutros Ghali, and many others.

The American delegation represented many professional and religious affiliations, including retired foreign service officers, a prominent rabbi, a Lutheran bishop, a Catholic priest, a former senator and former congressman and several businesspeople. There were Arab Americans, Jewish Americans and Christians. Irrespective of faith and politics, we were all firmly convinced that there would never be peace in the Middle East until both the Palestinians and Israelis felt secure that their ancestral linkages would be respected and preserved.

But here we are, seven years later, with the parties still contesting who has rightful claim to the land. For that matter, it has now been almost 50 years since all this began.

Was the United Nations fair in its decision to carve out 53 percent of the land historically known as Palestine — which has been home to the Palestinians for centuries — for the new nation of Israel? Was Israel right to claim another 25 percent of the land by "creating facts on the ground" with settlements in the conquered territory while simultaneously bulldozing Palestinian homes?

Has the United States been wise to provide one-third of its annual foreign aid to Israel? Has it been fair to Developing Countries whose needs are so much greater than the needs of this one small nation?

What can the United States do to help sculpt and mold a lasting peace in the Middle East before its opportunity shatters? President Clinton and his Administration can be commended for its untiring efforts to bring all the parties together, especially in light of the growing tide of extremists in the region. As they proceed they could glean a bit of wisdom from our first President, George Washington,

"Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all... The nations which indulges toward an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree, a slave. It is slave to its animosity and to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest... a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils... It leads to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied by others, which is apt doubly to injure that nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained and by exciting jealousy, ill will and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld."

There will be peace in the Middle East when the United States lets go its passionate attachment. Israel will finally mature as the truly democratic nation it was meant to be. And when the Palestinians are no longer oppressed by an unfeeling occupier and settlers with uzzis intent upon maximizing real estate, they will put away their attitude and stones in order to build their own rightful nation. Then, like dominos in reverse, all other issues with Arab nations in the Middle East can be constructively resolved to assure prosperity and security for all.

MRTA Statement

Editor's Note: The following is a statement issued by the National Direcorate of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement (MRTA) on April 22 following the end of the siege at the Japanese Ambassador's residence in Lima, Peru.

On April 22, 1997, at 3 p.m., military and police units stormed the embassy, thereby murdering all the members of our commando and one other person, according to reports so far. The National Directorate of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement (MRTA) would like to report the following to the international community:

1. A new crime has been commited against the best sons and daughters of the people, a crime carried out by the terrorist regime of Alberto Fujimori, with the compliance of the governments of Japan and North America.

2. During the one-sided battle, the members of Edgar Sanchez Commando displayed the morale of Tupac Amaristas, the decision for victory or death, to stand for the liberation of our people and against neo-liberalism, which has only brought our people sorrow and oppression.

3. With the murder of Comandante Nestor Cerpa and the members of the Edgar Sanchez Commando, the genocidal Fujimori regime seeks to convince our people and the international community, once again, that the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement has reached its end.

4. We, Tupac Amaristas, lower our flags in honor of our murdered brothers and sisters, strengthened in our resolve to continue the fight for a peaceful society with social justice.

5. We say to our people and to our militants all across the country, the members of the Edgar Sanchez Commando did not die, they have reached the level of heroes, they will be with us during all of our mobilizations and actions.

The workers' commander from the people of Tupac Amaru, in all of his human qualities, was a slap in the face of the genocidal generals, and they could not endure this.

• Comandante Nestor Cerpa Cartolini... presente!
You are in our memories!
• Comando Edgar Sanchez... presente!
You are in our memories!

The people of Tupac Amaru will continue to fight against:
• The Neo-Liberal model and against state terrorism!
• The people will not surrender!
• Neither surrender nor defeat... the struggle continues!

Letters to the Editor

We need the facts on cloning

To the Editor:

As an alumnus of UMass, it disturbs me to see rhetoric without substance. Such was Kim Wilson's editorial of April 24.

"However, the University of Massachusetts in not in this business of producing animals for market, and therefore the relevance and benefits of continuing to serve corporate interests are unclear."

— Ms.Wilson, I am sure the benefits are clear to the researchers. Maybe they are unclear to you because of lack of scientific training, but that does not make them 'unclear.'

"Biohazardous substances, use of vertebrate animals, radioactive materials, recombinant DNA and carcinogenic substances are also involved in the research."

— Did you know that your smoke alarm has radioactive substances in it? And many commonly used solvents used in lab work are 'carcinogenic'? We don't drink them — we use them scientifically. But we promise not to spill any in your coffee.

"The University fails to serve in its mission to provide diverse public higher education every time it accepts funding from industrial sources — student tuition and public tax funds are co-opted by private interests."

— Do you want a UMass system? Industrial research dollars help support each and every student at UMass. Universities, public and private, are going to rely less and less on government contracts and more on industry and technology transfer issues. The students would scream bloody murder at a tuition increase, and taxpayers do their fair share. Industrial research is a reality at a world-class institution such as UMass.

"Due to the growing concern about the invasive nature of this research, its dangerous biomedical application, and the moral problems concerning the ownership of life forms, we, the Undergraduate Employment Organization, believe transgenic animal research must be stopped until those issues are addressed by the University community."

— "Invasive"? "Dangerous"? "Moral Problems"? Did we have our "Rhetoric for Dummies" book open when we wrote this? How about some facts, solid arguments, or anything other than 'buzz' words and conjecture?

Let's open up debates about science to include science. Fact, not rhetoric, will serve out this debate. I am not, by the way, advocating any of the research described in the article — I don't have the facts. After reading your editorial, I thought I might have had a few to spare — but I was sorely wrong. Take some time — gather some real data — then write an article that we can all learn from.

Earth Day UMass style

To the Editor:

I was shocked, sickened and amused to see that our school chose to celebrate Earth Day by applying pesticides to the lawns all around campus. You may have noticed the hundreds of little yellow signs that warned us to keep off of the grass. How appropriate a reminder for all students and faculty that chemicals in our environment are ubiquitous and nearly inescapable.

Given the condition of many facilities on campus I'm sure that the University could spend our money on better things than lawn chemicals. Maybe we could save enough money someday to re-build the library so it won't rain bricks upon us or grade the yellow parking lot so that it looks less like a relief map of the moon.

Ultimately, I would just like to see the University stop or drastically curtail it's use of pesticides and herbicides on campus. They are not good for the environment and not healthy for humans or wildlife.

IRA debate continues

To the Editor:

This reply is in response to Andrew Buschenfeld's letter in the Collegian on April 18. Let me first point out that Mr. Buschenfeld should have taken the time to fully read my reply on the 16th. If he had, he would have noticed that I said I was born in Ireland, thus leading one to the conclusion that I am not "American" as he stated. It is disheartening (and not surprising) that you jumped to conclusions about my nationality without looking at the facts right in front of your face.

You mention that the central point of the debate "must be whether violence is a legitimate course of action for such an organization [The Irish Republican Army]." My question is how do you define "organization"? Does MI5 (British Internal Security) count as such an organization? MI5 has a full-time staff of 1,850 people and an annual budget of 200 million Pounds. They themselves reported that 39 percent of their resources are directed against Irish and domestic "terrorism." On Jan. 10, 1996 The Security Services Bill was passed unopposed in the British House of Commons. This bill allows MI5 to monitor telephones, intercept mail, and enter the homes and offices of crime 'suspects.' [Source: Intelligence Newsletter (Indigo Publications), pg. 4, 1/25/96]

Are we to assume the only reasons that murderous and immoral acts committed by MI5 and other government agencies can be justified are because they are part of the British Empires agenda and have a budget and staff? Let me state that I do not condone violence in the name of civilian government agencies. Every year over 30,000 phone taps are placed on behalf of MI5. Betty Boothroyd, the first woman Speaker of the House of Commons, was asked to spy for MI5 on four Labour Party Members of Parliament (MPs) who belong to the left-wing Tribune group. When she refused MI5 had her banned as a security risk from the Foreign Office and "produced" evidence that she was having an affair with a Soviet diplomat. [Source: The Sunday Times (Britain), 2/18/96.]

I never "branded you" ignorant of the Irish situation Mr. Buschenfeld. Maybe you should review your definition of organization. Just because the IRA does not have the backing of a government and apathetic constituency, one cannot immediately dismiss their actions. When you refer to bombings for a political end being despicable in your letter, did the notion of British Paratroopers opening fire on unarmed demonstrators also being despicable cross your mind? Do you expect the oppressed to remain silent because "The Government" is the oppressor? You also draw a "clumsy and historically naive parallel" between the Oklahoma Bombing and an attack on a shopping mall. The MAJOR difference is that in bombing attacks conducted by the IRA, a coded warning is given in advance to the police. It is the aim of the IRA to disrupt daily life in order to bring attention to the madness in Northern Ireland, NOT to kill innocent people. In the explosion that took place last year at Canary Wharf, London, the police ignored warnings that were given hours in advance.

Like many others, you have been brainwashed by the media and popular culture to believe that violence conducted on behalf of a government has some glorious form of legitimacy in contrast to the same violence carried out by another "organization," be it branded a terrorist/paramilitary/extremist by the so-called press.

Sinn Fein and the IRA have come to the peace table with hopes to end the troubles but have been met on the other side with empty chairs and empty promises. What more do you want of them?

Hallraker is hardcore

Most of you were in attendance of the Very Loud Music Festival in Northampton this weekend. While I was not able to attend the whole festival, actually I only saw a little of it, I heard it was a tremendous success. Although I only attended a small part of the festival there were two moments that helped strengthen my faith in hardcore music. So here goes my impressions of this weekends festival.

Ensign out of New Jersey started the festivities and showed what hardcore is really all about. If anyone remembers their appearance at the festival last year you would remember that most of the kids stood there staring at them like they were at a funeral.

This year was a completely different story. As soon as Ensign hit the stage with their brand of posi-core the kids were moving. The pit was sweaty and active, kids were singing along, and the stage diving consisted of kids who actually dove instead of standing on stage so they could look cool. Ensign wrapped up the set with an Insted cover and once again the crowd went crazy.

Next up was Shutdown from New York City. This set was special simply because this was Shutdown's first show in the area and despite the fact that most of the kids didn't really know the songs they were dancing anyway. To me this is what hardcore is about just because you don't know the band doesn't mean you have to stand in place. Although Shutdown was a little bit sloppy, they were good enough to keep everyone interested. They did a cover of Youth of Today's "Youth Crew," and even though most of the kids at the show were too young to experience Youth Of Today they still sang along.

I left shortly after The Marshes, and although I missed Warzone, I heard that they played a superb set filled with crowd participation and a manic dance floor. As I walked out of Pearl Street I couldn't help but smile. It was nice to see kids dancing, singing along, and having a good time without worrying about all the garbage and politics that can drag a hardcore show down.

Although I did not stay till the end Saturday's show, what I did witness was a major let down. Sure there were a lot of kids at the show, thanks to Mike Mannix, however no one was dancing and everyone seemed more concerned with making social appearances then with the bands. Finally when people did dance it was one kid playing king of the pit with his kung fu moves surrounded by a black hole of nothingness as everyone stood around swaying. Not only that most bands played emo metal which seemed to consist of the same chord being played repeatedly with a singer who shrieked at the top of their lungs.

Saturday was saved by one band, Hallraker. Okay, so these guys are my friends, it doesn't change the facts that they are easily the best band in the area and one of the best new bands coming up now. You can't help but enjoy

Cheap Trick, Pilots together at UMass

By John Hendrickson
Collegian Staff

power pop ('pau-er pap) n. Loud, upbeat, guitar-based, hook-filled rock music. Also see: Cheap Trick

Much of the popular rock of the '90s can be directly linked to Cheap Trick. Green Day, Redd Kross, Oasis, Weezer, Stone Temple Pilots and Soul Asylum are all directly descended from Rockford, Illinois' favorite sons. Smashing Pumpkins invited them to play at the record release party for their Mellon Collie album. No less an icon than Kurt Cobain once likened Nirvana to "Cheap Trick with louder guitar." As far the scope of their influence is concerned, Cheap Trick ranks right up there with the Ramones and R.E.M. as perhaps the seminal American rock band of the last two decades.

If any bad has ever been poised for a comeback, it's gotta be Cheap Trick circa 1997. Twenty years after their astounding self-titled debut LP, the Trick is back with a vengeance — a new record deal with Red Ant, a great new album out April 29th (also titled Cheap Trick), a Steve Albini-produced single on Sub Pop, a forthcoming tribute album, an appearance on last year's Lollapalooza fest and a recently released boxed set modestly titled Sex, America, Cheap Trick (Legacy). Damn. Of course, it's not like they ever really went away...

Cheap Trick's initial rise to fame quite possibly served as one of the inspirations for Spinal Tap. Their first three albums, Cheap Trick (Epic) , In Color and Heaven Tonight (featuring "Surrender," a scathing and hilarious indictment of '70s pop culture), were completely ignored domestically. However, they were huge Japan. A Japanese-only live album, At Budokan, was initially only issued to radio Stateside, but the public response was so intense and positive that the record was given a U.S. release in 1979. Their first hit, a red-hot live version of "I Want You To Want Me," was culled from At Budokan.

1979's Dream Police followed and then the band slowly faded from the public eye as their albums began to become less focused, resulting in diminished sales. The last time Cheap Trick hit the top ten was with 1988's schlocky power ballad "The Flame" and a cover of Elvis' "Don't Be Cruel." However, their hit-or-miss success of the '80s and '90s can in no way diminish the importance, influence, and vitality of their initial slew of albums.

The nucleus of Cheap Trick has always been guitarist/songwriter Rick Nielsen. The ultimate guitar anti- hero, Nielsen's absurdly huge guitar arsenal, cartoonish stage antics, geeky, bow-tied persona, and non-stop barrage of garage-rock riffing have propelled the band since their inception in 1972. However, his songwriting chops are what have truly distinguished the band from their contemporaries. A perfect blend of bubblegum and bile, Cheap Trick's strongest moments combine the melodicism of Badfinger and the Beatles with a healthy dose of spite, wit, and gung- ho enthusiasm. This formula is most evident and successful on such gems as "He's A Whore," "Clock Strikes Ten," "Southern Girls" and "Auf Wiedersehen."

Although Nielsen may be considered the architect of Cheap Trick's sound, he in no way dominates it. Bun E. Carlos' uncluttered, solid drumming provides the necessary propulsion for bassist Tom Petersson's 8- and 12-string bass innovations. Add in the final ingredient of Robin Zander's over-the-top vocals and you have what Carlos describes as "a whole which is greater than the sum of its parts."

Chris Rock rocks Radio City, N.Y.

By Mark Kennedy
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Sold Out.

The words slip happily through comedian Chris Rock's trademark cat-who-just-ate-the-canary grin.

"Man, it's sold out," he says in delight.

For the red-hot Rock, 31, word that his one-night-stand at Radio City Music Hall is sold out has an added punch line: Fourteen years ago, Rock was one of hundreds who lined up outside the famed venue, waiting for tickets to see his comedy idol, Eddie Murphy.

Then a 17-year-old high school dropout with a job busing tables at the Red Lobster on Queens Boulevard, Rock remembers casually flipping through the newspaper to pass the time in line.

"There was a listing of comedy clubs," he recalls, flashing his tiger smile. One club, Catch a Rising Star, was advertising an open-mike night for that evening.

"I just got off line and went."

It was the night Chris Rock became a comedian.

Now, his triumphant return to the Big Apple caps a frantic couple of years in which his sassy brand of stand-up has produced a $1 million book deal, a lucrative advertising campaign for Nike and AT&T, an HBO talk show, a comedy album and numerous prime-time appearances.

"This is great. It's the right time for me," Rock says, casually dressed on the eve of his New York gig in jeans, a sweatshirt and sneakers. "Show business is all about maintaining. That's the hardest part. I'd really love to maintain this."

Rock's sell-out status has been fueled, ironically, by his refusal to sell out — he's at his edgiest during his in-your-face assault on race and ignorance in America.

Less than a minute after his introduction on the new album, "Roll with the New," — which features expletive-laden musical parodies, skits and, of course, snippets from his raucous stand-up — Rock takes off on a blistering rant about Marion Barry at the Million Man March.

"How'd he get a ticket?" Rock demands impatiently. "You know what that means? It means that even in our finest hour we had a crackhead on stage."

Neither side of the O.J. Simpson trial gets off much better. "I haven't seen white people that mad since they canceled 'M.A.S.H,'" he cracks, adding that it all came down to fame.

"Because if O.J. wasn't famous he'd be in jail right now," Rock says. "If O.J. drove a bus, he wouldn't even be O.J. He'd be Orenthal — the bus driving murderer.

"If that was Jerry Seinfeld charged with double murder and the only person that found the glove just happened to be from the Nation of Islam, Jerry'd be a free man right," he says. "Be eatin' cereal right now."

During Rock's maiden voyage into the talk-show format, he and a TV crew traveled to New York's Howard Beach — a notoriously white enclave — asking residents to sign a petition renaming the main street "Tupac Shakur Boulevard."

"Humor definitely takes the edge off of things," he explains. "It definitely does make things easier. I hope not to be preachy. Who the hell am I? No one wants to be preached to."

Raised in hardscrabble Brooklyn, Rock toiled on the comedy club circuit for a dozen years since that day he got off line at Radio City.

At 22, he joined the cast of "Saturday Night Live" for three seasons, but was woefully under-used. "I was so damn nice," he recalls. "A little over-respectful at times and not respecting my own instincts."

Rock did snag a few bit parts in Hollywood movies such as Beverly Hills Cop II, New Jack City and CB4. He even won a CableACE award in 1994. But it was his razor-sharp wit as a correspondent for "Politically Incorrect" that introduced him to the mainstream.

"Me and the audience grew up together. I'm definitely a better performer than I was and a better writer than I was. But at the same time, people my age have good jobs now and have more adult experiences," says Rock, whose own adult experiences include getting married five months ago. "When I was 19, I was a 19-year-old talking about stuff a 35-year-old was thinking about."

And what they're thinking about is never very jolly.

"There's not one chipper topic. I always start off in a hole and I have to get myself out of the hole. Anybody can just wait around for funny stuff to happen and talk about it. I'm definitely more attracted to the unfunny things in life."

He then counts off a list of staggeringly serious topics.

"Abortion... Cheating... Taxes."

Taxes? Can even Rock make the IRS funny?

"First of all, taxes are just way too high," he says, taking the bait. "I mean, didn't white people leave England because of taxes? Isn't that, like, the first reason they got outta town?"

He's just getting warm.

"I mean, don't you think it's absurd that they take money out of your paycheck every week, and then you have to pay money AGAIN in April? Isn't that what the Mafia does? Why can't they take the money they need in the first place?"

Now there's no slowing him down.

"It's all extortion," he says, his voice rising. "Nobody needs 38 percent of my money. If William Morris can run a business on 10 percent, why can't the United States government run a business on 10 percent? It's EX-TOR-TION."

Whatever the topic, Rock says it must ring true.

"You try and base it in truth," he says. "You're just yelling about something that's really got you mad."

And in that anger Chris Rock might just well have discovered a gold mine.

UMass's latest dance festival will dazzle you with their remarkable display of ballet and other forms of dance.

UMass becomes Alive With Dance

Julia Casson
Collegian Staff

For the second weekend in a row, the University of Massachusetts will host three nights full of fire, life and emotions as an assorted and talented group of dancers take the stage at Bowker Auditorium.

This springtime showcase of talent is being presented by Alive with Dance, an appropriate title for the animated works that will be performed.

The evening will feature a series of works performed by several UMass dance majors and choreographed by fellow senior dance students. This is an annual, completely student run production that contains a variety of dance styles including ballet, modern, lyrical, theatrical and jazz.

A large majority of performers that took part in last weekend's Student Dance Concert at Hampden Theater play an important part in the upcoming production. The four artistic directors are Amanda Koelker, Kathleen Brennan, Krystin MacAlpine and Charlie Hodge.

"The Alive with Dance Concert this year contains an array of dance styles that are pleasing to all audiences. The hard work and dedication of the artistic directors, choreographers, performers, and crew has really payed off," Brennan said.

Brennan hopes that, "the audience enjoys the performance as much as we enjoy pleasing the audience."

Variety seems to be the key word for this evening of entertainment. The long list of choreographers all have a different and diverse style of dance that will bring the production alive with a collection of tastes.

Choreographer Sarah Dyer brings the silent world of dance into light as the dancers express ideas and emotions through the use of gestures. Katheren Hooper brings to stage a modern dance entitled "Tapestry" seen earlier this semester at the vibrant Acid Lounge dance production. Laurel Kleinschmidt brings on a childlike, happy, and buoyant modern dance full of life and energy. Ambere Rogers' unusual dance number entails the dancers actually making the music with the use of their hands, voices and feet.

In addition to those mentioned above, the evening will include several other choreographers displaying their works, many for the first time.

Alive with Dance is a Registered Student Organization sponsored in part by the Cultural Enrichment Fund and the UMass Arts Council.

Alive with Dance will be presented at Bowker Auditorium tonight and tomorrow night at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 for the general public and $3 for students.

Hallraker's active set. Maybe it's frontman Jim Belisle bringing back memories of a young Henry Rollins, maybe it's the fact that guitarist Jim Peon always smiles when he plays and looks like he's having the best time in the world. It could also be the dazzling musicianship of bassist Jim Shea or drummer Chris Bevalcqua who looks like there's no place he'd rather be when he's on stage.

Hallraker blew the crowd away with their set. Anyone who enjoys bands like Black Flag, Swiz or the Bad Brains must check these guys out. I really feel Hallraker embody the true spirit of hardcore. They play fast, interesting music full of crazy time changes and tempo shifts with intelligent lyrics. Finally when you see Hallraker live it's almost as if they are daring the crowd to top their energy output.

Bands like Hallraker, Shutdown, Ensign and Warzone helped show what hardcore is all about. Fast, fun music that helps you forget about life and enjoy yourself. Congratulations to Scott Lee for putting on a tremendously fun festival.

Women's lacrosse tallies comeback win

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Three words. It only took three words by Massachusetts women's lacrosse coach Francesca McClellan in a time-out called 7:50 into the second half to get her squad motivated. Three words — just win, baby.

Actually, the language used was a lot more colorful, but you get the point. Those words helped the Minutewomen cinch a 10–8 win over Vermont Wednesday afternoon. The Minutewomen (4–6) came back from a 7–4 deficit to score six unanswered goals, while shutting down the Catamounts (2–7) for their first come–from–behind win of the season.

Truthfully, the game was already in the hands of UMass, who held a 4–3 advantage at the break. A small deficit to hold, but the Minutewomen had the majority of the possession, troubling the Vermont defense with their set offense. However, four unanswered goals by the Catamounts to start the half was too much for McClellan to handle, and the tide turned after the call.

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

On Wednesday, the Minutewomen came from behind to beat UVM in Burlington.

The eventual gamewinner for UMass came from an unlikely place. Senior defender, and tri–captain, Erica Bryan scored the 11th goal of her career at the 45:10 mark of the game, off of an assist by freshman midfielder Rebecca Minaker. Minaker (3 goals), along with sophomore attacker Laura Korutz (2 goals), kept up their solid scoring pace of late, combining for five of the 10 Minutewomen goals.

With the end result, McClellan could not have been happier with her team, but in her opinion, they should not have been in that position to begin with.

"That was a really impressive show, and at this point, if we lose, we lose," McClellan said. "So, we learned that we could do it, and that's an important lesson. But, at 7–4 they should not have been in that position to begin with, and that is what's frustrating. So, whether it was a 3–hour bus drive, taking a midweek game too casually, or just taking Vermont for granted... I don't know."

UMass was in an early hole, but Minaker picked up a loose ball off a Korutz penalty shot, beating Vermont goalie Kate Farnsworth high to her left at the 11:07 mark. The Catamounts went on to a 3–1 lead before their defense forgot to cover everyone except freshman Katie Carey, scoring her first goal of the game with 14:42 left in the half. Two goals by Minaker gave the Minutewomen the 4–3 lead, but the beginning of the second half would hold bitter fortune.

A four goal run by Vermont forced McClellan to call her second timeout of the game, and after a verbal ripping of rock concert proportions, UMass shut down every phase of the Catamount game. Korutz warmed up the offense with her two goals, and Carey tied the game at 7–7 at the 42:04 mark of the game. Senior attacker Stephanie Walsh scored the easiest goal of the season on the goalie's doorstep at the 44:54 mark, setting the stage for Bryan's eventual gamewinner just :16 later. A goal by freshman Stephanie Pavlick rounded out the scoring for the Minutewomen, and Vermont did not mount any comeback bid whatsoever.

For McClellan, a big part of the second half surge was due to the work ethic of some of her freshmen, like Carey and midfielder Colleen Wales.

"You know, I'm really pleased with Katie Carey," McClellan said. "She has come very, very far, and she has worked from being one of the last people on the bench to the first one off. And Colleen Wales has really begun to pull her game together, too, and is playing with confidence.

"I think some of our upperclassmen are taking their spots too much for granted, and are taking things a little too lightly and casually. And, you can quote me on that."

Tomorrow's game at 1 p.m. at Totman Field against Boston College will mark the final home game of four seniors, giving them a chance to go out in style. Bryan, Walsh, Kristen Hocker, and Michele Warrington will take the field in their last home game of their collegiate careers, and it has been a long road to this point for the foursome. Dealing with the rebuilding of a reinstated program, amidst both the arrival and departure of many players along the way, these four Minutewomen will be remembered for their dedication amidst the Mardi Gras festivities that will take place all over campus on this day.

From Puerto Rico to Amherst, Vazquez leads

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's water polo team is having an incredible year. They have steadily moved up in the national rankings, and currently hold the No. 7 position. After an extremely successful road trip to the West Coast, where they played other highly ranked teams, they returned to the Northeast to continue their winning streak.

The Minutewomen blew away their competition at the tournament they hosted, and last weekend finished first at the New England Championships for the first time in school history. And through all of this, the Minutewomen have set new school records, including most games won in a single season and most goals scored in a single game.

Part of the Minutewomen's success can be attributed to a soft–spoken sophomore exchange student from Caguas, Puerto Rico. Andrea Vazquez has the second most goals scored this season (49g, 9a) in addition to an incredible shooting percentage of .710. With her ability to play both defense and offense, Vazquez is proving to be a great asset to the team.

Vazquez has played water polo since she was 12 years old, but didn't get her start with a ball in hand. Rather, she started her aquatic career as a swimmer, a very big sport in Puerto Rico.

She swam for one year, until a coach at her club told them about water polo, and Vazquez said that her whole team was very excited and that's how she started to play.

"I don't like swimming that much, I like water polo," Vazquez said. "Because swimming, you know, is boring, you only do laps. In water polo, you swim, pass the ball, shoot it..."

In Puerto Rico, water polo is not a high school or collegiate sport, so Vazquez joined one of four clubs to practice. She said her team wasn't very good at first, but much like UMass, they slowly got better as years passed.

Vazquez had quite the water polo career in Caguas. Since 1992 she has competed on the Puerto Rican National Team, and has travelled to places like Cuba and Canada to play.

"In 1995 I went to Canada, and I think that was the best [out of the four] experience I had," Vazquez said. "We played against England, United States, Canada, Brazil... it was great."

Vazquez was also named the 1994 Defensive Player of the Year. In 1995, she was named the Offensive Player of the Year. She also competed in the Pan–American games.

"I think being named the best defensive player is the best thing that can happen to a player, because to me, water polo plays defense first," Vazquez said.

To become a member of the National Team, the coaches must first submit a player's name to the federation, and then approximately 30 girls practice together before the team gets narrowed down to 13. Another requirement to compete is that a player must be age 20 or under. So this will be the last year Vazquez can compete for her country.

Instead she chose to compete for UMass. Vazquez is an accounting major, and plans to spend this year and next in Amherst, before returning to her home.

She said she chose to come to UMass because on her campus at the University of Puerto Rico, the UMass men's water polo team left information when they travelled down there last year. Her club coach gave Vazques the information, she applied and the rest, as they say, is history.

"She sort of came knocking on our door," said UMass coach Bob Newcomb.

"I filled out some forms, so he knew about me, and then the first day I came here, Peggy [Nieves] and me, we went to Bob and he told us about the practices," Vazquez said.

According to Newcomb, he heard good things about Vazquez from other coaches who had seen her play. He has nothing but praise for his exchange student.

"She's a very good defender, she has a great arm and an excellent sense of the game," Newcomb said. "She's strong, very knowledgeable and has a smart way of guarding the ball. She has a good ability to steal the ball and she's very good at playing other positions at defense. She's very aware of what's going on in the pool.

"She very likely can be the best defensive player we have," Newcomb said.

In other water polo action, this weekend the Minutewomen will travel to Cambridge, Ma. to compete in the Eastern Championships. If they finish in the top three, that will guarantee them a trip to Michigan to compete in the Nationals.

The Minutewomen's biggest competition looks to be Slippery Rock, though Brown and Maryland should also be good games, according to Newcomb.

Minuteman legends return to UMass for competition in Haigis Hoopla basketball

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

What better way to spend a Saturday afternoon than with Rigo and Teddy.

UMass hoop fan favorites Rigoberto Nunez and Ted Cottrell, members of the 1996 Final Four squad, will be among the former Minutemen featured in the inaugural "UMass Legends Game," the centerpiece of this weekend's New Balance Haigis Hoopla festivities. Haigis Hoopla kicks off tomorrow and ends Sunday. The Legends Game will tip off on Haigis's center court at noon tomorrow.

Also on hand will be three members of the 1992 Sweet Sixteen squad. Jim McCoy, the all–time leading scorer in Minuteman history, will be joined by former teammates Will Herndon and Tony Barbee in the Legends Game. That UMass team was the first to significant damage in the NCAA tournament, beating both Fordham and Syracuse before losing to Jamal Mashburn and Kentucky in the East Regional semi–finals.

Haigis Hoopla is in its seventh year. The event is put on by the Sports Management department, and is organized by students in the program. According to Haigis Hoopla's director of media relations, Damien McDowell, it's a lot of work to put together an event of this magnitude.

"We wanted to put together a marquee event, to let people know that it is more than just a three–on–three event," McDowell said. "By having a Legends game, the Children's Experience and the Dunk Competition, we hope to provide something for everyone."

The dunk competition will feature nine–foot hoops and is open to all participants. The event will be judged by the players in the UMass Legends Game.

One of the other marquee events is the "UMass Five College Credit Union Shoot–out," in which students will shoot for a chance to win a Volkswagen Jetta.

Rigoberto Nunez and Ted Cottrell were role players in their time with former UMass coach John Calipari, but were fan favorites. Nunez, a native of Lawrence, was known for his enthusiasm on the court and might best be remembered for a charge he took in the St. Joseph's game during the 1995–1996 season in the Mullins Center. The call helped UMass extend the game into overtime, and their eventual win prevented them from losing two in a row after starting 26–0. Nunez was considered one of the best defensive players on the team, and was often substituted in to provide a spark.

Haigis Hoopla is the largest three–on three basketball tournament in Western Massachusetts, and 55 percent of the participants are from outside the UMass student body.

outs.

"I was real happy that [Henderson] won," coach Elaine Sortino said. "She really took charge and dominated."

Hofstra came out in the nightcap determined to come away with a split. The Lady Dutchwomen tagged UMass starter Liz Wagner for six runs through the first four innings. This barrage of hits was highlighted by a Marlsa Semmel line drive two–run homer in the third.

But UMass showed off their perseverance, scoring three runs in the fourth, and two in the fifth to pull back within one run.

Stephanie Mareina reached on an error to lead off the fourth, and later scored on a single by Gutridge. An error on a double steal attempt scored Cardenas and moved Kenderski to third. A fielder's choice by Buckley scored Kenderski for UMass' final run.

Brown led off the fifth with a bunt single, and Osier reached on an error. Both scored on a Cardenas double. Cardenas went 4–4 on the day, with two doubles and one RBI.

But this was as close as UMass would get, falling to Hofstra 7–5.

"This was a very frustrating afternoon for me. Defensively, we just have to play better," Sortino said. "But we put ourselves right back in the second game, and for that I feel terrific."

The Minutewomen are back in action Saturday at 1 p.m. when they welcome the Fordham Rams to Totman Field for an afternoon doubleheader.

with nine home runs and a team–leading 45 RBIs. Clark stepped it up yesterday by going 5–for–5 and scoring three runs, to earn co–MVP honors with Scott Barnsby.

"It feels great [to win the MVP]," Clark said. "Playing in Fenway Park is a dream, and to do well is satisfying."

Barnsby's no–hitter will be the memorable moment to take away from this year's Beanpot. After beating Northeastern 1–0 to win the 1996 Beanpot, Barnsby's no–hitter in the opener against the Huskies this year sealed his place in Beanpot lure. The no–hitter was the first in Fenway Park in 32 years, and received national coverage.

But lost in the hoopla of the single–game masterpiece was the exceptional baseball UMass has been playing for three weeks. The 13–game winning streak has been no accident. UMass has rolled over A–10 rival Fordham, Big East power Providence and traditional eastern baseball power Maine among others.

"The key thing is that we're executing," Clark said. "If there's one thing that coach [Stone] stresses, it's execution. We're getting big hits when we have to, and we're getting the pitching when we need to."

The pitching has kept the Minutemen winning. Besides Barnsby's masterpiece on Tuesday, there have been some great performances from UMass pitching during the streak. Sophomore Adam Robinson has picked up two wins, including five innings of one–run ball yesterday to pick up the Beanpot championship. Robinson held Central Connecticut State to one run in his first start on April 9th, and is 2–0 this year.

Bennett has been his usual dominating self. After being blown out by Virginia Tech back on March 29th, Bennett hasn't lost, and is 6–1 on the year, including his UMass career record 21st win against Temple on April 12th.

The Minutemen have also been getting some help from unlikely sources at the plate, which has helped keep the streak alive.

Senior catcher Jason Kudrikow, who only had six career hits coming into this season, has tore it up when he's had the chance to crack the lineup. The Amherst native had two more hits in yesterday's Beanpot final, with two RBIs. For the year, Kudrikow is batting .356 with 10 RBIs.

First baseman David Giglio, who converted from shortstop before the season, has been on fire from the ninth spot in the order, going 2–for–4 in the Beanpot final. Giglio is batting .338 on the year.

Massachusetts captures second straight Beanpot title

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Maybe Harvard thought that playing a fresh pitcher every inning would give them the edge they needed to win the Baseball Beanpot Tournament yesterday. Nevertheless, the eight Crimson hurlers were not sufficient enough to beat last year's defending champs, Massachusetts.

With solid batting throughout the entire line-up and a great pitching performance from Adam Robinson (2-0), the Minutemen (23-6, 9-3 Atlantic 10) earned an 11-4 victory over Harvard (18-11) in Fenway Park.

"Today we hit the ball," Stone said. "Some days it's pitching, somedays it's defense, somedays it's manufacturing runs. We just want to play well and execute."

The Massachusetts baseball team proved once again that it is the best ballclub in the Northeast by capturing the Beanpot trophy for the second year in a row. Since Boston University dropped it's baseball program last year, UMass was added to the four team round robin. In each of the two years the Minutemen have been a part of the tradition, they have taken home the much sought after bowl of beans.

"We're the best team in New England," Samela said. "So we should come in here and win, no matter if It's in Fenway Park or Earl Lorden."

Scott Barnsby and Doug Clark took the Most Valuable Player honors. Barnsby pitched a no-hitter on Tuesday's game against Northeastern to earn the honors. Clark, who currently leads the team batting .441 with 45 RBI captured the honors for his game-winning catch in the ninth on Tuesday while going 5-for-5 on yesterday.

The game turned into a hitting dual right away. In the first inning Adam Correa got on base with an error by Brian Ralph, Harvard's centerfielder. He then stole his way to second base. Two batters later, Doug Clark drove Correa home with an RBI single, then made it home himself on an RBI single by Pete Gautreau, putting UMass up 2-0.

Harvard made a quick impression in the bottom half of the first when the line-up immediately got on top of Jeff Puleri's pitches. Puleri, who threw 120 pitches against Fordham in Monday's 17-2 win, was given the nod to start yesterday and was going to pitch as long as he could. Unfortunately for UMass, the first six Crimson batters got on board scoring three runs on three hits.

Puleri stayed in for another two innings, shutting Harvard down to only one more hit. With the score tied up 3-3 going into the bottom of the fourth, Adam Robinson came onto the mound for the Minutemen. Robinson went on for the next 3.1 innings before surrendering the fourth and final Crimson run. Robinson pitched five innings, only giving up one run and three hits.

"You know we're not going to get shut out," Robinson said. "We're not going to lay back. We're going to get back sooner or later."

During that time, UMass smacked Harvard's pitching staff around Fenway. In the fifth and six, the Minutemen posted four runs on five hits, by Aaron Braunstein, Jason Kudrikow, Correa, Clark and Brian Samela.

"It's satisfying," Clark said. "We've been executing. We're getting hits when we have to and playing good defense when we have to, too."

In the eighth inning UMass knocked the ball around four times scoring four runs. First with a single by Clark, then a ground-rule double by Gautreau. That was followed by another ground-rule double by Samela which brought in both base runners. Finally, with Braunstein on with an error, Kudrikow doubled in Samela and Braunstein.

"We feel everytime we go out onto the field we should win the game," Clark said.

UMass rolled on to the seven run victory and for the second time in history took the Beanpot away from Beantown.

"It's fantastic," Samela said. "I just don't want to leave. It's always been a dream to play here, and to play well and win two years in a row means a lot."

UM's 13th straight the nation's longest

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — On April 7th, the Massachusetts baseball team lost to the University of Dayton 19-12, and with the loss dropped to 10-6 on the year, and 3-3 in the A-10. The pitching was struggling, and they weren't getting key hits on a consistent basis. After reaching the NCAA East Regional Finals a year before, the Minutemen looked like they had lost a step.

Those days are well behind them now.

Yesterday's 11-4 trouncing of Harvard marked the Minutemen's 13th straight win, which is now the nation's longest. UMass has now captured the Beanpot two straight years, even more remarkable considering they have only played in the Beanpot for two years. UMass is now 23-6, and have earned the No.1 ranking in the college baseball's New England Division 1 poll, a No. 28 national ranking from Collegiate Baseball and Atlantic 10 Player of the Week honors for pitcher Jason Bennett and outfielder Doug Clark since the streak began two weeks ago.

"Some days it's been the hitting, some days it's been the pitching, and some days we've been able to manufacture runs," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "Everybody on the ballclub feels good. You're tougher to beat when you have a streak going. It's helps in a lot of different ways, including confidence."

Clark has been the catalyst for much of UMass's success offensively. The sophomore centerfielder is hitting .415,

Sloppy defense causes UMass split with Hofstra

By Carey Peter Goodman
Collegian Staff

There weren't any gold gloves being awarded after yesterday's sloppy twinbill between the Massachusetts softball team and Hofstra. The two teams combined to commit 13 errors on the day, resulting in 11 of the 21 runs scored to be unearned.

MASSACHUSETTS	5
HOFSTRA	4

Behind this comedy of blunders, and while battling a brisk April air and darkening skies, UMass settled for a tough out-of-conference split with the Lady Dutchwomen. The Minutewomen stole Game No. 1 5-4, and dropped Game No. 2 7-5

After allowing an unearned run in the first inning of the opening game, UMass' bats went right to work on Hofstra starter Alicia Smith. The Minutewomen brought home two runs in both the third and fourth inning, giving UMass pitcher Danielle Henderson a seemingly insurmountable lead.

Freshman Nicole Faessler started the damage in the second with a one out single to left scoring Kim Gutridge. A Mandy Galas single and a Katie Kenderski walk set the stage for Tracey Osier, An error at third base by Hofstra's Danielle Terro, off the bat of Osier, plated Faessler.

In the third, UMass got started quickly when Sam Cardenas led off with a rope single to left. After Gutridge reached on an error that moved Cardenas to third, a successful double steal scored Cardenas. A suicide squeeze by Galas went for a hit and brought home Octavia Brown to round out the scoring.

MASSACHUSETTS	5
HOFSTRA	7

Unfortunately for the Minutewomen, the lead was short- lived. A nightmare fourth inning for Henderson and the defense put Hofstra right back into the game:

Smith and Marisa Semmel led off with back-to-back hits, and a wild pitch soon placed them both in scoring position with just one out. A fielder's choice by Chera Curran scored the first run of the frame. A single by Carissa Millsap loaded the bases for Chris Aigotti. A ground ball right up the box was fielded cleanly by Henderson who tried to force a runner at home. But her throw went off the glove of Kelly Buckley, and two more runs crossed the place.

From this point on, both Henderson and Smith shut the door on the opposing lineups.

Cardenas led off with a hard-hit two-bagger to center field. And Buckley laced a one-out single to right to bring in Cardenas for the game-winner.

Henderson went the distance for her 12th win of the season. Her line read seven innings, one earned run, four hits, one walk, and ten strike-

UM lax hosts powerhouse 'Cuse in Alumni Stadium

UMass hosts perennial powerhouse Syracuse in Alumni Stadium tomorrow at 2 p.m. highlighting Mardi Gras festivities.

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Five Massachusetts athletic teams, including the spring football squad, will be in action this weekend. Hundreds of weekend warriors and armchair point guards will be in action with Haigis Hoopla.

However, when the first pitch is thrown, the ball tipped or the whistle blown, there will be no head-to-head matchup fiercer than the men's lacrosse team's game with Syracuse.

The game — the highlighted feature of this weekend's Mardi Gras celebration — has been moved to Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium for a 2 p.m. start.

The concept of playing in the stadium is a relatively foreign one for the players, who only started to practice on the stadium's field Wednesday.

"The field looks good. This'll be our home away from home," senior Brendan Glass said.

The concept Is not as foreign, however, to Cannella, who played one game in McGuirk as a UMass player.

"I think it's great [the game is in the stadium]. The way the administration has been promoting it with the Mardi Gras, our game is a big part of that," Cannella said. "It's a great place to play. It's loud, it should be a lot of fun."

Regardless of where the game is being played, the Syracuse — UMass lacrosse rivalry has become an intense one. Two years ago, UMass fans packed the hill alongside Richard F. Garber Field to see the two teams do battle. Last year, UMass fought to the wire in front of a large crowd at the Carrier Dome before Syracuse pulled out an overtime win.

The strength the Orangemen have displayed in years past (they lead the all-time series 18-4 and have won 16 straight) is apparent in this year's squad as well. Casey Powell leads not only his team, but the nation, in points per game. He is also second in assists (29) and tied for 12th in goals (32).

Supporting Powell is the powerful tandem of Rob Kavovit and Doug Jackson. Because Powell is so strong, Kavovit (29 goals, 28 assists, 57 points) and Jackson (30g, 8a, 38pts) may be seen as supporting cast members, but they are strong offensive players on their own.

"Their attack has about 90 goals and probably about 70 assists. It's a potent attack and they've always been an offensive team," Cannella said. "Great athletes, great wheels — they can run. They play an up-tempo game."

The Orangemen are also strong defensively, as junior goaltender Jason Gebhardt has compiled a .549 save percentage with 139 saves.

"Defensively they've always been physical with their sticks and their bodies. And they're solid in the goal," Cannella said.

"It's an outstanding team, a team that has beaten Virginia, who Is No. 2 in the country, and [Johns] Hopkins, who is No. 4 in the country," he continued. "On the other

Turkish government agrees to demands

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Turkey's governing coalition appeared to be in trouble yesterday after the prime minister angered his Islamic party by bowing to the military's demand to keep the country secular.

After an eight-hour meeting that ended late Saturday, Necmettin Erbakan agreed to demands set by Turkey's powerful military elite: shut down Islamic-oriented secondary schools, restrict radical Islamic media and ban Islamic-style clothing.

The generals presented the same list during a similar marathon session with Erbakan in February. He sounded willing to accept them then, but never formally agreed to do so or acted on them. Members of Erbakan's Welfare Party vowed to fight the plan.

"We are against it and we will see that it won't pass in Parliament," Sunday newspapers quoted Oguzhan Asiltürk, a Welfare lawmaker and close aide to Erbakan, as saying.

Erbakan's main coalition partner, Deputy Premier Tansu Ciller, also attended the meeting of the National Security Council, made up of military figures and President Suleyman Demirel.

Texas separatists take two hostages

FORT DAVIS, Texas (AP) — A militant separatist group that believes Texas should be an independent nation took two hostages yesterday in retaliation for the "kidnapping" of two members by police.

Richard McLaren, the so-called "ambassador" of the Republic of Texas, told San Antonio radio station WOAI that the pair would be freed in exchange for the Republic members under arrest and another key concession.

"We want them to... agree to a referendum to allow Texans to vote on the independence issue," McLaren said from his group's headquarters in a remote, mountainous area 75 miles north of the Mexico border.

Dozens of police had surrounded the area since the standoff began at noon, Department of Public Safety spokesman Mike Cox said. The FBI also had been called, he said.

The hostages, including a neighbor who has feuded with the group over land, were at the neighbor's house with Republic members, while McLaren was at the headquarters about 15 miles away. McLaren said the group initially took Joe Rowe and his wife, M.A. Rowe, hostage, but exchanged Joe Rowe for a volunteer after he was injured.

"They're in Mr. Rowe's house and being well taken care of," McLaren said, adding the hostages were being held under the rules of International law. "We're not out to injure anybody because under the Geneva Convention we have to take care of them."

Clash ensues at Honors College meeting

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

WEST ROXBURY, Mass — In an emotionally charged meeting last Friday afternoon, student leaders from the University of Massachusetts brought their concerns about creating an honors college at UMass to a member of the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education.

The group of 12 students met for over three hours with Aaron Spencer, chair of the Board's Honors College Subcommittee, at his office in West Roxbury.

Lia Wong, president of the Student Government Association (SGA), opened the meeting.

"There are a couple of concerns we would like to bring to your attention about the Honors College," Wong said.

The students then spoke to Spencer about their unhappiness with the current proposal for an Honors College at UMass Amherst that has been submitted to the Board.

"I would hate to see this proposal come into reality as it is," Wong said.

The Board asked for proposals from any interested party to create a Commonwealth College, or Honors College, for the UMass system this past year.

Spencer's subcommittee has since been working on evaluating the different proposals, including the one from UMass Amherst, and drafting a recommendation for the creation of a Commonwealth College to the full Board to vote on in May or June.

Some people have speculated that since UMass Amherst is the flagship institution of the UMass system, it would be logical to build the Commonwealth College there, and the discussion between the students and Spencer revolved around building the Honors College at Amherst. However, the Board will not reach a decision on the issue until May or June.

"Nothing is firm yet," Spencer said. "The Commonwealth College is merely an idea and a concept."

I happen to believe that the Commonwealth College will make a radical change in public higher education.

-Aaron Spencer

"Elitist and unfair"?

In their comments to Spencer, the students criticized both the concept of an Honors College as "elitist and unfair" and the specific UMass Amherst proposal as lacking dependable funding and not being advantageous to the majority of the students on campus.

Tom Coen, a junior political science major, asked Spencer if, in the long run, money would have to be diverted from the existing areas of the UMass Amherst budget to pay for operating costs of the Commonwealth College.

"One of my major concerns is funding," Coen said. "Will UMass Amherst have responsibility for future funding of the Honors College?"

Spencer replied that the Board would be asking the Massachusetts State Legislature to fund the initial expense of building a Commonwealth College, and that the operating costs of an Honors College would be similar to those of the already existing Honors Program at UMass Amherst.

"We will ask the legislature for funding of a brand new building," Spencer said. "We have no intention of the Commonwealth College coming at the expense of other colleges or students.

"Ongoing funding really is not as critical as initial funding. The same 1600 students currently in the UMass Honors Program would be in the Commonwealth College. The only additional expense comes in creating the building."

Another student told Spencer that there were three major areas at UMass Amherst — student-faculty relations, technology and advising — that needed to be improved for the whole campus and that she did not think it was fair to improve the UMass experience for one group of people.

"It is very hard to take giving 3,000 people an incredible education and not everyone," she said. "I pay the same amount of money, but I don't get the same [services]."

Spencer replied that by increasing the prestige of the school, the Commonwealth College would bring in resources to benefit the whole community.

"Those are the very problems the Commonwealth College is intended to correct," Spencer said. "This is not a new idea. It has been advanced and put into reality in other places in the country.

"Despite their fears, people have found that the honors college raises standards and performance throughout the system, that alumni give more money, and that the impression of the caliber of the education that all students have received goes up."

Spencer argued that UMass is not as well thought-of in the state as it should be, and that the Commonwealth College could improve its perception.

"We do not get the image that we should and the respect that a graduate should get," Spencer said. "The long range goals [of the Commonwealth College] are to lift standards, performance and environment throughout the whole system. Your schooling will improve."

Jason Vecchio, a junior political science major and student coordinator of the Student Center for Education, Research, and Advocacy (SCERA), brought up the topic of increased elitism as a result of an Honors College.

"What I would like to get at is that I view public higher education as an opportunity for the working classes of Massachusetts," Vecchio said. "My main concern is that we are trying to change that mission."

"That is a concern that was addressed at the highest levels," Spencer said. "It really is not a deep concern. The performance of the other Honors Colleges in the country has shown that they benefit their whole systems."

Spencer went on to say that the Commonwealth College is "already in existence" in the Honors Program at UMass Amherst and that the main effect of the proposal would be to tie all the honors programs in the state together under one set of standards and recognition.

"It merely legitimizes what is already in place," Spencer said. "It would also unify all the honors programs and tie them into the leadership of UMass Amherst. By and large, what we are proposing already exists. It just hasn't been legitimized and given a name."

Spencer argued that by "legitimizing" the Honors Program, more prestige would be brought to the entire UMass system, and all graduates of UMass would benefit from this increased perception.

"It will raise your salaries and the respect you get when you apply for a

Cellucci prepares to step in, 'get the job done' for Mass.

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press

BOSTON — After a political career that started as a Hudson selectman and moved steadily through the Legislature, Lt. Gov. Paul Cellucci is on the cusp of holding the state's top job now that Gov. William F. Weld is poised to become U.S. ambassador to Mexico. While the state may experience a drop-off in physical stature and humor with the tall, outgoing Weld being replaced by the more measured Cellucci, the lieutenant governor insists he is up to replacing Weld. He also wants to assure state residents that he is committed to the team's anti-tax, tough-on-crime program.

"One thing I want to be sure of is getting the job done for the people of Massachusetts," Cellucci said yesterday in a telephone interview from Los Angeles, where he is meeting with tourism and movie industry officials.

"I know there will be a lot of focus on the 1998 governor's race, but one thing I want to make sure of is I don't blow the opportunity to get a lot of the people's business accomplished," he said. "There'll be time for politicking next year."

Cellucci told reporters on Friday that one area he may devote more attention to is domestic violence. Weld has appointed Cellucci to head a state commission on that subject.

"I think it's a terrible situation when statistically the most dangerous place for a woman in this state is her own home," Cellucci said, voice rising. "I think that's terrible, and that's something that I will continue, as I have, to fight very hard to end domestic violence."

He added on Sunday that he also plans to focus on implementing teacher and curriculum standards to go along with the state's $1.3 billion Education Reform Act.

"Our greatest asset is a skilled and trained workforce," he said. "We've fallen behind in Massachusetts, and we're coming back. But now we're at a critical juncture to get things done." Cellucci, who found out about Weld's likely posting on Thursday, his 49th birthday, has been labeled Weld's "co-governor" throughout their seven years in office. In truth, however, they are vastly different people.

The 51-year-old Weld is a Yankee who comes from wealth. He breezed through law firms and appointed office before being elected governor in 1990.

Cellucci is an Italian-American, the son of a car dealer. He started his political career as a 23-year-old Hudson selectman and slowly worked his way up the ladder.

His first stop was the House, where he served from 1976 to 1984. Then he moved to the Senate, where he served for six years until he was elected lieutenant governor.

Weld and Cellucci also differ in personalities. Weld likes to parry with reporters and quote from the classics or great books. Cellucci is equally friendly, but he prefers to talk about movies and good restaurants.

In their six years in office, Weld has generally set broad policy directions and trusted Cellucci to give him advice about how to implement it legislatively.

While Cellucci insisted that elevating him to governor would not change the direction of state government, it should have an effect on the 1998 governor's race.

Cellucci has long been planning to run, although his plans have taken a back seat since Weld has talked recently about seeking a third term.

Allowing Cellucci to serve out the remainder of Weld's term should give him an advantage in the 1998 Republican gubernatorial primary over Treasurer Joe Malone, a Republican also planning to seek the nomination.

The status and fund-raising ability that go with being governor could also help him if he emerges from the primary and faces U.S. Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy II (D-Mass.) in the general election. Also planning a run for the Democratic nomination is Attorney General Scott Harshbarger.

Forum explores growing Massachusetts welfare crisis

By Julliette Doro
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts welfare reform is decreasing the slim access to education for the poor and single parents, according to a forum on welfare held Thursday in the Campus Center.

The forum was co-sponsored by Common Ground, the departments of social thought and political economy and women's studies, Graduate Employee Organization, the Everywoman's Center, Student Legal Services and Western Massachusetts Legal Services.

Rep. Ellen Story told the audience that two bills sponsored by welfare supporters had recently passed in the state Legislature. Currently, welfare recipients have to work 20 hours a week, in addition to any training or educational program in which they are involved. One of the bills passed will count training towards the work hours.

Story said that although this bill doesn't change welfare reform, "it is major for the people that it will affect." Because recipients often do not have time for both education and fulfilling the work hours, this bill would allow them a chance to stay in a training or educational program.

The other bill prohibits the Governor's administration from changing eligibility without approval from the legislature. By Thursday night's forum, Story was still unsure of the status of a bill dealing with welfare recipients who were victims of domestic abuse. The bill would waive some of the welfare requirements for battered women if their lives were threatened.

University of Massachusetts history professor Carl Nightingale gave a brief background of welfare. Nightingale said that the new reforms signify "hatred of poor people, of people of color, of women and children."

According to Nightingale, the federal law redirected welfare to the states, who could now do anything as long as they didn't give recipients too much money or keep them on too long.

"America has launched yet another attack in its long war against the poor," Nightingale said.

He said the government has redirected class conflict from the upper class onto the poor, people of color and the young.

Susan Kirby of the Human Rights Monitoring Project in Boston spoke on the group's findings from a study done state-wide. Kirby listed five areas where the group found welfare laws violated human rights, based on the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights.

Kirby said violations include unjust paternity identification, revictimization of battered women, severe impacts on teens because of contradictory implementation of laws, denial of educational opportunity and general lawlessness in welfare offices.

She said welfare offices make people feel like they have done something wrong. People were denied benefits outright because they were pregnant or immigrants. She said that recipients often aren't told of appeals or waivers.

"There is a general disrespect. It's a way to discourage people from coming back," Kirby said.

She asked the audience to look at reform through a lens of human rights. "This could be any one of us... any one of us could find ourselves at the welfare office. It's important that we look at recipients as our neighbors," Kirby said.

Jon Zibbell and Kelly Facto, University students and both single parents, spoke of their personal difficulties getting an education while receiving welfare benefits.

Zibbell said there are contradictions in welfare laws. His case worker told him that to receive child care for his daughter he would need to work 30 hours a week earning $5.35/hr. However, Zibbell said he would no longer be eligible for welfare if he could work those hours. He also found out that the law states that he only has to work 20 hours a week for child care.

Facto told the audience of how diffi-

Voting commences in post–war Yemeni elections

By Anthony Shadid
Associated Press

SAN'A, Yemen — Yemenis crowded into polling booths yesterday for parliamentary elections seen as a crucial test of the Arabian Peninsula's only full-fledged democracy. At least 11 people were killed in scattered violence, some of it reportedly linked to the vote.

International election monitors said, however, that voting went smoothly in much of the country. An independent committee set up to oversee the vote called the election "highly transparent." More than 2,300 candidates are competing for parliament's 301 seats. The election marks Yemen's first vote since a two-month civil war in 1994 almost tore apart the union four years earlier of the conservative, traditional North and socialist South.

Before the voting started, a guard at a polling station in southern Yemen opened fire on fellow guards and election workers, killing eight and wounding one, Interior Minister Mohammed Hussein Arab said.

The motive for the attack was not known, but it did not appear to be political, he said. The guard was arrested.

Three other deaths were reported, including two people killed in a fight between supporters of rival candidates, according to monitors. At least eight people were wounded, most of them in confrontations at polling stations, the interior minister said. The first results are expected today, after helicopters fly ballot boxes from remote locales to provincial capitals in this rugged country of highlands and desert.

Turnout was estimated at about 80 percent, Supreme Elections Committee spokesman Said al-Hakimi said.

In San'a, lines of voters stretched around school buildings and into the muddy streets yesterday morning, but the crush eased after midday.

Soldiers pushed back veiled women so eager to vote they crowded into polling stations. Men wearing traditional daggers and holding pink voter cards stood idly in lines that formed as early as 6 a.m., two hours before polls opened.

"If there weren't elections, there wouldn't be any progress in Yemen," said Bushra Siri, a 19-year-old university student wearing a black veil that revealed only her eyes.

Voters had to dip their thumbs in purple ink after marking the ballots to prevent double voting. Soldiers patted down men as they entered polling stations, but allowed them to keep their daggers. Women, who waited in separate lines, held cardboard over their heads to block the sun as their children sat nearby.

Most candidates — 1,557 — are independents, although many are believed to be backed by the country's two main parties, President Ali Abdullah Saleh's General People's Congress and its principal opponent, the Islamic Islah party.

Saleh's Congress has put forth 232 candidates, including the president's eldest son, and Islah 201. Ten other parties are taking part. About 4.6 million of Yemen's 16 million people are registered to vote.

Women have played a growing role in Yemeni politics. Nineteen women are candidates and the number of women registered to vote has more than doubled — to 1.3 million — since the last parliament election in 1993.

job," Spencer said. "We will give you a leg up when you go into the job world."

Junior sociology major Viraphanh Douangmany asked Spencer if he was familiar with the idea that Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores correlate with socio–economic class, and said she did not feel SAT scores would be a fair measure of who should be accepted into the Commonwealth College.

"We have been working on developing an alternative method of admittance," Spencer said. "We know that SAT's are not the sole determinant of a person's ability. We feel that an alternative method is necessary to create inclusion and diversity."

Douangmany then said that she felt the Commonwealth College would "create two separate sets of education."

"Why can not that concept be given to the entire student body?" Douangmany asked.

Spencer answered that the Commonwealth College could be a "laboratory" for development of better teaching techniques and that methods that work well there could be applied to the entire UMass system.

"There is no reason why anything that is initiated at Commonwealth College can not be implemented throughout the system," Spencer said. "It should be pulling everyone up."

Resia Singleton, a sophomore biochemistry major, said that she felt funding should go to the general student body at UMass, not to the Honors College.

"I do not see how being an advocate for students means selecting one group," Singleton said. "We need more funding for public education as a whole. I think it should go to the academic programs."

Spencer said the UMass system is unlikely to get more funding as a whole because the state legislature is used to UMass asking for budget increases, but that the Commonwealth College is "something tangible" that the legislature would be more likely to fund.

The confrontation escalates

The tension in the room began to increase as the students and Spencer continued to discuss the same issues without seeming to come to any agreement on them.

Douangmany and Spencer entered into a tense conversation which resulted in Douangmany denouncing Spencer and walking out of the meeting.

"This honors college is going to be racist and classist," Douangmany said. "I have a problem with business people coming in [to education] because you are not being socially responsible. You have done more to harm UMass and stigmatize my education. You are an embarrassment to the state."

"You're spouting off and you do not know what you are talking about," Spencer replied. "I give my time uncompensated with the intention of making a contribution. The fact that I do not agree with you does not mean that I am an embarrassment to the state. Your remarks are offensive."

"The Commonwealth College is one little microcosm and you are dealing with that as though it is everything we are doing," Spencer said. "You're doing nothing but knocking the program."

"We came here to let you know our views," Wong said. "This is our University and we have the right to complain."

"We were concerned that maybe the voices of opposition had not been heard," Singleton added. "If people are going to be excluded, we felt an obligation to make our voices heard."

"I see your problem. I have my method of solving it," Spencer said. "I happen to believe that the Commonwealth College will make a radical change in public higher education. I think every aspect of the system will be improved and I think it will get the attention of the legislature."

A proposal suggestion

At this point, Spencer said that although he did not agree with the viewpoints of the students, he respected their right to hold them. He then suggested that the students draft their own proposal and select the four "most articulate and open– minded" students from their group to speak in front of the whole Board, in a meeting which he would arrange for them.

"Just pick up the telephone and call me," Spencer said. "That's constructive."

Wong accepted this invitation on behalf of the students and thanked Spencer for his time.

After the meeting, Vecchio said it had been a worthwhile discussion.

"There is something that we have gotten out of this," Vecchio said. "We went in there with information. We were being as objective as possible."

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Craft Center, in conjunction with the Arts Council and the UMass Outing Club, will be hosting a weekend photography workshop in the White Mountains scheduled for this weekend.

"Basically, we're running this workshop so we can take 12 students up to the Outing Club's cabin in Bethlehem, New Hampshire in the White Mountains," said Bill Porter, an employee of the Craft Center and one of three photography instructors for the trip.

For only $55, 12 students will have the opportunity to experience the natural grandeur of the White Mountains while capturing it all on photograph.

Included in the cost of the trip is lodging at the Outing Club's cabin, meals for the weekend and full instruction in taking photographs and camera use from experienced photographers.

Additionally, participants will receive a photography workshop T-shirt and four free hours in the Craft Center darkroom. Discounts will also be given on Outing Club equipment rentals.

According to the Craft Center, the group will leave UMass on Friday at 2 p.m. and spend all day Saturday hiking. A half–day hike is scheduled for Sunday, and all participants will arrive back at UMass on Sunday evening.

"You'll want to bring essential hiking gear. All you'll really need is a camera and a sleeping bag," Porter said.

A mandatory pre–trip meeting is scheduled tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the Craft Center. If interested parties cannot make it, they are encouraged to call the Craft Center at 545–2096 to retrieve information or to stop by the center to sign up.

A pre–trip lecture is also scheduled for this Thursday at 7 p.m. in room 165 of the Campus Center. This is an optional lesson on how to use a 35 mm camera.

"This is geared for those who have little knowledge in photo. This will not be the only camera instruction we will have, it's just the formal lecture part of it," the Craft Center photo technicians said.

Also in the making is a post–trip slideshow that the Craft Center is planning on presenting to the Outing Club at their weekly meeting.

Porter, who has spearheaded the trip from its beginning stages, said he is satisfied with the turnout so far.

"We're working to expand on the Craft Center's programs," he said. "The photo area is relatively limited on space. Last year this outing was very successful. We're going to try and make it a once a semester trip."

"There are all these little problems that you have to deal with everyday because they don't want you here," Facto said. She encouraged the audience to be supportive of the needs of recipients.

Mary Sutherland, a member of Common Ground and Arise for Social Justice in Springfield, spoke to the audience about the future of welfare reform. She said the state needs to repeal the "one course of study" rule, which keeps recipients from receiving training in more than one area. Sutherland, a former battered woman, said that the state should waive the regulations for victims whose lives are often in danger because the state makes it easy for batterers to find the women.

UMass '90 alums snare $6.5 million

By Laura Forster
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts alumni, Adam Lavine and Dennis Chen, recently sold their computer company, Specular International, for $6.5 million dollars to merge with MetaTools. They now plan to help design professional 3–D images and animations.

Lavine and Chen, members of the class of 1990, used their computer experience at UMass to design their world–class 3D animations and graphic design tools for the Macintosh and Windows environments.

Lavine, who was a BDIC and English major, said that designing his own major had a big impact on his ability to pursue computer analysis, which he would not have been able to do otherwise.

Chen, a computer science graduate from UMass, worked with Lavine designing computer programs while at the University.

Another resource for the men was Beverly Woolf, a research assistant professor at UMass who sponsored the two men's studies in computers. Lavine said Woolf was helpful because she let them work on their own, but was there when they needed her.

Specular International, located in South Amherst, was started in 1991 by Lavine. Lavine, also the former president of Specular International, worked with Chen, then a company engineer. After designing their 3–D product, Infini– D, the company grew until it was sold early this month.

Lavine and Chen will be moving to MetaTools' advanced 3D research lab, based in Princeton, N.J., to continue their work with 3–D modeling. Both men are excited about their recent sell since Lavine said that at the present time, competition is harsh in the industry.

"It is difficult for small markets to compete... you either grow or sell," Lavine said.

Lavine credited Specular's success to his partnership with Chen.

"Success depends on partnership with employees," Lavine said. "You need to be true to yourself and true to the commitments you make with others because very few succeed alone."

Offering advice on the "college experience," Lavine encouraged students to take advantage of other courses offered within the Five College community, and to keep showing up for the classes in which they want to enroll.

"For many people college is the first time when how they spend their time is entirely up to them. You can tell pretty quick whether someone's spent four years partying or four years studying," Lavine said.

Pope closes second of four trips, speaks at Prague prayer service

By Daniel J. Wakin
Associated Press

PRAGUE, Czech Republic — Pope John Paul II evoked the bitterness of centuries of religious rivalry yesterday, urging Christians to forgive past wrongs, "no matter how great and terrible."

The pope — speaking at a prayer service in the closing hours of a 48–hour visit — repeated the apology he made on his last trip to the Czech Republic for "the wrongs inflicted on non–Catholics." At the same time, "I wished to assure the Catholic Church's forgiveness of the sufferings which her children have undergone," John Paul said.

The Czech visit, John Paul's 76th foreign tour, is the second of four trips during a grueling seven–week stint that next takes him to Beirut in mid–May.

Although age and ailments have slowed the 76–year–old pontiff in recent years, yesterday his voice was strong and his step was sure. He left Prague in the early evening and reached Rome later Sunday. His message was a particularly strong statement of his belief that the church should acknowledge the sins committed by Roman Catholics over the centuries as the third Christian millennium approaches.

Czech lands, particularly Moravia, long were the scene of bitter and often bloody rivalry between Catholics and Protestants. Christians should "find the courage to forgive one another for the injustices and wrongs of the past, no matter how great and terrible they have been. The barriers of mutual suspicion and mistrust must be broken down," John Paul said.

What so proudly we hailed...

The controversy surrounding placing an American flag in each of the residential areas on campus obviously symbolizes the rather profound political differences among students at the University of Massachusetts. Those students who favor this move say they believe the American flag is symbolic of diversity, hope and freedom. They find reprehensible and incomprehensible the views of other students who question the implications of flag–placement, because they say the flag is also symbolic of oppression and racism.

Based on their published views, those students who welcome flag–placement apparently want to invest in the symbolism of the act, all the qualities they laud about the United States, including the strongest possible military. If this is the case, their patriotism and attendant concern about honoring the flag, though possibly understandable, are based on terribly faulty reasoning and shall be the source of bitter disillusionment when they realize that as history creates the present and the present creates the future, the U.S. flag is a symbol which quite logically evokes in people, both domestically and internationally, dramatically different reactions.

"That the United States plays such a powerful role across the globe, and is generally unaccountable for its mistakes, means that the flag is a symbol which means different things to different people."

Anna Shepp-Cardoze

When patriots of this ilk assert that the U.S. flag is not a symbol of racism or oppression, it is the very fact that so many people feel just the opposite (because of historical and current patterns of covert and overt U.S. action) that marks such denial as powerful — because it is reflective of the more serious underlying issues that are thus left to fester. Interestingly, such "patriots" openly contradict themselves when they initially claim that they see the U.S. flag as a symbol of "diversity, freedom [and] hope ..." and that members of the armed forces are even willing to die for Americans with ideals different from their own: The irony is that many of these same individuals order those who do not "love America" as they do to "get the hell out."

If these same patriots were to read some history books and learn about the Monroe Doctrine, the Platt Amendment, the pillaging of the continents, imperialist colonization across the globe — which continues to this day — and the prison privatization movement, they might better understand how in using the name of God, flag, democracy and human rights, the U.S. government (through bureaucracies taken over by transnational conglomerates) has oppressed many of its own citizens and enslaved the peoples of the third world — both physically and economically — while claiming to help free them.

Although many students who favor flag–placement concede that there are "problems with the system" they often immediately proceed to point out that the same or similar problems exist everywhere. And that is precisely the issue at hand: that these problems exist everywhere does not mean they do not deserve to be addressed. In fact, because they exist everywhere, they must be addressed, and thus shall inevitably be addressed — and hopefully in ways considered to be positive from the perspective of everyone involved. Further, that the United States plays such a powerful covert and overt role across the globe, and is generally unaccountable for its treachery and mistakes, means that the flag understandably is a symbol which means different things to different people.

The issues underlying this discussion of the flag are also powerful enough to mobilize millions of Americans who find, for example, that without any sort of legislative leverage they might not have the opportunities to "rise to the top" of society. As they recognize that there are those in American society who do "rise to the top" and those who do not, they would do well to remember that "the top" of any given society is preserved by and for those who economically and politically control that society. That is the way societies work. Those who do not have this sort of control do not "rise to the top" as a group. And those at "the top" create various policies, rhetoric and myths to both maintain and sanction their own group position, and simultaneously ensure an ongoing power imbalance between themselves and these other groups, who, because of historical and contemporary politics, are viewed as rivals or potential threats. One aspect of oppression, which is generally of a racial or ethnic motivation, includes the effective actions of one group designed to maintain a power imbalance with others. The U.S. government, symbolized by the flag, engages in this sort of activity around the world, and is thus quite reasonably associated by many with oppression and racism.

Most people who are oppressed in any given society will quite naturally work against this oppression. Yet when oppression and its symbols are challenged, the result is social friction, as to some extent expressed by those students who favor flag–placement on the UMass campus. Social friction results from challenging oppression because those societies which have built their political, cultural and financial institutions, their wealth, and their false group self– esteem upon oppression of given groups will inevitably crumble and be transformed once the systemic oppression is publicly acknowledged. Thus in order to try to hold on to their slowly disintegrating power, built on an oppressive socio–economic system, those at the "top" of this oppressive society and their followers, will, like those students who favor flag–placement, often find great solace in denying the existence of any meaningful problems, and trying to silence those who give voice to the concerns of millions.

Even so, social friction born of challenging oppression can either be resolved or it can escalate. A society chooses whether it will resolve its issues, or like many of the pro–flag–placement students at UMass, deny or excuse them, thereby making them worse and leading to social problems whose logical conclusions we would like to avoid, both domestically and internationally.
